ACCIDENT OF FOURTH.

Both Eyes Nearly Blown Out By Bomb Explosion.

WALTER S. ALGER'S NARROW ESCAPE.

Leaning Over Fireworks Piece When It Exploded. Badly Burned But Will Save Eyes.

Walter S. Alger, living on Park street opposite the Boston and Albany freight house, had a narrow escape from losing the sight of both eyes—and possibly his life—as a result of carelessness with explosives last evening. He was engaged in setting off fireworks in front of his home about 9 o'clock at night, and a bomb which he had set in place and lighted had apparently gone out. He went to investigate and had just stooped over to see the condition of affairs wh n the explosion came. He was directly over the piece and the fire shot up directly into his face. The upper part of his face was blown full of powder and badly burned. Some of the stuff got into his eyes and it was thought at first that he would lose the sight of one if not both, but their condition this morning was more favorable and if no unexpected developments arise he will recover his sight after a time. He will be laid up for a number of days however, and at present is wearing heavy bandages over his eyes. He was attended by Dr. S. R. Carsley.

Knocked From Electric Car.

Auto Brushes Conductor Grady Off On Ware Line Monday.

William Grady, a conductor on the Ware line of the electric road, was knocked from a car between Thorndike and Forest Lake by an automobile Monday afternoon, receiving severe but not serious injuries.

The car was about half way from Thorndike to the lake when it met an auto. The driver did not turn out sufficiently and some part of the machine caught Grady's coat as he stood on the running board collecting fares. The back of the coat was torn out and Grady was dragged from the car, falling to the ground, receiving some bruises and a bad shaking up.

The auto proceeded in a cloud of dust which was too thick to enable anyone to see the number, the driver making no attempt to stop. A clever bit of detective work on the part of Officer Crimmins however disclosed a trail, and after a little work a Ware man admitted on Wednesday that it was his car which had been the cause of the accident, and that he had been driving. In explanation of his failure to stop he said that he supposed it was the running board of the car which he hit—he did not know he had struck a person. The matter was reported to Maj. Foote of Holyoke, investigator for the State highway commission, and he was out to-day making inquiries.

Circus Coming to Palmer.

Sparks' Big Shows Will be Here a Week From Next Tuesday.

The Sparks big shows and circus is booked for Palmer on Tuesday, the 16th, and will exhibit on the Lawrence lot on Thorndike street. The promises held forth are simply wonderful, and are made by an institution which claims that for a quarter of a century it has never broken faith with the public or advertised things which it did not have. The feats and acts which it presents are said to be wonderful in the extreme, and to come from all parts of this country and Europe, comprising a variety difficult to imagine. Every regard will be taken for the comfort of visitors to the grounds. The tents are new and waterproof, and all the equipment of the finest. A mammoth street parade will be given at noon. There will be two performances, at two in the afternoon and 8 in the evening.

Locomotives in Highway.

Railroad Contractor Has Strenuous Time Tuesday Afternoon.

Two locomotives off the rails and completely blocking the highway at Blanchardville for some time Tuesday afternoon caused no little trouble to automobilists, provoked profanity from the men in charge and considerably "het up" the whole section for a time. The contractor for a section of the Grand Trunk extension was attempting to take two locomotives weighing about 19 tons each, to be used in construction work, across the wooden bridge to the Monson side of the river. In attempting to make the turn they were derailed and completely blocked the Warren road for a time, compelling automobilists to go over the hill between that point and the Cooley crossing.

Union Patriotic Service.

Opera House Filled Sunday Evening. Interesting Addresses.

The body of the opera house was practically filled at the union patriotic service held Sunday evening, attendants being present from every village of the town.

The back of the stage was completely covered with a large American flag, and on the stage, besides a chorus of 30 voices, were seated the presiding officer, the speakers of the evening and the other participants in the service. Ernest E. Hobson presided. After the invocation by Rev. Otto S. Raspe of the Universalist church of Palmer, closing with the Lord's prayer in concert, and the singing of a hymn, Rev. G. H. Sutherland of the Bondsville Methodist church read the Scriptures. Another hymn followed and Rev. Frank S. Brewer of the Palmer Congregational church offered prayer. After the singing of another hymn Mr. Hobson, in rising to introduce the first speaker on the program, said that patriotism is not a quality to be manifested on the battlefield alone, but in every department of everyday life. The man who lives for his country is as much a patriot as one who fights for it. On this account it was eminently fitting for the people to gather for the discussion of four great departments of the subject, "Patriotism and civic duty," "Patriotism and education," "Patriotism and business," and "Patriotism and religion."

D. L. Bodfish, who spoke on "Patriotism and civic duty," suggested that a person who had the full measure of patriotism in his makeup would be a sure attendant at the caucuses of his party, doing all in his power to aid in the right government of town, state and nation, and questioned whether those who are not doing all possible along these lines were the highest type of patriot. Principal Lee T. Gray of the Palmer high school spoke on "Patriotism and education." Patriotism includes three features—the moral, intellectual and energetic. No man can be a patriot who does not possess all of these qualities. He cited Napoleon and Cromwell as lacking some, and Washington and Lincoln as possessing all of them. The purpose of education is to train boys and girls to assume the duties of citizenship, so the schools and patriotism go hand in hand, the schools trying to train the pupils to respect their country and recognize its authority. "Patriotism and business" was touched on by Charles L. Waid, treasurer of the Palmer Savings Bank. Every citizen of this or any other community who does the simple every-day duties of life and does them well, is a patriot. The more highly civilized we become the more dependent we become on each other. Any person engaged in labor of any kind is engaged in business, and if he delivers the goods to his employer should be classed as a patriot. Not the least among those classed as patriots are the poor people of Massachusetts, who have accumulated over $802,000,000 in the savings banks of the state, which is loaned out to those needing it, enabling them to make a start in life which they would not otherwise be able to accomplish. Rev. J. H. Palmer of the Baptist church spoke on "Patriotism and religion." The one thing needful to make life all that it should be is motive, and it is religion which comes in to supply the motive. A curving of life is what is needed, not a curbing, and Christianity supplies the motive. It has not always done this, but through no fault of its own. It is the church which comes into the life of the individual and supplies the motive which works for the uplift of the community.

After a few appropriate closing remarks by the chairman two verses of "America" were sung and Rev. Mr. Tupper of the Three Rivers Baptist church pronounced the benediction.

Ware Man Killed By Freight.

Dennis McIntyre of Ware, 24, fell from the caboose of a freight train in the Boston and Maine yard at Northampton Monday evening at 7.45 and received injuries from which he died at 10.30 after being removed to the Dickinson hospital. Both legs were nearly severed close to the body and there was no chance for his recovery. It was said that he was run over by an engine and three cars after his fall, the cause of which is not known. Mr. McIntyre was a brakeman on the Massachusetts Central division and lived with his parents in Ware.

Ludlow Man Loses Arm.

Edward Fountain, 16, had his arm so badly mutilated Saturday morning while at work in the mills of the Ludlow manufacturing associates at Ludlow that it was necessary to take him to the Ludlow hospital and amputate the arm three inches below the shoulder. Fountain was working near a card, when in some manner the arm was drawn in.

School Attendance Record For Year.

Also For Last Month. Bondsville Leads For Month And Year. List of Pupils Perfect in Attendance Throughout the Year.

During the tenth and last month of the school year, 1911-12, the room of grades 6 and 7, Bondsville, has the distinction of attaining the most perfect attendance, 98.62 per cent.

The enrollment of this room was 29, and of those 29 pupils 28 were perfect in attendance for the nine days that the school kept. The number of pupils perfect in attendance in the entire Bondsville building, 206, is to be remarked, as 230 is the total enrollment of this school.

Next to room of grades 6 and 7 of Bondsville is the district school at Palmer Center with a per cent of 99.6, which is very good. Room of grades 8 and 9, Three Rivers, is the third in this respect, having 99.42 per cent.

The buildings having the best attendance were: Bondsville, 98.5 per cent, 1 tardy case; Palmer, 95.98 per cent, 3 tardy cases; Three Rivers, 94.85 per cent, no tardy cases.

The total number of tardy cases for this month was 16, and over one-fourth of them occurred in the districts.

With the continued co-operation of the teachers and parents, next year it is to be hoped that every school in the town may have as equally good a record as Three Rivers had for this month, in regard to tardinesses, it being the only building in town without a tardy case.

The Term Record.

For the summer term of the school year, 1911-12, which ended on June 13th for the grammar schools and June 24th for the high school, the little district school at Palmer Center, with an enrollment of 25, led for the best attendance by room. Its per cent was 99.72.

The rooms of grades 6 and 7, Bondsville, was second with 99.52 per cent. During the year this room has made quite a record for good attendance, and the fact that the Bondsville Grammar school attained the honor of having the best attendance for the year is due in no small measure to the earnest efforts of the pupils of this room.

The highest attendance by building was 98.41 per cent, and this was won by the Bondsville grammar school. The Palmer grammar school was second in this respect with 96 per cent, and 9 tardy marks. The high standing of the Bondsville grammar school this term was blurred by one case of tardiness.

The Year Record.

During eight of the ten months that school was in session the Bondsville grammar school had the highest per cent of attendance. For the entire school year it has maintained an attendance of 97.36 per cent, with the least number of tardy cases, 13.

The next best in attendance is the Palmer high school with 96.11 per cent, which is .03 less than last year, but with an added enrollment of 20. While the greatest number of tardy cases occur in the high school, it is very encouraging to note that just about 25 per cent of the number that were recorded against the school during the year 1910-11 occurred this year.

The Three Rivers grammar school for the past two months has had a perfect record in regard to tardiness. For the past school year it is third on the list of best attendance, having 95.29 per cent with 55 cases of tardiness, which is just one-third of the number charged against the building last year.

Room of grades 6 and 7, Bondsville, had the highest per cent of attendance, 98.8 per cent for the year. Grades 8 and 9 in the same building were second with 98.74 per cent. For half of the school year, either room of grades 6 and 7, or that of grades 8 and 9, occupied first place on the list of best attendance, and for the entire year neither of these rooms had a case of tardiness.

Grade 9, Palmer, is to be credited with the third best attendance for the year, 98.2 per cent.

It is to be hoped that the other three district schools will follow the example set by Palmer Center in regularity and punctuality of attendance. This district school twice during the past year had the honor of leading the other thirty-five schoolrooms in town in attendance.

The teachers may feel well repaid for the time and energy they have expended on the pupils in helping them cultivate the habit of punctuality, for in the whole town, with 206 more pupils there were 579 less tardy cases than last year.

This is a remarkably good record, and with the continued co-operation of teachers and parents, next year's summary might indicate 328 cases less than this year, or none at all.

WILBRAHAM.

Mrs. H. H. Burbank is spending a part of the week at her home on Maple street.

The laying of the corner-stone of the new Congregational church will take place Sunday afternoon at 3, with appropriate services.

Mrs. Lucia Foskit celebrated her 87th birthday last Friday evening and a large party of friends gathered at her home in honor of the event. It was also the fifth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Blodgett and they were invited to be present and celebrate their anniversary. The evening was spent in a pleasant social manner. Rev. M. S. Howard made appropriate remarks and in behalf of those present presented Mr. and Mrs. Blodgett a hall rack and book-case. Refreshments were served.

Three Rivers Boy In China.

Letter From One of Uncle Sam's Soldiers In Karping.

Friends of George Moore Jr., formerly of Three Rivers, will be surprised to hear that he is with the United States troops in China. The following interesting letter, recently received from him by his father, gives something of the conditions and situation in that far-off corner of the globe, and will be found interesting reading.

KARPING, CHINA, May 21, 1912.

DEAR FATHER:—

I suppose you would like to get some information concerning this country in which I am. Well, a Chinaman is a funny person and no mistake. He does everything different from the way a white man would, and you can never tell what he is going to do next.

I told you something about the labor question in my last letter, so I won't waste any space on it here, but will try to give you a little information about the political situation in this moth-eaten, God-forsaken land of filth and diseases.

To begin with, I will have to go back about 400 years. About that time China was conquered by a northern tribe known as the Manchees. They introduced the custom of wearing the pigtail, and unless I am misinformed, they caused the Great Wall to be built to keep out the Tartars and the Mongols. This wall I cannot describe as I have not seen it, and accounts differ. One account says it is 600 miles long, another says it is much longer. Maybe the girls could tell you from their studies at school, as it is one of the seven wonders of the world. Well, the Manchi ruled the land up to last Fall, when they were unable to pay their soldiers and were "kicked out" as a result. All this you have read about in the papers. What you did not read was that there only about 100,000,000 *Manchi in China while there are 400,-*000,000 Chinese. The Manchi held all the "soft" jobs and the Chinese did all the work and got but little in return.

When the Manchi dynasty left the throne a republic was declared, under a provisional president, and they have not yet formed a permanent government of any kind. To get friends to help them out they agreed to pay all debts of the old government, and are now having one awful time to raise the money. A bond issue is, and has been under consideration for several months, but there is a serious hitch. The civilized nations of the world want to supervise the finance of the new government, in order to guarantee the redemption of the bonds when they fall due; nor can you blame them, as it is their citizens who will advance the money on them; but the Chinese want to run their own business, for which they cannot be greatly blamed. In the meantime the Chinese soldiers have not been paid, and what plots the Manchi are hatching up to get back to power, God only knows.

I suppose you'd like to know what this has to do with my being here. I will try to explain. The Chinese, as a nation, never did have any use for foreigners in China, and if a good "shindy" was to get started between themselves it wouldn't take long for one side or the other to go to looting property belonging to missionaries and trading companies, who expect to be protected—and rightly—by their own government. Now a hundred regiments would not bring one person back to life after his head was chopped off, but one regiment can stop any of that sort of business being done, so the old Fifteenth was "chased out" here.

There was quite a row early in March. Tientsin was looted and our troops had to "hot foot" it for Pekin to prevent something unpleasant coming off there. There were only 400 Americans here then, but after that they sent four more companies, including the one to which I belong, and increased the strength to 150 men to the company, so now we have about 1200 troops here.

Japan has 5000, but they are trying to grab a piece of China and have to be watched. England, Germany and France all have troops that can be depended on in a row, but the Russians are not of much use. The Japs have the "swelled-head" over the Russia-Jap war, but some real soldiers will get after them some day if they don't look out and they won't feel quite so conceited.

I am on duty with a detachment of 30 men stationed on the railroad to see that it is kept open. In case of a big revolt the railroad would be very valuable to us to move troops on from point to point as they were needed.

There is a Chinese general who has his headquarters near here. It is funny to see him carried about on men's soldiers in a sedan chair, surrounded by guards and his staff officers. We have to salute him whenever we meet him, as we are supposed to salute officers of all nations when recognized as such.

Do you think you know what a storm is? We had one here that lasted over 18 hours. The wind blew strongly and most of the time it rained. Luckily the rainfall was light, but as it was it covered the rails and interfered with the train service for about two days. Some of the detachment were in tents and the wind drove the water through the canvas and made them pretty miserable. I and a dozen others have quarters in the depot, made of brick, and you bet we stayed under cover. No great amount of damage was done, as the Chinese live in houses made of a combination of stone, brick made of mud mixed with straw, and the whole they protect on the outside by a kind of waterproof plaster. The rain did the crops a lot of good, but the wind did some slight damage.

The country here is as flat as a floor but there are hills to be seen to the north and northeast of us.

Your loving son,

GEORGE A. MOORE,

Co. I 15th Infantry,

American Troops,

Tientsin, China.

AUTOMOBILE FATALITY.

Man Instantly Killed in Warren Yesterday Morning.

TROLLEY CAR NOISE DROWNED HORN

Francis W. Whitaker Steps Down From His Ice Wagon Directly in Front of Car.

Francis Whitaker of Warren was almost instantly killed about 7.45 yesterday morning by an automobile which struck him as he stepped from his ice wagon. Death was instantaneous from a fracture of the left side of the skull and internal hemorrhage; the right shoulder blade was broken and there were several bruises on the body.

Mr. Whitaker is employed by the Perkins Machine company, but yesterday was substituting for Elmer Agard on the ice wagon of Charles Rice. He had stopped opposite the house of John King on West Main street, and was on the extreme right side of the road. A trolley car on the Warren, Brookfield and Spencer road approached from the west, and as the car passed the wagon Mr. Whitaker stepped down from the wagon directly in front of an automobile driven by Julius E. Warren of Worcester, which had come up from behind. He was struck by the fender and his head thrown against the radiator. The body was carried a short distance and the wheels passed over it just as the car stopped, about 50 feet from the place of the accident. Mr. Warren rushed for a physician, and Dr. Charles A. DeLand arrived just as Mr. Whitaker expired. The body was taken to Mr. King's barn and was later viewed by Medical Examiner Dr. E. W. Norwood.

Mr. Whitaker was born in Warren August 9, 1882, and had always lived there. He was married four years ago to Miss Blanche Marengo, who, with two children, Gladys Emily and Bernice, survives him. He leaves also a father, Freeman Whitaker, two sisters, Mrs. Mabel Lowrey and Miss Mary Whitaker, and a brother, Fred, of Fitchburg.

With Mr. Warren was his wife, daughter Olive and two sons, Julius E. Jr. and Wesley R., the latter driving the car. As they approached the wagon the horn was sounded, but the noise of the trolley car probably prevented Mr. Whitaker from hearing it. Mr. Warren and family remained at the home of Joseph St. George near by for several hours, but finally returned to their home. They had started early in the morning for Huntington, intending to stay two weeks, but gave up the trip. Mr. Warren was formerly superintendent of schools in Spencer, and has for some time been an agent of the state board of education. The crew of the electric car agree that the auto was not running fast.

Two Brush Fires—Little Damage.

The auto truck took a gang of men Sunday afternoon about 1 o'clock to the Gold farm in the Mason district to fight a forest fire which was threatening to assume sizable proportions. It was under control in a short time however.

Tuesday forenoon they were called out to a brush fire on land of Dr. G. A. Moore on Thorndike street, the blaze starting under a tree, probably from a carelessly-dropped match. It was put out with the contents of a few extinguishers.

Other Things

By Harmony Weller

(Copyright, 1913, by Associated Literary Press.)

A gloomy silence had fallen between them.

The girl's head, tilted at an angle of defiance, added fuel to the flame. He dashed the head from a tiny violet that had peeped over the threshold of the summer house.

"There is no reason why you should destroy my violet bed," said the girl, "simply because I have chosen to take a course in dramatic art in New York." She made a movement as if to rise and leave him to his stony silence, but he jerked her back.

"Iris," he pleaded impetuously, "give up this crazy notion."

"It is not a crazy notion! If I am to marry and live in a half-asleep village all my life, I certainly want something to break the monotony!"

"Oh—it is monotony—to think of marrying me, is it?" It was the man's head which now tilted angrily.

"It certainly would be—to both of us," Iris continued, defiantly. "I merely want to take a course in dramatic art, so that I will be more capable of entertaining our friends with recitations and give amateur theatricals. It isn't for professional—"

"It all leads to the same thing!" put in Blair; "you will probably come back from New York and parade the streets with powder on your nose an inch thick and look for all the world like a blooming actress." Blair was not looking at the rising anger in the girl's face, and continued, unconscious of the storm: "My mother never had to sing, or play or recite to keep her household going. We seemed to get along all right without any crazy self-improvement notions!"

"My dear Mr. Blair," Iris put in sweetly. "If your mother found her happiness, her contentment and the great big things in life among pots and pans, brooms and dust pans and the tending of a stray vegetable or two she is to be commended. If that were to be my life I could probably stand it until you sent me to what we call in slang a 'dippy house.' I notice," she continued, and with rising anger, "that you are always delighted to go over with me to the Lanes and listen to their records of voices and operas. It is true it is only a suggestion of the things that are going on in the world, but you apparently are not loath to enjoy them."

"That is entirely different to having your own wife making a spectacle of herself and drawing the entire village after her in trailing admiration!"

"That's the whole thing in a nutshell," cried Iris, with two red spots in her cheeks; "you are jealous! You want me all to yourself. You want me to stay in a house and keep it clean and comfortable and pleasant for your own special enjoyment. I had in mind only your own happiness and a desire to make things more entertaining for you and your friends when I thought of studying, but now you can look for some one else to make you happy!" Iris pulled off her half hoop of diamonds with trembling fingers. "Give this to some girl who loves to wash dishes and oil up the hardwood floors!" She went swiftly out of the summer house and Blair was alone.

He stared for a long moment at the ring that had rolled into a crack in the rustic table, then his head went forward onto his arms.

"Infernal jealous idiot that I am," he frankly informed himself.

His face was white and set when he again raised it. After all, there were other things in life save the keeping in order of a house, even if that house were already built and rambled among a grove of fir trees.

Blair arose. His shoulders were drooping, and he made his way from the summer house and over toward the house among the trees.

Once within the old gardens his anger against Iris returned. Why should any girl want more than this beautiful home that he had bought for her? They had gone over every stick and stone of it in fond anticipation of it. Blair kicked an unoffending stone and turned away from the house; he could not go in now that Iris had thrown it and him over for a course in dramatic art.

A sense of outraged love kept him from doing the thing he knew to be right, and Iris departed for New York

In an attempt to forget his shattered romance Blair went about with all of the girls in the village. And most of all he found his way into the cozy home of the Lanes, where he and Iris had spent many happy evenings.

"I'm sorry, old man," Lane had said to him when he learned of the broken engagement. "Iris is a mighty fine little girl," and Blair turned away unaccountably irritated.

"You should have humored her," Mrs. Lane put in. "Iris, being above the average type, needs delicate handling. I hope she will not marry some New Yorker and leave us," she had added by way of helping the cause of Iris. The little matron knew that Iris would never marry any one save Evan Blair, but that he should be taught to appreciate the girl was also a part of Mrs. Lane's scheme.

So it was, from time to time, Blair heard of the splendid times Iris was having in the city. Knowing it to have been the cause of the trouble, Mrs. Lane wisely refrained from speaking of the progress Iris was making in her dramatic work.

After six months of study Iris had been given an afternoon at one of the larger hotels and the newspapers had given her great praise

Blair would have given much for a glimpse of those letters which his hostess read excerpts from, but he only sat back with gloomy eyes.

"I got a peach of a record today, Blair," Lane suggested in an effort to lift the shadows from his friend's eyes.

"Let's have it," said Blair, and they repaired to the room where the talking machine gave forth its fund of entertainment. Blair sank into the chair that had become his.

Mrs Lane ensconced herself and turned to Blair. "You are to listen to both of these records before you judge them. They are both by the same person and Harry and I think them splendid."

The machine burst forth into a monologue. The voice was the high falsetto of a Broadway dandy whose experiences along the great White Way were told in an inimitable, drawling manner that brought the first hearty laugh to Blair that he had had in months.

"That fellow's all right," he laughed, "let's have the other!"

"Remember," reminded Mrs. Lane, "this is the same 'fellow.'"

Blair sat back and prepared himself for another funny record When Lane drew away from the machine Blair leaned forward in his chair, gripping the arms. The voice that came from the cabinet was that of Iris

"Dear," it said, "I have found that there are other things in life besides the study of dramatic art. I have taken all the prizes here and have received offers for stage work, but—" there was an effective pause—"you are not here and nothing else counts. When I said that life with you would be monotonous—I had not tried to live without you—so if you still care," the voice from the cabinet trembled, "I will be in the summer house tonight, and—"

Blair jumped up to adjust the record, thinking something had happened, but that was all of it. He looked about and realized that his host and hostess had left him to hear the message from Iris. He took off the precious record and went into the hall for his hat and walking stick in a daze of happiness.

When he left the house, still in that semi-conscious state of mind, Mrs. Lane ran to the telephone.

"He has left the house, dear," she called out to the person at the other end of the line, "and I think perhaps you had better fly or he will be in the summer house first. Run in tomorrow and tell me all about it, dear. Good-by."

Lane turned to his wife, a puzzled look on his face. "Everything worked beautifully, but has Blair lost his mind? He was talking away about some platform in a drawing room, or—"

A merry laugh tinkled from Mrs. Lane's lips. "It only means that he is planning a stage in the house he has bought for Iris so that she can have all the amateur theatricals she wants."

"Happy Iris!" said Lane.

Admitted.

Of John Masefield, the novelist, poet and playwright, of London, a journalist said at the Franklin Inn, in Philadelphia:

"I was criticising Masefield in New York the other day. I pointed out that his work, like that of Barker and Galsworthy, was in many respects amateurish. But a New York critic shouted at me angrily:

"'You don't know what you're talking about; John Masefield will one day be ranked above Emerson, above Whistler, above Henry James.'

"'Well,' said I, with a grin, 'it must undoubtedly be admitted that Masefield is a better playwright than Emerson, a better novelist than Whistler and a better poet than James.'"

Every Woman Named "Maria."

Socotra, whose sultan is to receive a visit from a cruiser as the result of the plundering of a British wreck, was for many centuries a place dreaded by the mariner. In the Tenth Century it was notorious as a pirate haunt, and one devout authority described its inhabitants as "Nestorian Christians and pirates."

In addition to its native ruffians it was also a regular station for the Indian corsairs who preyed on the trade with the far east. At an earlier date Socotra had been noted as the chief incense producing land, and as such was known to the ancient Egyptians. Among the curious customs of the Socotrans of the seventeenth century was that of naming all their women Maria.

Waterbury's Water War

By Plimmer Erskine

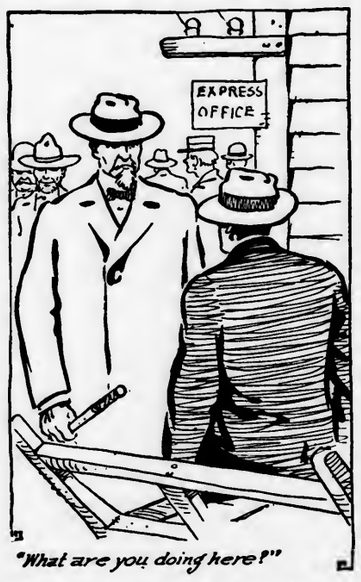
(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

Carrsville set him down for a drummer the very first evening. He was not the advance agent of some theater company or he would have hung a show bill in the bar room of the Eagle hotel the first thing. Since there were no show bills in evidence, he must be a salesman even though he carried no sample trunks. Outside of Col. Carr and his guests at the old Carr homestead, the only well dressed men to drop off at Carrsville were drummers and advance agents.



But though Frederick Waterbury (they got the name from the register) arrived on the noon train, he made no effort to see his customers, a proceeding which surprised the hotel habitues greatly.

He smiled tolerantly at the very obvious efforts made to pump him, and seemed to delight in returning answers concealing in their very frankness. In the end, even Jed Hawkins, the lawyer, abandoned his cross questioning.

For two or three days Waterbury idled about the town, driving occasionally, but for the most part hanging about the hotel, the center of the town's gossip. Then he furnished a real sensation. He had taken title to the west side of Bailey's pond.

"He got it, sure enough," declared Hawkins. I saw the papers. He's got the old Balley place and a strip off the Mehan farm and ten acres from the old Coon farm. That gives him about two-thirds of the pond. Won't the old colonel be mad, though, when he finds out? I know he wanted to get the Bailey place for himself."

Carrsville had been the home of the Carr family for a century and a quarter, but Col. Cephas Carr was the only one who had fared well in worldly goods. The whole township had belonged to the Carrs once but now the entire estate consisted of some hundred and forty acres. Carr had sought to repurchase the land about the little lake that had been sold to pay the debts of his ancestors, but his domineering ways had not gained friends for him.

Carrsville, fully appreciative of the situation, chuckled to itself and prayed that it might be there to see when the colonel heard the news. As most of them were in daily attendance on the arrival of trains, the wish was gratified some three weks later, for the Carr carriage drew up at the station shortly before the arrival of the noon train.

Waterbury, whose frank good nature had made the whole town his friends was sitting on the baggage truck when the train pulled in. From the Pullman at the forward end of the train emerged the colonel, tall, severe and stately. His townsmen regarded him curiously but they gasped when with a start the colonel paused in front of Waterbury.

"What are you doing here?" he demanded imperiously.

"Following your advice," explained Waterbury. "You suggested that I was more ornamental than useful, so I've gone to work."

"And have selected Carrsville as the narrow field for your somewhat limited abilities?"

"Precisely. Small beginnings make big endings," reminded the younger man. "I've taken the old Bailey farm and am going to raise fur."

"To raise fur."

"Precisely. Muskrats, squirrels, perhaps foxes and bullfrogs. Of course the frogs are not fur bearing, but there's a good market for their legs."

"On my pond?" The colonel was incredulous.

"On my two-thirds," corrected Waterbury. "If any of the muskrats or frogs get over on your side, just wade out and chase them home."

The hands holding the heavy cane twitched nervously, but by a violent effort the colonel retained command of his temper, and passed on.

Fresh sensation was found that evening in a telegram that was sent to New York. It may have been a violation of regulations, but the entire town knew that the colonel had wired:

"Keep Clio in city. Young Waterbury here."

It was brief enough, but sufficient to give the hint that a romance lay behind the matter, and interest grew at more than compound rates.

BRIMFIELD.

Death of Mrs. LeForest Baker.

Mrs. Anna E. Baker, wife of Rev. LeForest Baker, died at her home in Brimfield early yesterday morning after an illness of a week with pneumonia. Mrs. Baker was Miss Anna Elena Elmore and was born in South Windsor, Ct., August 28, 1865, the daughter of Lee W. and Sarah (Coles) Elmore. She was educated in the schools of her native town and Hartford, and was married in February, 1881, to Rev. LeForest Baker, a minister of the Advent Christian church in Concord, N. H. Mr. and Mrs. Baker moved with their two children to Brimfield 10 years ago and have lived since then in that town on the farm known as the "Buxton" place on the Palmer road. Mrs Baker was a member of the Advent church of North Adams, which she joined 16 years ago. Besides her husband she leaves a daughter, Miss Arlona G. Baker, and a son, Lee E. Baker, who is a student in the Hitchcock Academy; she has also a half brother living, Martin L. Gilman of Buckland, Ct. The funeral will be held at the home to-morrow afternoon, Rev. Clarence M. Semans of the Advent Christian church of Springfield officiating; burial will be in Chicopee.

Miss Marjorie King has returned from a visit with friends in Boston and vicinity.

Mrs. Ella King of Monson is visiting at the home of C. W. King on the Warren road.

Principal George F. Kenney and Mrs. Kenney are spending two weeks in Edgartown.

Miss Greta Wood of Boston is visiting her aunt, Mrs. C. W. King, at Mountain View farm.

Orrin Hicks was quite badly bruised and shaken up by being thrown from his mowing machine Thursday.

Mrs. Scott Campbell and son Donald of Somerville are visiting Mrs. Campbell's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fred T. Parker, over the Fourth.

Miss Bessie Jardine of Worcester and Miss Catharine Gould of Walpole, former teachers in the Center school, are visiting at the home of Dr. R. V. Sawin.

The Brimfield Grange held a lawn party at the home of the worthy lecturer, Fred N. Lawrence, recently. Ice cream and cake was served and music was enjoyed.

A Leap Year Plunge

By Nellie Cravey Gilmore

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

Little Margery Sessoms's eyes were more pink than blue as she dabbed them petulantly with a very moist scrap of cambric and lifted her small, determined chin with a sudden accession of pride. Her mind was made up; she had shed her last tear—for him. And in order to convince herself that she meant what she said, she opened Dwight Ogden's voluminous letter and read it through to the very end without so much as the quiver of an eyelash. Her lips tightened as she came to the final paragraph:

"I am sure the day will come when you will regret your obstinate course. You have vowed a thousand times that you loved me—not alone with your lips, but with your eyes—which is more. I know it; you know it. We both understand fully that there can never be any other man or any other woman, in just the same way. Our love was a sacred thing. It stands in a place by itself, high above the everyday counterfeit that people feed themselves—and fool—themselves on.

"We've proved it, haven't we? I am saying all this to you in self-justification; in justice to yourself. In after years it will be something to look back upon—as an exoneration—should my silly conscience begin to prod me for what I've never, intentionally, done. But, of course, after your merciless words of Tuesday night, it would be foolhardy—ridiculous of me—to reopen the subject to you. I have been given to understand. And as long as I live I shall never again annoy you with my feelings. I have asked you to marry me for the last time."

Margery folded the letter and placed it calmly in the envelope. Then she leaned forward in her chair and coolly laid it on the bed of pink and gray coals smoldering in the grate. She watched it in Spartan silence as the flame licked up and gathered it hungrily beneath its yellow tongue. When the last bit of charred paper had sifted to nothingness she arose, poked the coals with an elaborate display of unconcern and weakly trilling a bar from an old opera, quietted the room and ran upstairs to her den. Her lips and her cheeks were very white as she sat down before her easel. The unfinished study—a plate of June apples—was before her. She worked absorbingly for two solid hours; then with a sigh she laid down her brushes and threw back her head to survey the result. She laughed hysterically. The fruit was perfect in proportion, charmingly arranged; the leaves were absolutely lifelike and exquisite. But the apples were purple!

Dwight Ogden took up the receiver with eager fingers. All day he had waited in a fever of hope and fear to hear Margery's voice. But blank disappointment met him. As before—a dozen times, perhaps—it was only a call from one of his patients, and he found himself wishing savagely that they were all dead—or well.

But the days came and went and drifted into weeks, and there was no variation to the story. His disappointment turned into despair. She had, then, meant what she said—they could never be more than friends, just because they happened to be cousins! Well, if she still persisted in her mulish course, he could do likewise. If she was willing to sit passively and allow the prejudiced views of a fanatic to prevail over the deepest feelings of her heart, he was quite sure he could carry out his end of the bargain to the bitter end. After the things she had said to him, it should be as he had stated in his letter, he had asked her to reconsider and marry him for the last time.

Thus the time dragged on.

There came a time when young Dr. Ogden forgot his own identity for many weary weeks. Stricken down with pneumonia, he raved in delirium till the pretty, gentle little nurse had to wipe her eyes more than once.

The crisis came; his life was despaired of. The little nurse boldly took it upon herself to send a line to Margery Sessoms. She had gotten her name from the sick man's ravings; she found her address in the telephone book. But alas! Margery was a thousand miles from New York. She was down south, in Georgia, nursing her mother back to health—and trying to patch up her own broken heart with her art.

It was a month later that, returning to her northern home, Margery found the letter addressed in a strange woman's handwriting. They had carelessly neglected to forward it, and as Margery's stupefied senses at last took in the full realization of the words, she gave a little husky cry and—swooned. They brought her to in a little while, and she again took up the letter and slowly re-read the contents:

"Dear Miss Sessoms—If you can, please come to the hospital right away. I am writing you on my own responsibility. Poor young Dr. Ogden is dying, and he talks about you all the time—some trouble between you—and I know you'd come if you could hear him.

"Ask for Miss Trueheart when you get to the hospital. Hastily,

"LYDIA T."

But Dwight Ogden did not die after all. He came slowly back to health and strength—and a shattered life. He had been so near relief from it all, and relief had not come. The same bleak future stretched before him only, if possible, it was bleaker. The little nurse had told him of her letter to Margery — and Margery's failure to respond. What was there left for him to live for? Not even hope!

* * * * * *

Margery's trembling hand sought her throat! she felt as if she were going to stifle. Her heart plunged downward a thousand leagues. Dwight dead—and she had not been able to go to him. He had died believing her cruel and unforgiving and relentless! When she could pull herself together she arose and dragged her aching limbs to the telephone. She called up the hospital and asked for Miss Trueheart. Miss Trueheart was "on duty," and she falteringly inquired of the girl at the phone when Dr. Ogden had died.

"Oh," she gasped, "not—not dead. Getting well—ah! Thank you so much; I was misinformed. Goodby." Margery never knew how she got out the words—or how she got back to her room. The first thing of which she was conscious was of sitting before her desk, pen in hand.

"Dear Dwight.

"I have just returned from Macon, Ga., after a six weeks' visit. On my arrival at the house I found a letter from the girl who nursed you, Miss Trueheart, telling me of your serious illness. It was written the day you were expected to die and she asked me to come. You understand now why I did not.

"Dear, can you ever forgive me? I have been narrow, prejudiced, mean. But I have suffered. You don't know the price I've paid. Dwight—all these wretched weeks and today when I thought I had lost you.

"There's nothing I can write, nothing I can say, to excuse myself. And I'm not going to try. After the way I acted and talked that last night, of course you could never ask me to marry you again. But—but it is leap year, dear, and I am going to ask you. My people are getting ready to sail for Paris in ten days. I can be ready—for the other—in a week. As in the old days.

"Margery."

"P. S.—After all, we are only second cousins."

ASKED AUTOGRAPH AND GOT IT

Few Lines Above Signature, However, Made the Souvenir Rather a Costly One.

A favorite amusement of society in Victorian days, says Lady Dorothy Nevill, was the bazar. Many great ladies became expert in the art of wheedling visitors into paying generous sums for uselesss articles. However, the victim of "brigandage" named by Lady Dorothy—in "Under Five Reigns"—himself invited disaster, and was, besides, quite able to afford it.

One of the most ingenious stratagems ever employed at a bazar was probably that devised by the famous writer, George Sand, when holding a stall at a charitable sale in favor of distressed Poles.

Baron James de Rothschild happening to pass, the fair saleswoman addressed him with the usual request to purchase something.

"What can I buy?" asked the baron. "You have nothing that I can do anything with. But stay! an idea strikes me. Give me your autograph. Sell me that."

Mme. Sand promptly took a sheet of paper and wrote: "Received from Baron James de Rothschild the sum of 1,000 francs for the benefit of the distressed Poles. George Sand."

M. de Rothschild read it, thanked her and, presenting a note for the sum mentioned, passed on with the autograph.—Youth's Companion.

At His Word.

"I was talking with a casual acquaintance I met on a car going home the other evening and I happened to remark that I did like some touch and go about a man, when——"

"When what?"

"He grabbed my watch and jumped off the platform in a twinkling!"

God, from a beautiful necessity is love.

Palmer Town League.

Three Rivers 5, Palmer 2.

Three Rivers won from Palmer in Three Rivers Saturday, 5–2. The game was a pitchers' battle up to the eighth, when Three Rivers scored three runs on a hit, two errors, one stolen base and a fielder's choice. Both pitchers did well. Hurley hit a three-bagger to right in the sixth, but was left. Palmer scored in the third on an error, stolen base and a hit, and again in the fourth on a base on balls, a wild throw by the catcher and a single. Three Rivers scored two runs in the third on two hits and a wild throw by Hurley. Three Rivers won in the eighth. The score:

Thorndike and Bondsville Win.

Thorndike trimmed Palmer for the third time this season on the Palmer grounds yesterday. In the eighth, with the score even and two on bases Fortier, in attempting to nail Palmer on third hit him in the back, allowing him to score. A couple of hits then nailed up the game. The final score was 7—3.

Bondsville had little trouble walking away with Three Rivers on the home grounds, the score being 14—1. This puts Bondsville in second place in the league race.

WHAT'S THE USE?

With the disclosure of the very bad condition of the macadam surface of North Main street, scarcely two years old, due plainly to incorrect treatment and a lack of proper attention at the right time, has come the question, "What's the use of spending $50,000 on permanent highways if they are to be allowed to deteriorate the way North Main street has?" Very little, we admit. But we do not believe they will be given the same treatment and lack of treatment — for both contributed to the trouble on North Main street. In the first place, the North Main street object lesson is a forcible one, and will doubtless be profited by. In the next place we do not believe the citizens who will use the new roads and who will help to pay for them will stand having them neglected. We believe they will keep pretty close tabs on the man who has them in charge, and if he neglects them his official head will be demanded in short order.

THE last hope of Bertram G. Spencer, who murdered Miss Martha Blackstone of Springfield in the spring of 1910, was lost last week when the supreme court overruled the exceptions made in the case and he was sentenced on Tuesday by Judge Crosby to die in the electric chair some time during the week beginning Sunday, September 15. Nothing can save him now except an appeal to executive clemency, and these have not been very successful of late. The sentence is, we believe, entirely satisfactory to a very large proportion of those who have a knowledge of the circumstances. The crime was one of the most cold-blooded and deliberate in the annals of this section, if not of the state, without the slightest shadow of excuse or extenuating circumstance, and while the necessity for taking life is to be regretted the safety of those who remain must be considered. It is to be noticed that there has been little mawkish sentiment over Spencer, there being an apparent feeling that he will receive only his just deserts.

THE New York Sun, commenting on the report from Kansas that the wheat harvest has begun and is probably larger than ever, says:

> The wheat harvest is in earnest; the flaming spouters only think they are. And the fable is concerning all these States and all of us. Whoever is nominated, elected or defeated, so long as Nature sticks to her job with reasonable application all will be well, no matter what the orators and platforms view with alarm and point with pride at. Great excitement! Terrible loss of words! But to most of us, bondsmen of this workaday world and having no thirst or hope of office, what is all this moving picture of blood and thunder? Hard work and the crops, that is the platform that saves the country. So let the heathen rage as usual every four years.

And come to think it calmly over, the Sun has hit it about right.

FREQUENT complaints are heard of the scarcity of laborers for small jobs, and the citizen who wants a day's work done or a man to dig for a couple of days is hard put to satisfy his needs. With two railroads under process of construction within or near the limits of the town, every man who wants to work is not long idle and transient jobs are hard to get done.

IN the first of the Olympic games at Stockholm in which the Americans contested — the army rifle shooting competition last Saturday—the American teams were the winners. May it prove an augur of the contest as a whole.

Now that both spasms are over, why not match Roosevelt and Bryan for a Kilkenney cat finish, and so avoid future trouble?

New Power For Steamer.

Successful Experiment At Hauling With the Automobile Truck.

The firemen experimented Monday evening with the auto chemical truck as a motive power for the fire steamer, and as a result are of the opinion that, with a little fixing of the truck so as to permit a proper fastening of the steamer, they can get both pieces of apparatus to any village in the town in twenty minutes at the outside. The auto truck is a 40-horse power machine, and has ample reserve for hauling the steamer, as was shown Monday, but an attachment will need to be fitted to prevent the steamer from ramming the truck in going down hill. When this is done both pieces of apparatus can be taken almost anywhere that the steamer is needed or can be used.

North Main Street Repairs.

Were Begun Tuesday Morning And Are Progressing Rapidly.

The work of patching the macadam on North Main street was begun Tuesday morning under the supervision of D. L. Bodfish, superintendent of state highways. The street was first given a thorough sweeping which, as it had been allowed to go a week without sprinkling, served to remove all the superfluous dirt and leave the surface in shape to receive the top dressing. A coating of hot tar preparation is first applied, to make the mixture which is put on to fill the holes stick; then a mixture of tar and sand, similar to that of which tar walks are constructed, is put on and raked and smoothed over so as to fill the hollows and worn spots. This is gone over with a heavy hand roller and then a light coating of gravel applied. This, as it is traveled over is forced into the top dressing and makes a pretty good surface, though not quite equal to the original on account of the extremely bad condition of the road before repairs were begun. The east end of the strip is in the worst condition, and there it was found necessary to resurface every inch; other portions are not in such bad shape and can be patched easily.

Put Out Blaze In Home.

Passenger on Electric Car Proves Himself Friend of Family.

As an electric car came whizzing down Thorndike street late Wednesday evening a passenger, John Burcie of Park street, noticed a light in the building known as the "Lighthouse," just above the cemetery, occupied by Joseph Slowick. There were also loud cries from youthful voices, and Burcie and another man whose name is unknown lost no time in getting to the building. They found that a lamp had exploded and that the woodwork about a window was burning in good shape; a mattress and some bed clothing was also in flames. They put the blaze out by energetic work, and the firemen, who had been summoned by still alarm, found nothing to do when they got there. The cries came from two of the Slowick boys, who were sleeping in a tent back of the house and had seen the blaze.

Heat Causes One Death.

Edward McDonald Jr. Overcome Wednesday Afternoon While at Work.

Edward McDonald Jr., 32, died at 10.45 Wednesday evening from the effects of heat prostration in the afternoon. He was in the employ of D. E. Marcy at his stable on Walnut street, and had not been feeling well for several weeks. Wednesday afternoon while at work he collapsed from the effects of the extreme heat, but recovered sufficiently to walk to his home on Park street. Later he became unconscious and passed away in the evening. He leaves a father and mother. two sisters, Grace and Louise, and three brothers, George, Frank and Harry. Funeral services will be held Sunday afternoon. Mr. McDonald was born in Palmer and has always lived here. He attended the public schools of the town, and for several years has been in the employ of Mr. Marcy.

Important Business Change.

W. F. Fillmore and Palmer Grain Company Consolidate.

Announcement was made the first of the week of an arrangement whereby the coal and grain business of W. F. Fillmore on Main street and the grain business of the Palmer Grain Co. on Thorndike street were united under the name of the Palmer Coal and Grain Company, incorporated. The business of the Palmer Grain Co. has been moved from Thorndike street to Main street and the business will be carried on at the Fillmore stand. The manager of the new concern is John J. Donahue, though Mr. Fillmore will be actively with the company for some time at least. The officers of the new company are: President and treasurer, W. F. Fillmore; directors, W. F. Fillmore, J. C. MacVeigh and H. P. Puffer.

Tent Services at Palmer Center.

Tent Evangelists McKeenan, Paine and Jaquith are to begin a series of religious services at Palmer Center Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, after which they will be held every evening at 7 in a large tent. Rev. Dr. G. S. Rollins of Springfield will speak one evening, and other announcements will be made later. Mr. Paine represents the Massachusetts Bible society, and will have Bibles and other religious literature for sale.

District Nurse Directors Meet.

The directors of the distict nursing association held a meeting Monday afternoon in the reference room of the public library. Miss Gorman, who has filled the position of district nurse for the past three months very acceptably, was engaged for the remainder of the year. The association is to issue a printed report of the year's work to members in a few days.

Must Keep the Peace.

Case of Wales Man Heard In District Court Saturday.

The district court's attention Saturday morning was occupied with the case of Henry Carpenter of Wales, who was charged with disturbing the peace, the complainant being Clovis Baker. On the evidence being made it was shown that the prosecution was apparently the result of a neighborhood quarrel, and after some advice as to the conduct of both parties in the future the case was continued for one month, the defendant agreeing to be of good behavior meanwhile.

Death of Former Resident.

Mrs. Leontine Duplessis, 65, widow of the late Oliver Duplessis, died last Friday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Ida Picard, in Springfield after an illness of tumor. Mrs. Duplessis was born in Canada, but lived in Palmer for a number of years, where she was well known and much respected. In the last 15 years she had lived in Springfield. She leaves her daughter, Mrs. Picard, and two sons, Edgar O. and Arthur L. Duplessis of New York; also two grandchildren. The funeral was held Monday morning in Springfield and burial was in St. Mary's cemetery in Northampton.

An automobilist driving a car with a New York number left a dangerous obstruction in the highway on the Wilbraham road just west of the dry bridge one day this week. They had a flat tire, and after rolling a stone weighing about 300 pounds into the road and using two fence posts in prying up the machine, drove off and left them there, on a curve which is one of the most dangerous in that section.

Fire District Tax Rate.

The assessors are able to announce the fire district tax rate, which will be $2.60, an advance of 50 cents over last year. While they are not yet ready with the town rate, they are in hopes to make it somewhat less than last year, when it was $19.

The wire mill and the carpet mill closed Wednesday night for the remainder of the week.

D. J. Connor has moved from South Main street to the house he recently purchased on Converse street.

F. H. Caryl of Pine street has moved from Pine street to the house vacated by Samuel Brooks on Spring street.

The motorcycle which Jones the clothier has been offering on a voting contest was awarded Wednesday at the close of the contest to William Collins.

Samuel Brooks has moved his family from the Keith tenement on Spring street to the Moore house on Knox street, recently vacated by G. A. Moody.

An Italian living on Fox street, known as "No. 32," received a broken leg Wednesday evening while engaged in a friendly scuffle at his home. He was attended by Dr. S. R. Carsley.

Mrs. James Thompson, 49, died yesterday afternoon about 1 o'clock at her home near the carpet mill after a long illness. A husband survives her. The funeral will be held Sunday afternoon, Rev. Otto S. Raspe officiating.

The county commissioners have granted the petitions of the Boston and Albany railroad for changes in the bridges over the highways at Blanchardville and Bridge street in Palmer. A condition is imposed that the clearance of the bridges shall not be lessened, and that the distance between the abutments shall remain the same as at present.

Among the Churches.

A special children's service will be held in the Baptist church Sunday morning.

The Congregational church will discontinue the Sunday evening service during July and August, but will continue the young people's service.

The pulpit at the Park street Advent chapel will be supplied Sunday at 3 p. m. by Rev. Albert Johnson of Westfield. Communion will be observed. Friends will receive a hearty welcome at these services.

There will be a sermon, followed by communion and reception of members, at the Congregational church Sunday morning; Sunday school at 12; Christian Endeavor service at 6, subject, "Honesty."

At the Baptist church Sunday morning there will be a special service for children, with an illustrated talk and special music by the children; the Lord's supper will be observed at the close. Bible school at 12; evening service at 7, subject, "Good men's bad influence." The Y. P. S. C. E. service will be omitted during July and August.

Man Converses With Animals.

Charles Kellogg of California has started out to convince the Harvard faculty of his ability to talk with animals. His life has been spent in the Sierra Nevadas, and his studies include the vocal sounds made by bears, squirrels, lizards, rattlesnakes and crickets. Indeed, he claims proficiency in fifteen animal languages. He has a peculiar palate, with no tonsils, and entirely lacks the cord connecting the teeth with the lips. To these peculiarities he partly ascribes the ease with which he imitates the sounds of insects and animals. Some of his observations and ideas are, it is said, at least interesting, if not convincing.

RECOGNITION OF THE OCCULT

Even Its Enemies Are Willing to Grant That the Belief Has a Foundation in Fact.

The mysterious, the secret, and the unknown have ever exercised a powerful attraction over the human mind, and the present craze for what we may designate coemprehensively as occult research is no new thing But it cannot be denied that, apart from the merely superficial side, which naturally fascinates the empty-headed, the frivolous, or the ignorant, there are aspects of occultism which make a very deep appeal to the more intellectual and spiritual among us. Whether this be a good sign or not, it is not our intention to inquire; but it is curious to note the grounds upon which its bitterest opponents base their objections to occultism in general We need not trouble about the superior or matter-of-fact persons who, without the slightest inquiry, smile at such "superstitions," for no man has a right to sneer at another's beliefs, unltss he can prove that other to be wrong But the real enemies of occult science are those who, fully admitting the objective reality of occult experiences hold that they are necessarily evil and harmful in themselves On this point, again, we should not care to express an opinion, but it is clearly a remarkable fact that fancies which have for so many generations been looked upon as mere superstitions and old wives' tales should now be acknowledged by so many intelligent and thinking individuals as at least resting upon some foundation of fact. Who could have predicted such a tremendous reversal of opinion concerning these matetrs fifty years ago?—London Globe.

"Big Men and Crime."

"Big, healthy men seldom go wrong," says a Kansas City judicial oracle. "It is the thin, shrimpy type who are the criminals." Yet a New York financier recently convicted was a 240-pound shrimp; another recent Boston financier caught in Bombay and brought back to Charlestown prison was an anemic wisp weighing 250 pounds; still another Boston broker who trimmed everybody in State street before going to languish at the Charlestown reception house exceeded the 250-pound limit of physical delicacy.

More and more frequently is it being proved that assertions are totally independent of information.

Shaw, both then of Wales, in the County of Hampden and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, to the Ware Savings Bank, a corporation duly established by law at Ware, in the County of Hampshire and said Commonwealth, said mortgage deed being dated June 5th, 1908, and recorded in Hampden County Registry of Deeds, in Book 743, Page 38, for breach of the conditions thereof and for the purpose of foreclosing said mortgage, the said Ware Savings Bank will sell at public auction near the buildings on the tract of land last described in said mortgage, on Monday, the 15th day of July, 1912, at three o'clock in the afternoon, all and singular the premises conveyed by said mortgage deed and therein described as follows:—

A certain parcel of land, with the buildings thereon and all the rights, privileges, and appurtenances thereunto appertaining or belonging, lying in said Wales, in said County of Hampden, containing 4 1-2 acres more or less and bounded and described as follows, to wit:—

Beginning on the road leading from Wales to Brimfield at a point equally distant from the house now or formerly of Uriah P. Marcy, near the Junction of the roads leading to Holland and Brimfield, and the house standing upon this tract and running northeasterly upon the said road leading to Brimfield, to land formerly of Elijah Shaw and Hollowell P. Marcy; thence Southerly about twenty-seven feet to stake and stones in said Shaw and Marcy's line; thence Southwesterly about six rods to stake and stones in said Shaw and Marcy's line; thence Southeasterly in said Shaw and Marcy's line to stake and stones by said Old Road leading, or which formerly lead to Holland; thence upon said Old Road to a point which from it to the place of beginning, would make a straight line, parallel with and between the two houses above named; thence at an equal distance from the above named houses and in a straight line between the two, to the place of beginning on the Southeast side of road leading from Wales to Brimfield, being the same premises conveyed by Hollowell P. Marcy to Elijah Shaw by deed dated March 31st, 1870, and recorded with Hampden County Deeds, Book 274, Page 254. This tract is conveyed subject to the rights reserved in said deed.

Second Tract. A certain tract of land with the buildings thereon standing in the village of Shawville in Wales, on the north side of the highway leading from Wales to Brimfield bounded and described as follows: Commencing at the southwest corner of said tract on the north side of the road at line of land now or formerly of Salem J. Shaw; thence north 18 degrees E. sixteen (16) rods by land now or formerly of Salem J. Shaw and land formerly of Elijah Shaw to land formerly owned by Lyman Pendleton; thence south 70 degrees E. seven (7) rods to stake and stones to land sold to H. A. McFarland by the heirs of Solomon Shaw; thence south 8 degrees W. eight (8) rods on said McFarland land to stake and stones; thence south 7 degrees E. one rod on said McFarland land to stake and stones; thence south 26 degrees W. eight rods on said McFarland land on the west side of the driveway used to pass and repass from the main road to the old Solomon Shaw house to the corner of the picket fence to a stake and stones; thence north 60 1-2 degrees W. on the north line of a main road, seven (7) rods to place of beginning, containing about one hundred twelve (112) rods, being the same premises described in a deed from George P. Ladd, Assignee to Jane M. Shaw, dated May 12, 1890, and recorded with Hampden County Deeds, Book 466, Page 460.

Third Tract. A certain tract of land with buildings thereon situated in said Wales on Northerly side of the road to Brimfield and bounded and described as follows: Commencing on the road at the corner of land of Chandler G. Needham, now occupied by Ira P. Thompson; thence Northerly on said road 13 rods and 15 links to land of F. C. Smith; thence Northwesterly one rod and 7 links to corner of land of Chandler G. Needham; thence Westerly on said Needham land 12 rods and 12 links to corner of said Needham's woodshed; thence Southerly 2 rods and 22 links to first named corner, containing one-fourth acre be the same more or less, being the second tract described in a deed from Mary G. Weaver to Elijah Shaw, dated Sept. 2, 1865, and recorded with Hampden County Deeds, Book 263, Page 79.

Fourth Tract. A certain parcel of real estate situated in the Northeasterly part of Wales on the highway leading from Wales to Holland, and containing about one hundred forty-seven and one-half (147 1-2) acres, more or less, with the buildings thereon standing and the privileges and appurtenances thereto belonging, being the same premises conveyed by Carlton L. Stebbins to Elijah Shaw by deed dated July 19, 1869, and recorded with Hampden County Deeds, Book 274, Page 196. This tract is conveyed subject to the reservations mentioned in said deed.

Sale will be made subject to all unpaid taxes and assessments and to tax sales and subject to the interests of all persons thereunder. One Hundred Dollars will be required to be paid in cash by the purchaser at the time and place of sale.

CAMERA HERO SAVED TRAIN

Spoiled Films an Ill Reward for Act That Deserved Better Things of Fortune.

The slave of the camera was dozing in the smoking car when a half dozen shots rang out in the night air.

The train slackened. There were more shots.

"Train robbers!" shrieked a pallid passenger as he crawled under the seat.

The camera man grasped his black box and tripod, and, running to the car platform, sprang off into the darkness.

The robbers, most of them, were grouped about the express car. There was much money in the express safe. The company said not over $17, but it must have been thousands. Anyway, the robbers were determined to get it, whatever it was. They had done a lot of wild shooting and several persons had been hurt. Now they had shoved a stick of dynamite into the car and were just about to ignite the fuse.

Suddenly a blinding glare filled the air with dazzling fire.

With a wild shriek the robbers fled to the woods.

The flashlight of the camera man had saved the train.

When they found him he was crouched before a train hand's lantern, weeping bitterly.

"Something went wrong with the dum thing," he moaned. "The film's spoiled!"

Overculture or No Culture.

Overculture, even if it borders on affectation, is better than no culture at all. It is less offensive to hear a woman talk with grand airs than to hear her converse in common English of the streets, with all its slang and cheap wit. The English language contains quite a few words. Anyway there are enough to furnish one with an excellent vocabulary. A good set of dictionaries is a good investment. Have them near you and whenever you find a word you are not sure about its meaning or pronunciation investigate It is worth-while habit

Usefulness of Hypatia

When it was finally decided to tear down the old building in one back room of which Mr. Bellamy and several of his cronies had met on Thursday evenings to play skat and enjoy other festivities appropriate to the occasion, the burning question of the hour became what to do with the club house cat.

"One of you fellows," said the man who owned the house and incidentally had owned the cat, "ought to take care of her. Hypatia is a good cat and fine looker. It would be a shame to turn her out into the street with no home and no friends. Bellamy, she has always been fond of you. What's the matter with your taking her?"

"Me?" exclaimed Bellamy. "Me? Good Lord! My wife hates cats."

"Meow!" interrupted Hypatia, and rubbed patches of her new summer garments off on the leg of his trousers. Bellamy softened at that mark of confidence.

"Never mind, old girl," he said, "I won't go back on you. We'll go up to the house together and see what we can do."

Bellamy carried Hypatia home in a hat box. Mrs. Bellamy viewed the bundle with suspicion and alarm.

"What have you there?" she asked.

"Just a little surprise," said Bellamy lamely.

He raised the lid of the box and Hypatia, released from her unwonted confinement, jumped half way across the room.

"A cat!" she cried. "Why, Harvey, that is a cat. What did you bring her here for?"

"To kill the mice," said Bellamy.

"Mice?" she echoed. "Why, there isn't a mouse about the place."

"There ain't?" said Bellamy excitedly. "Great Scott, haven't you heard 'em? Why, the way they ram page through the walls every night playing golf and baseball is enough to wake the dead. I haven't been able to sleep for a week on account of the racket. That's the reason I got Hypatia. I want her to kill them off."

So for one night at least Hypatia was permitted to enjoy the hospitality of the Bellamys. The next morning Bellamy took his time at dressing His wife, being curious concerning the welfare of her unwelcome guest, preceded him to the store room where Hypatia had been quartered for the night, and cautiously opened the door As Hypatia rushed out she looked in and straightway sounded a ringing call to arms Bellamy bolted down the hall from one direction and the cook from the other.

"What is the matter?" they asked.

"A mouse!" responded Mrs. Bellamy, weakly, and keeled over against the wall. Bellamy held the rodent at arm's length and flourished it by the tip of the tail triumphantly.

"What did I tell you?" he said "Didn't I say the house is alive with them?"

"Yes," admitted his wife. "It's funny I never heard them, though I suppose we'll have to keep Hypatia another night now.

Immediately after breakfast Mrs Bellamy summoned the janitor and pointed to the moribund mouse.

"Henry," she said severely, "what is that?"

A look of consternation overspread the big Swede's infantile face.

"A maas," he gasped. "A maas Whare you gat heem?"

If the cultivation of mice in a private apartment had been the height of human ambition Mrs. Bellamy could have betrayed exultation no more complete than that which thrilled her voice as she replied:

"Here. Right here in our own flat I want you to clean out my storeroom and take up my carpets and rugs and stop up all the rat holes. The things will eat us alive if we don't get rid of them."

Although the bewildered Swede worked until bedtime tearing up carpets and moving furniture, neither mice nor their means of egress and ingress were discovered. Nevertheless that night Hypatia slew two more of her hereditary foes.

"I am going out this afternoon to look for a flat. I can't stand it to be eaten by mice," said Mrs. Bellamy.

She really did start, but she had got no further than her own hall door when she met a boy who wanted to see Mr. Bellamy.

"What do you want to see him about?" she asked.

"Oh, nothin' much," was the vague reply.

Mrs. Bellamy opened the door to the widest limit.

"Little boy," she said, with seductive graciousness, "wouldn't you like a dish of pudding and some fruit?"

"Yes, ma'am," said the boy.

She entertained him for half an hour. As a result of the interview she abandoned her intention of looking for another flat.

"I am glad of that," said Bellamy that evening when appraised of her decision. "Where is Hypatia?"

The distilled sweetness of Mrs. Bellamy's voice was positively cloying.

"I gave her," she said, "to little Billy Moses. He was up here this afternoon to see if you want him to deliver any more dead mice, and to collect for those he has already furnished. He says his father's shop is overrun with them, and I thought he might find Hypatia useful."

Swat the fly.

Misses Agnes and Eva Carmody and Maggie Callahan went this week to Block Island, where they will enjoy an outing for several weeks.

All the stores were closed the Fourth, and the post office was closed except when the different mails came in. The day passed very quietly.

Miss Alice Bond, with her guest, Miss Anna May Keefe, and Frank Collins of Holyoke went this week to Block Island for a short stay.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Summers of Springfield spent Sunday as the guests of her mother, Mrs. James Mansfield. She remained during the week.

Miss Edith McFarlane of Ludlow, and her cousin, Donald Merrifield of Springfield, visited their grandmother, Mrs. Orissa Merrifield, Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Holden and two sons, Charles and Lester, were guests Sunday of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Bray of Stafford Springs, Ct.

Mrs. Raggett has returned to the home of her daughter, Mrs. Harry Randall, after spending a month with her daughter, Mrs. Lannon, in Enfield.

Mrs. William Murphy and two children, who have been spending a week with her mother, Mrs. Ellen Flaherty, have returned to their home in Palmer.

Mrs. E. J. Loy and daughter Eileen went to-day to Valleyfield, Canada, where they will spend a month with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Convery.

George Moulton Jr. has returned to Boston after spending a few days with his parents. He has accepted a position in a drug store there for the summer.

Mrs. Orissa Merrifield entertained on Sunday her sons, Scott Merrifield of Springfield, Charles Merrifield of Tennessee, and also Rowland McFarlane of Ludlow.

The evening meeting was omitted Sunday at the M. E. church owing to the union patriotic service held in the opera house at Palmer. Several from this church attended.

Mrs. James Mansfield, with her daughters, Mollie and Nellie, and sons, James and Patrick, will go Monday to Nashua, N. H., where they will join Mr. Mansfield and live in the future.

The field day which was held Saturday at the Country Club was much enjoyed, the members entering into the sports with much enthusiasm. About fifty attended. Supper was served.

Mrs. Samuel Stewart returned Friday from a short visit with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Penley in Auburn, Maine. Her daughter, Evelyn, will remain with her grandparents for the month of July.

Mr. and Mrs. John Hearn, who for several years have lived with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Girouard in this village, went Wednesday to Palmer and will live for the future near Shearers Corner.

Mr. and Mrs. William Houle and daughter Madeline of Chicopee Falls and Mrs. Minnie Gowen and two daughters, Helen and Margaret of Medway were guests over the Fourth of Mrs. Mary Fauteux and family.

The subject of the morning service at the M. E. church Sunday will be, "Privilege of every day." Sunday school will be at 12 o'clock; Epworth League at 6; the subject of the 7 o'clock service will be "Finding one's life."

William Magee returned to his work in Boston Sunday after spending a few days with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Christopher Magee. Mr. Magee has taken a position in a broker's office in Boston during the summer vacation.

R. L. Bond, Henry C. Morgan and Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Cordner went the first of the week to Montreal, where Mr. Bond is opening a restaurant which has a seating capacity of 150. This is the second restaurant opened by him in that city, the first one meeting with great success.

Mrs. Campbell and daughter Mildred, who were summoned to Still Water, Ct., two weeks ago, by the serious illness of her husband, returned home Friday for a few days. She left her husband slightly improved in health, although not able to be brought home. Mrs. Campbell returned to Connecticut Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. John Dustin of Monson were guests of their daughters, Mrs. Clayton Cole and Mrs. George Gunn last Friday. Mr. and Mrs. Dustin were former residents here, and their many friends were grieved to hear that they were one of the unfortunate families to be burned out by the fire in Monson Thursday night. Mr. and Mrs. Dustin were on their way to Amherst to visit their daughter, Mrs. Henry Wentworth.

DICKENS AS HE WAS IN 1839

Interesting Description of Great Writer Published in the Knickerbocker of That Year.

In person he is a little above the standard height, though not tall. His figure is slight, without being meagre, and is well proportioned. The face, that first object of physical interest, is peculiar, though not remarkable. An ample forehead is displayed under a quantity of light hair, worn in a mass on one side rather jauntily, and this is the only semblance of dandyism in his appearance. His brow is marked, and his eye, though not large, is bright and expressive. The most regular feature is the nose, which may be called handsome; an epithet not applicable to his lips, which are too large. Taken altogether, the countenance, which is pale without sickliness, is in repose extremely agreeable and indicative of great refinement and intelligence.

Mr. Dickens' manners and conversation, except perhaps in the perfect abandon among his familiars, have no exhibition of particular wit, much less of humor. He is mild in the tones of his voice, and quiescent, evincing habitual attention to etiquette and the conventionalisms of polished circles. His society is much sought after, and, possibly to avoid the invitations pressed upon him, he does not reside in London, but with a lovely wife and two charming children occupies a retreat in the vicinity. He is about 26 years of age, but does not look more than 23 or 24. Mr. Dickens is entirely self-made, and rose from an humble station by virtue of his moral worth, his genius and his industry.—From the Knickerbocker, August, 1839.

Dressing for the Party

"Oh, say, mother, I don't want 'em manicured," protested the boy who was going to a party. "Shiny nails are awful sissy. Why, Bill's never had his nails polished, and he said to me just yesterday that he'd never heard of anybody having to take a bath every day except me. I've asked every boy in this block and there ain't a single fellow who has to take a bath more'n once a week. Now I've got to take an extra one this afternoon on account of Maybelle's party! Gee! I don't want to go to her old baby doll party.

"Say, mother, have I got to go? Well, I think it's mean having parties on Saturday. I wish I was lame, so I couldn't dance, and then no girl would want me to her party. I don't see why the girls are always having parties.

"You say you're going to give me one to return all this hospertality! Oh, say, mother, please don't. I don't see what I've done that you're going to give me a party. If you only won't do it I'll be more careful about my English and I'll clean my nails and scrub my teeth every morning without your reminding me. I will, honest. Why, if Bill knew I was going to have a party he'd guy me terrible.

"There's no use training me up for society, 'cause I'm going to be a gold miner. Bill knows about a mine out in Nome or Nevada that's awful rich. There's old nuggets as big as footballs and he and me—I mean I and him—are going out there as soon as we're 16. There was one fellow who went out when he was only 15 going on 16, and now he's a millionaire.

"Well, anyway, if I do have to go to college first before I'm a miner, I'll be a athlete. No society for me, mother, so I don't see why I can't cut out parties and dancing school.

"That brown stuff on my hands? Oh, that's the mahogany stain Bill and me are going to put on my model aeroplane. I was just trying it. Ain't it a swell color? Of course, it won't come off easy or it wouldn't be any good, Bill was coming over this afternoon to work on the aeroplane. He'll be awful sore when he finds out that you made me go to a party. Bill hasn't got any mother. She died when he was a kid a few days old. Of course, it was an awful sad loss to Bill, but he is real brave about it. He says his father wouldn't know if he didn't take a bath for a month. His father believes in letting Bill grow up independent and develop his own character, that's what he says. Oh, yes, Bill takes a bath real often. I didn't say he didn't.

"Oh, say, mother, do I have to wear them silk stockings and pumps? I hope Bill won't be anywhere around when I start to the party. I don't care if Aunt Julia did give 'em to me. I'd rather she'd given me some leggings or a pair of ice skates. I've got to go to see Aunt Julia next Saturday! Say, mother, it's awful mean the way my Saturdays go. Bill and me—I mean I and Bill—ain't that right? Well, then, us—we was going to finish the aeroplane and make another model all by ourselves, and now if I've got to go to Aunt Julia's I don't know when I'll have time for anything.

"No, I haven't written to grandpa yet. Of course not. With all them parties and calls on Aunt Julia I don't have a minute to write letters. I guess if grandpa knew how my time was spoilt he wouldn't expect me to write to thank him for that jackknife Bill says it's a pretty good knife and he's going to get a man he knows to sharpen it for me. The man used to be his father's hired man when they kept a horse, before Bill was born, and he's such an old friend of the family that he'll do it for nothing. So even if you don't think Bill is a good companion for me, you can see what a valuable friend he is.

"Oh, say, mother, I hate that sissy tie! Can't I wear my old dark blue one? No, I ain't chewing gum. I just happened to have a little in my mouth, but I wasn't chewing it. I never chew it since you told me not to the last time. But I've got a little on hand that I thought I ought to use up, so I just put it in my mouth once in a while.

"Lemme comb my hair myself, mother. I can part it straight. Say, did you hear that? That's Bill's whistle. Lemme go to the window and holler down that it's all off with the aeroplane work today, for I've got to go to a party.

"Say, mother, what do you think? Bill's all dolled up in a lot of new clothes and he's going to Maybelle's party himself. Wouldn't that freeze you?"—Chicago Daily News.

Was Found Dead.

Joseph C. Maguire Passed Away Suddenly Saturday of Heart Disease.

Joseph C. Maguire, 69, was found dead at his home near the depot Saturday morning. Death was due to heart disease. C. H. Stacy went to the Maguire home for some work and found Mr Maguire apparently asleep in his chair. He did not disturb him, but came back about 2 in the afternoon and found him in the same position. He investigated and found that Mr. Maguire had been dead for several hours.

Mr. Maguire was born in Hingham April 16, 1848, and at the outbreak of the civil war he enlisted in the 10th Massachusetts regiment in Springfield, but a month later he was discharged because of his youth. He spent most of his life in Hingham and came to Monson five years ago. He was a shoe and harness repairer. He is survived by two brothers, John C. of Monson and Charles L. of Hingham. The funeral was held Monday from the home of his nephew, Everett Maguire on Margaret street and burial was in No. 1 cemetery, Rev. G. A. Andrews officiating.

At a meeting of the Companions of the Forest last week, the officers for the coming six months were elected as follows: Past chief companion, Mrs. Kate Hodge; chief companion, Miss Mary Higgins; sub-chief companion, Miss Bessie Lewis; inside guard, Mrs. Alice Smith. The election of the three year trustees and the guides was postponed until the next meeting, to be held July 9, and at that time the officers will be installed.

There will be an amateur stock judging contest at the annual Palmer Fair next fall. Superintendent of Schools F. A. Wheeler has been notified and all young men under 18 years of age may enter. The prizes will be $12, $6 and $4. All who care to enter the contest are asked to hand their names to Mr. Wheeler so that they may receive scorecards and instructions from Massachusetts Agricultural College.

Heimann & Lichten have established temporary offices in their block on Main street, which was recently vacated by the telephone company. They have leased the Langewald mill on South Main street and are installing machinery as fast as possible. No definite plans have been made regarding the rebuilding of the plant, which was burned to the ground a week ago; but if the firm decides to build anywhere it will build in Monson on the same site.

Daring Man Threw Metaphorical Brick Into Assemblage and Didn't Wait for Effects.

"Shall we not carry on this fight until we have mere man reduced to a nemipode?" said the suffragette orator.

"We shall. But what is a hemipode, anyway?" spoke up one of the assemblage.

"The black-necked hemipode is a bird about the size of a sparrow that lives in Madagascar. A friend out there sent me a pair of them. The male hemipode alone sits on the nest of eggs and hatches the young and takes care of them until grown up," the orator explained.

"Wouldn't that be lovely?" exclaimed one of the audience.

"There are birds down in South America called groove-billed aris. They build a large communal nest of sticks, and several females sit on the eggs in company, so that their conversation need not stop because of hatching. I'd like to have a vote as to which is the more popular, said a daring man near the door.

A Modern Wise Woman

By M. Dibbel

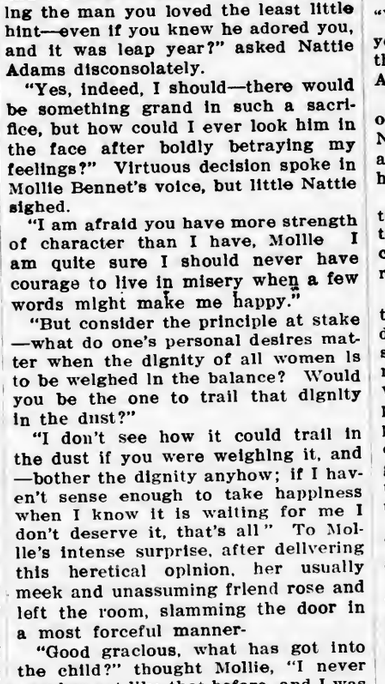
(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

"And you would really pine away and die of a broken heart, before giving the man you loved the least little hint—even if you knew he adored you, and it was leap year?" asked Nattie Adams disconsolately.

"Yes, indeed, I should—there would be something grand in such a sacrifice, but how could I ever look him in the face after boldly betraying my feelings?" Virtuous decision spoke in Mollie Bennet's voice, but little Nattie sighed.



"I am afraid you have more strength of character than I have, Mollie I am quite sure I should never have courage to live in misery when a few words might make me happy."

"But consider the principle at stake—what do one's personal desires matter when the dignity of all women is to be weighed in the balance? Would you be the one to trail that dignity in the dust?"

"I don't see how it could trail in the dust if you were weighing it, and—bother the dignity anyhow; if I haven't sense enough to take happiness when I know it is waiting for me I don't deserve it, that's all" To Mollie's intense surprise, after delivering this heretical opinion, her usually meek and unassuming friend rose and left the room, slamming the door in a most forceful manner.

"Good gracious, what has got into the child?" thought Mollie, "I never saw her act like that before, and I was only trying to give her a true idea of what counts in the character of the ideal woman."

Nattie Adams walked rapidly homeward, with a bright flush on her cheeks and an angry light in her blue eyes; her thoughts, if spoken, would have answered her friend's self interrogation

"I wish uncle Carl had left his money to some orphan asylum instead of to me, just because I have it I suppose I must remain an old maid I wish Mollie wouldn't talk such rubbish—the idea, as if it mattered when you knew that some one loved you, and wouldn't tell you because you had more money than he did—but I know I shall never dare say a word now."

Six months before her uncle had made her his sole legatee, and his fortune was an ample one. At first Nattie rejoiced over the legacy, for now she thought all obstacles between herself and Wallace Kendall could be removed But Wallace thought otherwise; he believed it to be the man's place to furnish his family's supply, and as he had not actually obtained Nattie's promise to become his wife before she was made an heiress, his sense of honor forbade his asking for it now.

Nattie's heart had given a throb of hope when she remembered that the coming year was leap year, and she had become more and more determined to take matters into her own hands and do something desperate when it arrived And now, as if Mollie had read her unwomanly intentions, she had received a straightforward lecture on the subject.

In reality Mollie was utterly innocent of any personal application of her remarks; she had not known that anything deeper than friendship existed between Nattie and Wallace and knew nothing about the tangled state of their affairs

Her eyes were opened shortly after the New Year arrived, in an unexpected manner A cousin of Wallace Kendall's had been calling on Mollie with increasing fidelity since the winter set in, and one evening he seemed to feel so despondent that Mollie at last inquired:

"What makes you look so gloomy? Have you had anything dreadful happen to you?"

"No, but I'm worried about Wallace. He isn't a bit like himself lately. Blest if I would let a little money part me from the woman I loved."

"What do you mean? I did not know that Wallace was in love with anybody"

Russell Kendall seemed surprised "Why—she is your closest friend' Do you mean to say you did not know that Wallace was in love with Nattie Adams?"

"I surely did not have any suspicion of it, why I have never thought of Nattie as anything but a child And actually her coming into a fortune has parted them?"

"Yes, for Wallace is such a chump that he thinks the man should do all the providing, and unless he can duplicate her cash, he has no right to marry a woman with money."

Mollie had a long period of meditation after Russell's departure. To her disquietude she found that she was not so certain as to preferring to die in modest silence rather than speak the word for happiness, as when she preached that doctrine to Nattie Suppose Russell—but Mollie hastily changed her line of thought, and began to ponder on how she could help the two who were in such an unfortunate predicament.

At last a smile came to her lips "I am sure that will bring matters to a crisis—I mean to try anyhow"

Next evening she said to Russell, "Will you tell Wallace that I would like to see him tomorrow when he comes from the office—there is something important I have to tell him?"

Late the following afternoon Wallace Kendall stopped at Mollie's door, and the maid who admitted him informed him that Miss Bennet was expecting him and would come at once

As Wallace seated himself, he became conscious that some one was sobbing in the adjoining room, and noticed that its door stood ajar Before he could determine whether or not it were best to make his presence known, he heard Mollie Bennet speaking in soothing, but remarkably distinct tones:

"Don't cry, Nattie, I assure you that Wallace is not worthy of one of those tears—I am positive of what I say, that he has been paying attention to Clara Royce for several months; in fact they are reported engaged, and I thought it only right that you should know"

White with wrath Wallace strode to the partly open door and threw it wide. "It is a lie!" he fairly shouted "I hardly know Miss Royce by sight and I never loved anyone in the world but you, Nattie—I think Miss Bennet might be up to better business than telling you deliberate falsehoods."

Mollie gave an amused laugh and said pleasantly, "Now, will you use the common sense with which Providence provided you, and tell Nattie like a man that you want her for your wife?"

Without awaiting an answer she passed swiftly through the door Wallace had just entered, closing it tightly behind her, and leaving two very blank looking young people confronting each other. But they soon forgot everything else in the joy of being together, and Wallace followed the advice he had received.

"Goodness," thought Mollie, with a sigh of relief, as she sank into a chair in the outer room, "I hope I may be preserved from going through such an experience as that again—I should never have dared attempt it if I had not known that Wallace was like clock work in his movements, so that I could time him to the minute, and even then my hair fairly stood on end until I heard the door bell Now I hope the two little geese will be happy—and properly grateful to their benefactress."

Later she whispered to Nattie, who clung to her lovingly, "You see, I preserved the dignity of woman after all—leap year did not have a thing to do with bringing Wallace to his senses."

The Claws of Mooneye

By June Gahan

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

Piebald Pete found out he owned an internal agitator the night Minnie Mooneye shot Yellow Puffs through her wrist.

He stood at one side of the ring, watching the two go through their act. Four oil torches flared in the darkness of the tent. The faces on the benches were blurred and motionless. For the instant the whole place was held in a spell of silence, waiting for the Indian girl to do her famous trick. She was shooting with a revolver, backward over one shoulder, at a card held by Yellow Puffs, taking aim from a hand mirror.

The girl did not shriek when the bullet struck her wrist. She looked at the face of the other and smiled white lipped.

The band started to play at a warning from Pete's megaphone. Then he made for the side tent while they hustled on another act to cover the accident.

"I'm sorry, girl," he gasped, huskily, bending over the shattered wrist. "The cat! She's never missed that shot."

Mooneye stood near, watching them with unblinking eyes, brown and soft as sealskin.

"It's all right. Maybe she didn't mean to. Get a doctor, will you, Pete. I need that wrist."

She drew it back quickly. Pete had stooped and kissed her arm.

"Say, you ain't got any heart at all, have you?" he demanded.

Puffs looked at the figure of the Indian girl just visible in the tent entrance.

"You're ringing the wrong bell, Pete," she said slowly. "Why don't you take notice of that little Indian kid yonder?"

"Who? Mooneye? Why?"

"Don't you know?" She smiled up in his face. "I do."

Pete was silent, but bewildered. Therefore he swore vaguely to himself, and went back to the ring after seeing the girl cared for

"Don't, Mooneye's Watching You."

He didn't know what she meant. He had never noticed Mooneye specially until that night. But then, Puffs had also escaped notice. Standing back at the side of the ring, with his megaphone held in readiness to announce the acts, Piebald Pete faced his destiny, and knew he was in love with Puffs.

When anyone became a working member of Piebald Pete's show, he received a new name just as if it were a New Jerusalem citizenship. It was a token of comradely interest, a professional accolade.

Minnie Mooneye had been named the first day a bunch of real Indians straggled into the half-built camp. She was the last in the procession. They were not fresh from the far west, these red brothers and sisters. For years they had upheld the pathetic and thrilling traditions of a vanishing race, according to the barkers, in little one-ring western shows. They danced, fought, whooped, howled and kept the passing race from becoming extinct.

Mooneye was a half-breed. She carried a couple of suit cases, and walked lightly in her heeled boots. She was a delicate saffron tint, with dusky, slumbrous eyes, wide, childlike, with a tantalizing uplift at the corners. Her dark hair was bound about her head in close braids. As she passed, a lanky, staring cowboy threw out her name to her.

"Hello there, Mooneye. Step high!"

So with Yellow Puffs. To be exact, she was a lady cowboy. That was what the female portion of the audience called her.

She was not tall, neither was she lovely. Her eyes were keen and merry and usually half closed as one who takes a squint at long distances. Close inspection showed them to be rather green. Her chin was one no man need have been ashamed of; likewise her jaw line. Most women do not care for an apparent jaw line. Yellow Puffs accentuated hers by a persistently good-natured outlook on life with a dash of the aggressive when any one tried, as she said, to put one over on her

After she returned to the show even Mooneye was made to see that she had committed a social error.

"Trouble is with an Injun girl, she thinks she can buy a husband with collateral, so to speak," one of the boys remarked. "Mooneye's after Petey, and she'll either get him or somebody's scalp."

Pete stood beside Yellow Puffs. He loved her hair even. It was short and thick, and very curly, and "real for sure yellow," he told himself. A thrill ran through him when she leaned back against his shoulder to let the old stage coach rumble into the ring. He welcomed the thrill. It was the precursor of adventure.

"Say, girl, you wait till the season closes, and I've got a wad," he said quietly. "You needn't stare. I mean it. I've wanted you ever since you first joined the show, and I play white. Does your wrist hurt you?"

Puffs had put it behind her, and laughed shortly. They stood in the shadow of the big canvas entrance. Beyond were the small tents, out in the darkness. The nearest one was Mooneye's. Pete's pulses began to tap dance music, the same old tune that Pan taught Childe Cupid to hop to, some time back. He bent over and kissed the girl's cheek. She swerved so he could not reach her lips.

"Don't. Mooneye's watching you," she said curtly. "I don't trespass on anybody else's brand."

"There's no brand on me," sent back Pete, hotly; then he, too, turned and saw the Indian standing motionless near, and he ceased thrilling. There was the touch of claws on his neck.

"Look at her eyes, Pete," said Puffs. "They give you away."

Pete hesitated, helpless, blundering, dogged, between the two of them; then he went into the ring.

Puffs waited for her turn. The pony she always rode was dancing restlessly under check. In the ring Pete was doing his star act, as Piebald Pete from Windy Valley, deadshot scout and terror of the redskins. Now they had turned the steers and buffaloes into the ring for the grand roundup and fight. After that came Puffs' riding turn.

Suddenly the Indian disappeared. There came the last volley of shot and the thud of hoofs as the boys chased the steers. Puffs backed her pony to let them pass through the narrow passage, but as the first head appeared Mooneye rose from the shadows, waving a lighted torch under its nostrils.

The rearing, dancing pony was in the way. Puffs tried to hold it steady as the frightened steer lowered its head and backed into the mass behind him. Mooneye had tossed the torch madly at their jammed heads, and was yelling something. The foremost steers tried to turn and were trampled by those behind. A roar rose from the seats at the smell of smoke.

"Get back there," Puffs shouted to the Indian. "You'll be killed."

She pressed the sides of the pony lightly, and it sprang forward, shoulder against the flank of the steer.

"Come on, boys; chase them now!" she called back, and the mass broke as the leader ran headlong, Puffs at his heels

"Is Mooneye hurt?" was her first question, after the danger was past and Pete found her.

"Is she hurt?" he repeated grimly "I should say not. You'd have been gored and trampled if she'd had her way. She leaves tomorrow."

Puffs looked up at his eyes.

"Why? Let me go. She's more to the show than I am."

"But she ain't more to me. Oh, I mean it." reached for her hungrily "I've let you go along easy, girl, and almost lost you, letting you have your own way. You sure had me eating out of your hand tamely, didn't you? Here I go along on tiptoes, respecting you ladies, and getting clawed right and left. It ends right here tonight, Puffs. Mooneye's packing her army blanket this minute. We'll get married tomorrow, and maybe skip the show business; what do you say? I can get a foreman's position anywhere west of Joplin, and you won't have to lope around any sawdust ring. Like it, girl, dear?"

Puffs put her arms up around his neck. Out in the ring they were putting out the lights.

"I'll go, Pete," she whispered.

The Dean's Lesson.

Jonathan Swift, the Dean Swift so well known to fame, dearly loved a joke, and constantly inflicted them on his friends and servants. Sometimes they were kindly enough, and sometimes quite the reverse. In "Martha, Lady Giffard," Julia G. Longe gives an amusing example of the former kind.

Once when the dean was traveling in Ireland he found himself obliged to stay the night at a wayside inn In the morning, when his servant brought him his boots, he saw that they had not been cleaned; he asked why.

"I thought, sir, as you were going to ride, that they would soon be dirty again."

"Oh!" said his master. "Very well; go and see to the horses." The man obeyed, and in the meantime the dean ordered the landlord not to give him any breakfast. When the man returned, his master told him to bring the horses round.

"But, sir," remonstrated the man, "I have not yet had my breakfast."

"Oh, that is no matter," replied the dean, cheerfully. "We will start on our journey, for it is certain that if you were to have your breakfast, you would soon be hungry again." And he took him breakfastless away. We may suppose that he never again neglected to clean his master's boots when on a journey.—Youth's Companion

STILL HAD A POINT TO MAKE

Domestic Difficulties Being Settled, Woman Insisted Upon One Other Understanding.

A colored couple was taken before the Juvenile court and against the man was placed the charge of neglecting his children. Judge Taylor gave advice as to what should be done to straighten out the family trouble so the couple could continue to live together and support the children.

"You are earning $8 a week, and have three children to support on that," said the judge. "It is evident that you must cut your expenses down as low as possible. You are paying for a piano by installments You will have to stop that, for people in your circumstances can't afford to have a piano.

"You must leave the house you are living in and move to a smaller one with lower rent. You ought not to pay over $5 or $6 a month for rent." The mother objected to this, saying that she could not live in a respectable neighborhood under such conditions.

The judge found that they belonged to different churches, and he advised that the wife join the husband's church. He added that it was proper that the husband hold the purse strings. After many other difficulties had been smoothed over the case was continued two weeks to give the new methods a trial. The couple left, but at the door the woman turned to the judge and said:

"Dat will be all right, but Ah must insist dat he pinch his mouf an' stop talking about me."—Indianapolis News.

CROWDING TO SEE TENNYSON

Congregation Would Not Leave Westminster Abbey Without a Glimpse of the Great Poet.

Sir James Knowles accompanied Alfred Tennyson to the funeral of Dickens at Westminster abbey and he describes in "Tennyson and His Friends" the scene when the crowd identified the distinguished visitor. "There was an immense congregation that day in the abbey and when the service was over we stood up waiting a long time to pass out through the rails. But instead of dispersing by the outer door the people all turned eastward and flocked toward the altar, pressing closer and closer up to the sacrarium. The chances of getting out became less and less, and I turned to Tennyson and said: 'I don't know what all this means, but we seem so hemmed in that it is useless to move yet.'

"Then a man standing by me whispered: 'I don't think they will go, sir, so long as your friend stands there.' Of course I saw at once what was happening—it had got to be known that Tennyson was present and the solid throng was bent on seeing him. Such a popularity had never occurred to me or to him, and justified his nervous unwillingness to be seen in crowded places.

"I was obliged to tell him what was going on, upon which he urgently insisted on being let out some quiet way and putting an end to the dilemma."

Most Annoying.

"It's fearfully annoying to lose all your money on a get-rich-quick scheme," said Mr. Silliwad. "Yes," replied Mr. Lambkin. "Such a disappointment to find the most enticing propositions coming along after you have wasted all your available coin on a back-number prospectus."

WARREN.

Special Town Meeting Called.

A special town meeting has been called for next Monday evening. The matters to be taken under consideration are principally in regard to the building of a highway about 1100 feet long from Main street over the land of the Boston and Albany railroad, James T. and Ellen F. Cutler, George C. Bridges and the Warren steam pump company, in accordance with a layout made by the county commissioners. Another item of importance will be to determine whether the town will accept certain sums of money as a gift from George C. Bridges, the Warren steam pump company and the Boston and Albany railroad to help meet the expense of building the highway. Other matters for the meeting to take action upon will be the acceptance of a small piece of land adjoining Pine Grove cemetery as a gift from Albert P. and Edgar W. Butterworth, and the appropriation of $20 for watering the streets about the town hall and public library.

Was Seriously Injured.

Salem Laflin was painfully injured last Friday morning in the pattern shop of the Perkins machine company. He was planing some thin pieces of board when his right hand came in contact with the rapidly revolving blade of the planer. The fingers and thumb were all badly lacerated. He was taken to the office of Dr. C. A. DeLand, who with the assistance of Dr. J. E. Dalton and Dr. E. J. Buck, amputated the thumb and fingers, leaving a part of the third and little fingers. Mr. Laflin had been employed in the pattern shop about a week, having previously worked for the Warren steam pump company.

Reynolds—Tart.

Miss Lucy Reynolds and Frank Tart were married in St. Paul's church Monday morning, Rev. John P. McCaughan officiating. Charles Tart of Pittsfield, a brother of the groom, was best man, and Miss Mildred St. George was bridesmaid. After the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride on Maple street. Mr. and Mrs. Tart left for a wedding trip and on their return will live on Maple street.

The selectmen have appointed Joseph Mason a special constable.

TAX RATE TAKES DROP.

Is Only $16.40 on $1000, a Material Reduction.

SMALL APPROPRIATIONS THE CAUSE.

No Advance in Valuation, and Not Much New Property Found. List of Heavy Taxpayers.

The assessors have so far progressed with their work that they are able to announce the tax rate. It is $16.40 on $1000, a reduction of $2.60 from last year, when it was $19. The difference is due principally to the smaller amount to be raised this year. The amount is $81,338.52, against $94,318.74 last year—almost $13,000 less. There has been a small increase in the amount of taxable property, but the valuation has in no instance been raised.

Those who pay tax of $100 or over are:

Circus Coming Next Week.

Sparks Big World Shows to Exhibit on Lawrence Lot Tuesday.

Next Tuesday will be circus day in Palmer, and the small boy—now that school is not keeping—will be able to put in all his time absorbing the wonders of the various departments of the exhibition—before, during and after the performances. The big Sparks shows are booked to exhibit on the Lawrence lot on Thorndike street afternoon and evening. They have never been in this section before, but come most highly recommended as a clean, meritorious aggregation, giving a performance of large variety and excellence. A street parade at noon will be one of the features, and another will be the moderate price of admission, 25 and 35 cents.

Warren Tax Rate Goes Up.

Jumps From $15.10 to $20.40. Large Appropriations the Cause.

Increased appropriations at the annual town meeting, with a larger state tax and a loss of $5000 from liquor licenses because the town voted "No," have raised the tax rate in Warren from $15.10 last year to $20.40, a raise of close to 35 per cent. A floating debt which must be cared for and a lack of unexpended funds in the treasury also helped. The personal property is valued at $638,349, and the real estate at $1,463,637. The amount to be raised by taxation is $48,687, of which the town will take $40,800, the county $2271 and the state $3687. There are 1187 polls. Those who pay a tax of $100 or over are:

Roads Will Be Relocated.

County Commissioners Issue Decree to Southern New England.

The county commissioners last Friday issued their third interlocutory decree in response to the petition filed some time ago by the Southern New England railroad asking for directions as to how the tracks of the road shall be laid in the towns Palmer and Brimfield. Most of the roads are to remain unchanged in direction and grade, but there are some changes in both towns. The old road leading from Brimfield to Palmer Center is to be relocated as is also the road from the Palmer and Warren road to the Mason district school. Special stipulations are made in regard to the bridges and trestlework which is to be constructed in all instances. In Brimfield there will be a relocation of the old road from Brimfield to Dunhamtown and a relocation of the easterly road from Brimfield to Wales. The following roads will be raised: Mill lane, road from Brimfield to Wales, Holland road, Five Bridges road and road from East Brimfield to Holland.

Ware Man Killed By Cars.

Grade Crossing Fatality. Crossing Dangerous, But Unprotected.

Gideon Dusseault, 77, was instantly killed on the track of the Boston and Maine railroad at Gilmore's crossing, about a quarter of a mile west of the station at Ware about 8.50 yesterday morning. His skull and left ribs were crushed and his left shoulder broken. The carriage in which he was riding was demolished and the horse killed, the latter being carried 125 feet by the train. Mr. Dusseault leaves two daughters, Mrs. James B. Rose of Ware and Mrs. Victor Bernard of Chicopee, and two sons, George W. of Ware and Wilfred of Worcester. The crossing where the accident occurred is one of the most dangerous in Ware, as it is at the base of a hill which hides trains from the west until only a few rods away. Attempts have been made to have a flagman stationed there, but they have always been opposed by the railroad.

Mr. Dusseault is the father-in-law of Mr. Rose, who died suddenly last week as the result of cutting his forearm with a sickle.

Wilbraham Church Corner-stone Laid.

The corner-stone of the new Congregational church at Wilbraham was laid Sunday afternoon with interesting services. The program was carried out on the site of the new church, about 150 being in attendance.

The program opened with an invocation by Rev. H. F. Legg, followed by the reading of scripture by Rev. C. B. Bliss of Hampden. Then came an anthem by the choir, followed by an address by Rev. M. S. Howard, pastor emeritus of the church. This was followed by a prayer by Rev. J. G. Willis, and an original hymn, written at the time of the laying of the corner-stone of the former church on September 22, 1877, was then sung. Gaylord W. Douglass, principal of Wesleyan Academy, then gave an address. The exercises closed with the doxology and benediction.

TO TELL ADVANTAGES OF THE TOWN.

Electrically Lighted at Night. Electric Co. and Business Club the Sponsors.

Before many days the advantages of Palmer as a place of business and residence will be declared to practically all who pass through the town between points east and west by means of a huge sign, electrically lighted at night and so placed that it will be readily discernible from several lanes of travel.

This sign is to be 20 by 60 feet, of wood painted white, with black lettering so that it may be readily read at the greatest distance. The wording will be:

Palmer—the Town of 7 Railroads

15 miles to Springfield
Street Railway and Trolley Express
All Modern Conveniences

Locations for Factories and Residences.

Electricity for Light and Power.

Apply to Palmer Business and Social Club.

It is to be located near the electric power plant at Blanchardville, but on the Monson side of the river, where it can easily be seen from the Boston highway, the Boston and Albany railroad, the Worcester trolley line and the new Southern New England railroad to Providence when that is completed. It will be lighted at night by electricity, the lights being kept on until a late hour.

The arrangement has been made through the efforts of General Manager H. M. Parsons of the Central Massachusetts Electric company and the Palmer Business and Social club. Mr. Parsons broached the matter to the club some time ago but at that time the proposition was for an electric sign, which the club did not feel that it had the funds to equip and maintain. After some discussion a new proposition was made, which was accepted at the meeting of the club Tuesday evening. Included in the new proposition was a letter from Messrs. C. D. Parker & Co. of Boston, stockholders in the Central Massachusetts Electric company, in which they offered to contribute a generous sum toward the initial expense of the sign, also to wire and light it for one year free of charge.

The matter of such a sign has been under discussion before, but nothing has ever come of it. The new notice that the town is on the map will probably be ready in a short time, and will no doubt do much to acquaint the traveling public of the advantages Palmer has to offer the stranger looking for a home or a place in which to do business.

Fire at West Warren.

Plant of Warren Mills and Power Company Entirely Destroyed.

The plant of the Warren Mills and Power Company at West Warren was entirely destroyed by fire Friday noon. A. Crossman discovered the blaze in some bales of waste, but before the fire department could get there the main building was on fire. The Warren companies were also called, but nothing could be done. The loss will be total on the building, machinery and stock, with the possible exception of the water wheel, and is estimated at from $6000 to $8000. It is understood that there was no insurance, as the risk was so great the rate was prohibitive. The fire is supposed to have been caused by spontaneous combustion, as the excess of stock which was stored in the open air had caught fire many times in the past from this cause.

Electric Transmission Line.

Palmer and Ware Stations Connected By High Power Wires.

The Central Massachusetts Company has been constructing a high power transmission line from its plant at Blanchardville to the distribution system of the Ware Electric Company in Ware, and will have it completed on or about the 23d. The completion of this line will be a distinct advantage to both the Ware and Palmer Company, for when the two systems are tied together an improved and thoroughly reliable service can be assured, for in case of a breakdown in the station of either company it will be possible for the one unaffected to help out the other.

TREES ARE DEFOLIATED.

Elms and Maples Appear to be Worst Sufferers.

COVERED WITH LICE; DRIPPING SAP.

But Neither is a Menace to the Life of The Tree. Some Have Died Of Drought.

Just as lovers of shade trees begin to congratulate themselves that the elm tree bettle had been given his quietus, along comes another pest which bids fair to do serious damage. Small lice by the million are to be found on the elms, maples and some shrubs; even climbing vines around residences and potted plants are suffering to some extent. The leaves of the trees are covered with the little gray insects, and in a short time begin to shrivel up and drop off. Quantities of sap exude from the leaves to such an extent that in the early morning it may be found on the sidewalks in generous proportions where it has dripped through the night; the heat of the sun dries it as fast as it appears through the day. Tree Warden Keith has been notified of the trouble, and on communication with Prof. Stone of Amherst finds that the dripping of the sap and the lice have no connection with each other, and that trees which have died have not died from these causes. The lice are found in many places; nothing can be done to destroy them and so far as known they do no harm. They do not eat the foliage nor cause it to drop off. The dripping is what has always been known as "honey dew," which has always been common, but not to such an extent as this year. This does not damage the trees and cannot be prevented. The cause of death is drought. Trees have been deprived of a proper amount of moisture for several seasons and especially so last year. The drought of last summer was followed by an unusually severe winter and trees are in such condition that they cannot withstand further strain of that kind. Therefore, the present drought is killing them. The damage will be stopped when there are copious rains and until then nothing can be done.

WILBRAHAM.

Mrs. Frank Morgan is seriously ill.

Clifford Greene, who has been seriously ill, is slowly recovering.

Rev. and Mrs. Charles Gates left Saturday for Maine, where they will spend the summer.

Charles Kittredge has taken a position with the Knox Automobile Company in Springfield.

WALES.

Mrs. Carrie Gardner of East Douglas is the guest of her niece, Mrs. A. A. Hubbard.

Fred Robichand has moved from Church street to the Eaton place on the Stafford road.

Miss Nona Howe of Springfield has been spending the week as the guest of Miss Winona Shaw.

Mrs. Fayette Needham and her daughter Rachel of Athol are visiting Mr. and Mrs. John Coy.

An army tent belonging to L. H. Thompson was taken from the orchard opposite his house last Friday night

Mrs. M. Rourke and Miss Ada Rourke have been spending the week with Rev. and Mrs. E. B. Dolan in Holyoke.

Souvenir post card invitations will be out soon for the annual Old Home Day picnic to be held in Shaw's grove August 3d.

Mr. and Mrs. William Noble of Killingby, Ct., are in town on account of the serious illness of Mrs. Noble's father, Herman Reinhardt.

Mrs. Edith Kennedy, Miss Eileen and Lincoln Kennedy of Medford are spending the summer at the lake at the home of Mrs. Kennedy's father, B. S. Baker.

Mrs. Charles T. Holt was thrown from her buggy Monday morning. She was returning from Brimfield and had nearly reached home, when the horse became frightened by an automobile and upset the buggy and ran a short distance. Neither Mrs. Holt nor the horse were injured, but the buggy was badly damaged.

Unusual Death at Ware.

Arm Cut By Sickle, and Air Gets Into Veins, Reaching Heart.

James B. Rose, 41, of Ware, died Saturday afternoon in the Ware hospital as the result of a most unusual accident. Death was caused by embolism, or air getting into the veins and working back to the heart valves, causing quick death.

Saturday morning about 10 Mr. Rose went to Aspen Grove cemetery, carrying a sickle, with which he intended to cut the grass on a lot there. While on his way he came upon some boys playing baseball. The ball was knocked toward him and he reached up his hands to catch it. In doing so his wrist came in contact with the sickle, which cut through to the bone. He returned to his home where he collapsed. He was removed to the hospital by Dr. L. E. Dionne, who, with the assistance of Dr. M. W. Pearson, closed the wound. Mr. Rose rallied from the operation and was able to walk to his bed. About 4 in the afternoon he died suddenly.

Mr. Rose was a well known resident of Ware, having conducted a marble-cutting establishment on Pleasant street. He had resided in Ware for the past 15 years. He is survived by his wife and four children. The funeral was held Monday afternoon at 2 in the home, Rev. Arthur Chase officiating. The bearers were J. T. Montgomery, George Emerson, John McElhenny, H. W. Byam, Thomas Lester and Samuel White, all members of Ware lodge of Odd Fellows. Burial was in Aspen Grove cemetery.

Palmer Town League.

Thorndike 7, Palmer 3.

Thorndike defeated Palmer at Thorndike Saturday afternoon, 7-3. Both teams fought hard and did not quit. Thorndike scored one in the first on a double, force out and two hits. Palmer scored in the second on a single, a double and an error. Neither team scored then until the fourth, when Thorndike sent three across on Jones' triple, a base on balls, wild pitch and a single, coupled with an error. Two more came in the sixth on Daley's double, two errors and Hurley's muff at home. Palmer added one in the seventh on two errors and a pass. Palmer got one more in the eighth on McLean's triple and an error, another error and a hit were lost in this round. Thorndike scored their last in the seventh on two hits, a pass and another error. ## SHOT THROUGH STOMACH.

Clarence M. Wing Hurt at Home In Greenville, S. C.

IS DOING WELL AND WILL RECOVER.

Heavy Revolver Fired at Close Range. By Miracle Ball Does Not Perforate Intestines.

Clarence M. Wing, a former Palmer boy, but for a number of years residing in Greenville, S. C., where he has varied business interests, was shot on Monday afternoon by a man who had recently been in his employ but had lately been discharged. The work was done with a 42-calibre revolver and the bullet entered the body from the front, just above the navel. In some miraculous manner however it was deflected and passed around to the left and down, lodging in the right hip; the intestines were not perforated, and Mr. Wing is doing nicely with every prospect of speedy recovery.

The attempted murder took place at Mr. Wing's quarry, about 12 miles out of Greenville, where he was stopping with his wife and daughter in a small bungalow used at times. About noon he received word that the man—Benson—was on the premises and drunk. The fellow left soon however and it was supposed he had gone for good. About 3.30 he suddenly appeared around one of the buildings. Mr. Wing could have shot him but did not, going to him and ordering him away. Benson's reply was the shot. After being wounded Mr. Wing grappled Benson and threw him, holding him until help came; he then telephoned for a doctor and the sheriff. A train from Greenville was due to pass in a few moments, and it was stopped and Mr. Wing taken on, then backed to the city with all possible speed. The patient arrived at the hospital 40 minutes after he was hurt, and 25 minutes later was off the operating table; he did not lose consciousness for a moment. The surgeons say that he will undoubtedly recover. He has a strong constitution, which is decidedly in his favor. Mr. Wing is a native of Palmer, son of the late A. T. Wing, and has many friends here who will be sorry to learn of his misfortune. His wife was Miss Ola Northrop, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Northrop of Central street, and they have one daughter.

Benson, who has served five years for killing a man, was taken to the jail in Greenville, where the guards were doubled over night for fear he would be lynched, threats of harm to him in case Mr. Wing did not recover being numerous.

HAMPDEN.

George Butterworth has sold his farm.

Mrs. J. R. Farrell of Springfield, with her two daughters, is spending a few weeks at Mrs. W. Chapin's cottage.

Michael Blanchard will repair and roof over a portion of the stone ruins of the old Lacowsic woolen mill and start a blacksmith shop there.

Capt. Perry of the Hampden baseball team, who was hurt while sliding for second base during the game July 4, will probably not play again this season. Two ligaments about the right knee were displaced.

The legislative recess committee visited Hampden last Friday afternoon. The party held a short meeting with citizens of the town under the elm tree in front of the Congregational church. C. C. Spellman of Springfield and W. J. Sessions of Hampden made short speeches. About 75 citizens were present.

WARE.

At a meeting of the school board Miss Mary J. King of Lynn was elected to the position of teacher of English in the high school to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Miss G. Evelyn Fisher.

A blaze in the tenement occupied by Michael Bruton in Albertine's block on Main street caused considerable excitement for a time Wednesday evening. William Horan, clerk at the Mansion House, rushed upstairs after the alarm was sounded and found Mrs. Bruton in a hysterical condition. He forced her out on the landing and with the aid of two other men took her to the Ware drug store, where she was attended by Dr. Pariseau. The blaze was extinguished by the clerks of the Imperial candy kitchen before the arrival of the department. The building and contents were only slightly damaged.

Confessions of a Tourist

Half the time in traveling one is dragged at such breakneck speed from one point of interest to another that one hasn't time to button one's shoes. The other half of the time one goes nearly mad from enforced inactivity.

Our two weeks in Japan was one frenzied flash of sight-seeing, at which we worked twelve hours a day. Charles was obsessed with a grim determination to "do" all that was to be done. At the end of the third day I was perfectly willing to take for granted every other Shinto temple and cherry tree and stone lantern in Japan.

Not until the ninth day did the worm turn. I had been trying to hint tactfully for some time that 12 hours a day of steady sightseeing was no more enjoyable than 12 hours a day of steady feasting, that one needed time in between to assimilate impressions; but my subtleties fell on deaf ears.

The eighth night we passed in a Japanese sleeper, a complicated form of torture not easily described. We dragged ourselves out at 6:30 in the morning after a sleepless night of torment, and began our weary round of sightseeing. It was at 6:30 that evening that the worm, which was I, turned.

I was hungry, tired, cold, wretched, bedraggled, with every nerve crying out for shelter; a hot bath, clean clothes and bed. The wind, which at all times blows bleak and dust laden in Japan, had been tugging all day at my hat and hair. When Charles said we would now visit the Sacred Island I replied:

"We will do no such thing. We will now go back to the hotel and have dinner and go to bed."

And we did.

We are now on shipboard, five days out from Yokohama, with the usual contrast of nothing to do except criticise our fellow-passengers.

Some time I am going to write a realistic account of Japan to offset the innumerable sentimental accounts that are in circulation. The first revelation I shall make is the fact, which the Lafcadio Hearn enthusiasts all ignore or overlook, that 97 per cent of the Japanese populace have colds in their heads and sniffle.

The usual sentimental gush, as you know, is this: "What wonderful little people the Japanese are! You know, they don't heat their houses; the bathe all the year around in the open air, and they wear the same clothes summer and winter!"

They do. And they all sniffle.

I will try to explain the Japanese idea of physical comfort. You arrive at a Japanese hotel for luncheon. The smiling proprietor and his staff greet you with a dozen bows apiece and indrawing of their breaths. You are ushered into a frigid mausoleum, which is the parlor. In half an hour luncheon will be served. In the meantime you pace up and down and wish you might discover a mirror or a washstand or a place to powder your nose.

Is anything lacking to your honorable comfort and pleasure? Ah, it shall be at once attended to! Suiting the action to the word, the proprietor ceremoniously bows himself out. Soon a damsel in kimono and wooden sandals shuffles into the room, knocks her forehead three times on the floor, draws in her breath and triumphantly places a sprig of cherry blossoms in a yellow vase!

The chief difference between home and Japan seems to be this: When our old crabapple trees and Thompson's two cherry trees bloom we remark: "How nice!" and go out and sniff at them enjoyably on Sunday afternoon and bring in a spray for the table. When two cherry trees bloom in Japan the mikado declares a national holiday, the whole nation goes en fete; the schools are dismissed, processions are held day and night; Japanese poets with fillets in their hair charge up and down the land, chanting their verses, and 600 American tourists photograph the phenomenon.

We landed in Tokyo in the midst of one of these festivals on a typically bleak, raw day while gusts of chill rain and wind swept the streets. A concourse of mad poets, school children, runners, wrestlers and other supernumeraries were lugging a Shinto temple through the streets, dancing and chanting around it and inditing peans of praise. They all looked blue and half frozen. And they all coughed or sniffled.

In the evening we saw a geisha dance. I am glad to have seen it. I am sure the first thing every woman I know who has been to Japan will say when she sees me is: "Oh, my dear, and did you see the geisha? Wasn't the dancing perfectly fascinating? The most charming thing, I believe, in Japan! But then, of course, all of Japan is charming, isn't it?"

I can reply, yes; I saw the geisha. Aside from that satisfaction I don't know why one should care to see them.

Imagine a line of shuffling boisters, with a sash around the middle of each, sliding out upon the stage on end and striking one deliberate, silly posture after another, while a side line of impassive objects, seated cross-legged on the floor, twang comb music and emit spasmodic caterwauls and you have the world-famous geisha.—Chicago Daily News.

Honest labor bears a lovely face.

School Attendance Average For Year.

The Journal published last week the record of attendance for the last month of the year of the town schools, but omitted the monthly average by grades which it has been accustomed to give. Instead, we give this week the average for the entire school year, as shown by the following table:

When Spring Comes

"Well, it's beginnin' to look a little like spring, ain't it?" ventured the groceryman as he tramped a muddy path across the kitchen floor and began dumping the supplies on the table. "I ain't seen no robin yet, like some of these guys that's writin' to the papers, but I kin sort o' feel it in my bones. Spring fever, I guess, huh?"

The pretty cook smiled disdainfully as she brought out the mop and started to clean up her floor.

"That's a good name to call it, I suppose," she said. "I know when my brothers back on the farm got so lazy they couldn't do anything but go fishing they used to talk about spring fever. But my poor old father had to do all the chores—he was too busy to have spring fever."

"That's the way—jump on me," said the groceryman mournfully. "Just when I thought prob'ly you'd get a little bit sentimental about the comin' of spring and matin' of birds and—and all that. Don't you never feel that way in the spring, Evelina? You know—like you ought to have a strong arm to lean on?"

"Any time I want a strong arm to lean on I know where to find one," retorted the pretty cook. "If you dont' want to feel a strong arm yourself you'll go along out of this kitchen and let me get my work done."

The groceryman sighed and moved slowly as far as the door with his box under his arm, but he kept his gaze on the pretty cook.

"I wisht I could think up some way of makin' you feel the way I do," he said gloomily, "so's you wouldn't hand me a bump like that every time I try to talk about somethin' besides groceries. I should think you'd want to look ahead a little bit and sort o' think where you'll be five years from now. Let's figger a little, Evelina, won't you?" he added, anxiously.

The pretty cook jerked the kettle off the stove and poised it menacingly, but the stream splashed into the dishpan a moment later, and the groceryman breathed more freely.

"If that's the way spring fever makes you talk,' she said, "you'd better go and see a doctor and get it out of your system. I'm too busy to do any figuring this morning, and that wagon load of groceries you've got out there in the street will get wilted if you don't hurry along with 'em. What are you waiting for, anyhow? We pay our grocery bill by the week, you know."

"I know," said the groceryman, edging slowly toward the door. "I ain't worryin' none about your bill. If you folks was to fall a little behind and the boss should mention it to me, Evelina, I'd just pay it myself on account of you, rather than say anything to your missus. Honest, I'd settle it up and work it all out if it took me six months. That's the kind of friend I am."

"What do I care?" said the maid, scornfully. "I shouldn't be surprised if it took you six months to earn what our grocery bill is every week—the prices that man you're working for is charging nowadays."

"Aw, now, I didn't expect you to get into the knockers' club about the prices,' protested the groceryman. "I've told you half a dozen times that we don't get the money! It's them farmers that's gettin' it all. Haven't you been readin' about 'em ridin' around in automobiles and havin' telephones from the house to the barn to give the hired man orders, and all that? Us folks are payin' for that swell business, and it's the poor grocer who gets the blame. That's just what I was thinkin' when it felt so balmy and springlike today—if I only had a nice little place in the country, with a few pigs an' calves—"

"You'd feel right at home, wouldn't you?" snapped the pretty cook. "That's where you'd shine. The pigs wouldn't mind how much you loafed—they're used to it, from al I've seen of pigs. And the calves wouldn't care how much noise you made—you could stand around and talk to them all day and not bother 'em a bit. But folks happen to have work to do, and if you get in their way you're likely to get into trouble."

The groceryman sighed again and slowly edged his way out to the back porch. But still he hesitated.

"I can't understand it," he mused aloud. "Now, to look at you, Evelina, anybody would think you was a real sentimental girl that would sympathize with a feller when he's feelin'—"

With a deft move the pretty cook stepped behind the door and closed it on the sentimental groceryman.—Chicago Daily News.

A Lover of Candor.

Impecunious Man—I wish you would be so kind as to loan me $5. I'll pay you back in a few days.

Candid Friend—If you had asked me for the loan in a candid and straightforward manner I would have lent you the money, but asking me in the way you did causes me to distrust you.

"I don't understand you."

"You asked me to be so kind as to lend you $5."

"Yes."

"If you had been candid you would have said to me: 'Be so stupid, be such an ignominious ass, such a hopeless idiot as to lend me $5, and you might have got it."

MODEL IN A DOUBLE SENSE

One Quality In Wax Figure Which Convinced Mr. Jones She Would Make a Good Wife.

Mr. Jones came home at an unseemly hour the other night, and was surprised to see Mrs. Jones sitting up for him below stairs with no other light than that of the gas lamp which faced the door to keep her company.

"M-M-Marie," he said, huskily, "y-you shouldn't sit up 'siate when I'm out on business."

As Mrs. Jones did not answer him, he continued, in an alarmed voice:

"Shorry, m'dear, but it's last time—tell you I'm sorry—won't shpeak to me?"

At this moment Mrs. Jones called from above stairs:

"Mr. Jones, to whom are you talking at this hour of the night?"

"Thash what I'd like to know m-m-myself,' stammered Jones.

Mrs. Jones hastened downstairs, lamp in hand. When she saw the situation, she laughed, in spite of being very angry.

"It's the model, she said. "The model I bought today to fit my dresses on!"

"Yes, thash so, said Jones, tipsily. "Model woman—didn't talk back. Make some fellow good wife."

The Result.

"What did the aviator do next when he flew into a high wind?" "I don't know, but I suppose he flew into a rage."

BRIMFIELD.

Tenth Wedding Anniversary.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Bissell observed the tenth anniversary of their marriage at their home Tuesday afternoon. About 80 were in attendance. Guests from out of town were Mrs. William Buckley of New Jersey, Mrs. J. W. Phelps and Mrs. Jennie Powers of Warren. Numerous gifts were received.

Miss Jennie Sumner has returned to Brimfield after spending several weeks in Spencer.

A pleasing feature of the Fourth was the raising of a flag on a staff 50 feet high on the highest point of land north of his house by John H. Noyes. The hill, which is about 800 feet above sea level, overlooks the village and the flag can be seen in all directions.

EAST BRIMFIELD.

Railroad Construction Started.

People are beginning to believe that the Southern New England railroad will really be built through this town. About 2000 feet of iron has been laid from the west side of the Holland road across land of W. O. Smith to the Quinnebaug river for the purpose of carrying gravel for filling. Twenty gravel cars and two railroad construction engines are here, and as soon as a steam shovel arrives railroad construction will begin in earnest.

Carl Stanger, Gilbert Favreau and Charles Farwell spent the Fourth in New York city.

W. C. Davenport and family are passing the summer at their cottage on the east side of Alum pond.

East Brimfield people sweltered in the intense heat of this week, when the mercury registered 96 to 104 in the shade from 1 to 3 in the afternoon almost every day; in addition to which it persisted in hanging around 80 all through the night.

Sees Little Real Progress.

Has the race progressed? Only, we are told, in the sense of acquiring a little more material comfort. Civilized man today is no more moral than the savage, no different from man in the earliest Stone Age. His only goal is that for which he started when the second ice age extinguished the lost Paradise—self-preservation. Progress is simply the artificial re-creation of the lost Paradise.—Exchange.

Ignorance.

Ignorance of books is not the greatest ignorance. Ignorance of the ways of peace, of kindness, of justice, of charity, of unselfishness and honesty, is the ignorance which works the most harm.

Misapprehending a Title.

He was barefooted, his trousers were fringed at the bottom, his face was dirty, his years eleven. He approached the librarian with a confident air:

"Got Shakespeare?"

"Yes. What volume would you like?"

At this he looked puzzled, and the librarian took him to an alcove where she showed him row upon row of Shakespeare. As he still looked puzzled at the number of volumes the librarian took one down "The Merchant of Venice" and gave it to him. He looked it over critically.

"Naw, that ain't the one I want the one about Jew willin' Mr. Hyde"—The Sunday Magazine.

Oldest Almanac.

The oldest almanac in existence is the "Almanach National, which has been issued by the French government since 1686. Its name has been changed a good many times during its career of 225 years. Originally the "Almanach Royal," it became "National" in 1793, "Imperial" in 1805, and reverted to its original name nine years later. Since then the title has been altered four times. Like most publications of this sort, the "Almanach National" has grown bulky with advancing years. The first issue contained 18 pages, as compared with 1,580 pages in the current issue.

RECORD OF A GREAT MEDICINE

Doctors Could Not Help Mrs. Templeton—Regained Health through Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound.

Hooper, Nebraska.—"I am very glad to tell how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped me. For five years I suffered from female troubles so I was scarcely able to do my work. I took doctors' medicines and used local treatments but was not helped. I had such awful bearing down pains and my back was so weak I could hardly walk and could not ride. I often had to sit up nights to sleep and my friends thought I could not live long. At my request my husband got me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I commenced to take it. By the time I had taken the seventh bottle my health had returned and I began doing my washing and was a well woman. At one time for three weeks I did all the work for eighteen boarders with no signs of my old trouble returning. Many have taken your medicine after seeing what it did for me. I would not take $1000 and be where I was. You have my permission to use my name if it will aid anyone."—Mrs. SUSIE TEMPLETON, Hooper, Nebraska.

The Pinkham record is a proud and peerless one. It is a record of constant victory over the obstinate ills of woman—ills that deal out despair. It is an established fact that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has restored health to thousands of such suffering women. Why don't you try it if you need such a medicine?

Tests of Friendship

There is a general idea that friendship is chiefly tested by adversity, that it is easy to retain our friends when things go well with us, but that they are likely to be driven off by our troubles. This is such an obvious and cheap cynicism, it has been expressed in so many tongues, has so often been crystallized into proverbs or fables the world over, that it hardly seems worth repeating. But one notable thing is usually overlooked—that it does not apply to friendship at all. It applies only to imitations of friendship.

It is the very nature of true friendship to thrive best in an atmosphere of trouble. Assuming that we are sincere, we all know that we are never drawn so closely to a friend as when he is in difficulties and needs us. It is easy to be his friend then, because that is just the condition that friendship loves; it is far more difficult to be his friend when he is prosperous and seems to have no need of us.

It may seem that this friendship in adversity is a very noble thing; certainly there may be much beauty, much tender self-sacrifice and loving service in its manifestation. But let us not flatter ourselves too easily.

The trouble of a friend makes its appeal to our vanity; we feel that we are needed, and this is always a gratifying knowledge; we feel that we are of importance and that is ever a pleasure to our self-esteem. But when everything is well with our friend, apparently he has what he wants and is independent of us. Naturally, that is a time when shams of friendship flourish, for their aim is to get and not to give; true friendship's aim is to get by giving.

Of course the difference in our friend's condition is really only superficial; he truly needs our friendship always, as much in prosperity as in trouble. But we are disconcerted by appearances; if we ever draw away from him, cool toward him, it is when he is in the sunshine, not when the clouds are around him. His prosperity may alienate us; his trouble calls us back to him. And this fact should cause us a very limited pride. Our attitude in his prosperity is the real test.

We may therefore say that a man's prosperity is the greatest trial of his friends—that is, of his true friends.

It ought to be true that friendship shares the joys as well as the sorrows of life, but in the case of the joys the sharing is more difficult. It is not difficult to go about seeking pleasure together, to travel, to have a good time together; it is not difficult to share each other's love of art or music or literature or science. Comradeship in these things may become very close, very stimulating and satisfying; but mere comradeship, good fellowship is not quite enough for friendship.

Can we be truly glad when our friend is doing better than we are in any one of these pursuits, when he succeeds, while, perhaps, we are doing poorly, when he wins applause that is denied us? Is it not easy to think that his success is a little beyond measure and ours is a little below? Or if fortune comes to him as it has never come to us; if riches are poured into his hands, so that he can gain whatever money will purchase and do whatever he has a mind to; is it then so easy to remain his loyal and devoted friend, assuming that we are far above any desire to sponge upon his wealth? Can we bring ourselves, in proper spirit, to accept his help instead of having the proud joy of giving help? Are we not liable to imagine an air of superiority in him?

Our very self-respect renders us sensitive, quick to be hurt, apt to imagine that his prosperity has changed our friend for the worst. It may be possible that it has; which proves that he never needed our friendship more. For prosperity is the supreme test of a man, because its tendency is to enervate and weaken; adversity rouses and rallies all that is strongest in us.

Selfishly, we like our friend to be worse off than we are; to be in need of our better natures. The good things cling to us; it is merely a perversion of our better natures. The good things in us may so easily be wrongly employed. The true friendship, because the more unselfish, may be shown when our friend does not appear to need us, when he can give to us rather than we to him. It is not always more blessed to give than to receive; sometimes the position is reversed. Besides which there are more ways of giving than one, and the prosperous friend may really be in sore want of our sympathy, our tender affection and counsel; he may also long for our acceptance of that which it will be a joy to him to expend upon us. To give nobly is a very fine thing; it is an equally fine thing to accept nobly.

It is easy to be true to our friend when he is in trouble, when he is down, when others fly from him, when others despise and neglect him. The response to such a call is one of friendship's deepest joys. But in times when we can do nothing for him, when he makes no claim upon us, when he is in the sunshine and all things go well with him—it is then that the sifting of our friendship comes. If we can pass the test of his prosperity we need not be much afraid of his adversity. This is what is meant to be his friend through thick and thin.

Penny wise, pound foolish.

Blighting a Social Career

Mrs. Trumbull's social aspirations were, as a rule, the source of much flippant joy to her husband. It was only when Trumbull himself was called upon to shine at dinner parties or disport in drawing rooms that he ceased to consider in the light of a joke his wife's desire to set her small feet firmly upon the next higher rung of the ladder.

The cream of the joke looked to him particularly pale and blue the evening she announced triumphantly that Mrs. Fulton, the one wealthy woman of their acquaintance, had invited the Trumbulls to sit in her box at the opera the following Thursday evening.

"I'm perfectly willing for you to spend your nights and Sundays pursuing the aristocracy to its lair," protested Trumbull, "but you know I'm not a parlor pet. I'm all right as a means of support, but I'm sure to make a donkey of myself if I try to do the society act. Can't you go alone?"

Mrs. Trumbull set her lips. "That would be impossible," she said. "But, of course, if you don't want to go I can tell Mrs. Fulton that you have a business engagement that will prevent our going."

It was not until her lips began to quiver that Trumbull realized how much it meant to her. He promised to go.

The night of the theater party the weather turned cold. Trumbull, in blissful forgetfulness of the festivity, entered the house in a whirl of snow and icy wind.

"Is that you, dear?" cried Mrs. Trumbull from upstairs, where she was fluttering about getting Trumbull's evening regalia ready for him to put on.

"Yep," responded Trumbull, following the sound of her voice up the stairs.

His face fell when he saw the clothes lying on the bed. "Oh!" he ejaculated in a voice from which all joy had fled. "I'd forgotten this was the evening of the blowout." He shivered audibly. "It's an awful night."

Mrs. Trumbull tripped over to the dresser and began a search for his tie. "I ordered a taxi," she said, cheerily. "It's to be here promptly at a quarter to eight."

In the taxicab Mrs. Trumbull looked at her husband in undisguised satisfaction.

"You'll be the best looking man there," she purred. "I don't care if Mr. Fulton's ancestors did come over with the pilgrim fathers and if they do have a butler and five maids and a governess, he's nothing but a little, dried-up shrimp. Anybody seeing you two together won't hesitate a minute about selecting you as the one with the money."

The spontaneity of this wifely tribute pleased Trumbull. He even grew less sleepy under the enlivening influence of her honeyed words. However, this didn't prevent his having a fleeting wish as he seated himself in the chair just behind his hostess that he had had another strong cup of coffee. Of course he wasn't really sleepy, but a cold wind always gave him a queer feeling.

Mrs. Trumbull, glancing at his big, well-groomed figure and his clever, good-natured face, and now and then catching the low, well-bred tones of his voice, felt that it would take very little more to make her sinfully proud of him. Every interested glance cast up from the seats below them sent a separate thrill of delight through her. She was fairly radiant.

When the first act was about half over her satisfaction was dispelled by an all too familiar sound. She cast a terrified glance toward the rear of the box. What she saw caused her to start wildly to her feet. Too late!

Trumbull's head had fallen to one side, his eyes were closed, his mouth was open. A sound closely resembling the distant rumbling of a railroad train came from his parted lips. From a rumble it quickly grew into a very good imitation of an automobile horn. Higher and higher it rose, until the startling crescendo broke in a fierce, choking leviathan of a snore!

The host jumped to his feet with the obvious intention of rendering first aid to the injured. The hostess gave a sharp, quite involuntary shriek. Mrs. Trumbull stonily fixed her unseeing eyes upon the glittering stage. Trumbull, awakened by the vociferation, but unconscious of the cause of his awakening and considerably refreshed by his little nap, sat looking about for the cause of the disturbance, with the frank, innocent, interested eyes of a child.

Mrs. Trumbull devotes most of her time now to settlement work. She regards the empty life of the society woman with a scornful pity.

Legal Length of Hatpins.

Any woman that appears in public in the state of Michigan wearing a hatpin that is more than 10 inches long is guilty of a felony and may be fined $500, imprisoned for two years, or both. George Lord, of Detroit, is the author of this law, introducing it as an amendment to the law forbidding the carrying of dangerous weapons. He thought it would be taken as a joke, but it was taken so seriously that it passed both houses without a dissenting vote.

Marriage is a desperate thing.

BELCHERTOWN.

Death of E. S. Hopkins.

E. S. Hopkins died at his summer home in Canada Sunday after a long illness of rheumatism. He was about 70 years old and had lived in Belchertown practically all his life. His mother was a member of the Bridgman family. For the past several months, because of his health, he had spent his time near Boston. Mrs. Hopkins died about 10 years ago. Two sons, Dr. Samuel B. Hopkins of Brooklyn and Harry A. Hopkins of Belchertown, survive, both of whom were with him at the end. The body was brought to Belchertown for burial in the family lot Wednesday.

WARREN.

Special Town Meeting.

A special town meeting was held Monday evening, with 100 voters present. It was voted to build a new highway to be laid out by the county commissioners over land owned by the Boston and Albany railroad, James T. Cutler, Ellen F. Cutler, Warren Steam Pump Company and George C. Bridges, and to authorize the town treasurer to borrow for the purpose $550, to be paid in 10 annual installments. This includes cost of construction, land damages and expenses of the county commissioners. It was then voted to accept $2500 as a gift from George Bridges, the Boston and Albany railroad and the Warren Steam Pump Company to be applied to the expense of construction in addition to that borrowed by the town. The construction of the road will necessitate building high granite or cement retaining walls. It was voted to give the Warren Watering Cart Company $20 for sprinkling the streets about the town hall and the public library during the summer. It was voted to accept a piece of land containing about 7800 feet adjoining Pine Grove cemetery as a gift from Albert P. and Edgar W. Butterworth to be used for ornamental purposes.

Struck By Lightning.

A chimney on a house on River street, occupied by Fred Barton, was struck by lightning Tuesday afternoon. All the chimney was knocked to the ground except a few inches at the base. Miss Edith M. Brown, who was passing the house, was struck on the head by one of the bricks and received a serious gash. She was taken to the office of Dr. J. E. Dalton, where the wound was dressed. There was no rainfall in Warren during the electrical storm, but West Warren was favored with a fall for nearly 15 minutes.

Runaway, But No One Hurt.

Mrs. H. F. Healey, who lives three miles east of Warren on the Sturbridge road, met with an accident while driving into town last Friday. When near the home of Nathan E. Ball, the horse stepped on a stone and fell, breaking the shaft. Mrs. Healey jumped out and called for help, but no one heard her. She then started to unhitch the horse, which suddenly jumped up and started to run. It continued until it reached the village, where it was stopped at the rear of Fairbanks & Curtis' store.

Narrow Escape.

Richard Stanton narrowly escaped serious injuries Tuesday afternoon while working on a ditch for Jerome Gould on Southbridge street. He had the ditch about five feet deep and was down on his knees when the sides suddenly caved in. He was covered with the dirt. John Smith, who was working with him, succeeded in digging him out and he was none the worse for his experience. He considers his escape due largely to the fact that he was face down and got no earth in his mouth or eyes.

Death of James G. Barnes.

James Garfield Barnes, 30, died Saturday evening at his home on Crescent street after several months' illness. He was born in Hubbardston October 12, 1881, the son of John R. and Flora Barnes. He had lived in Warren for about two years and was employed by the Warren Steam Pump Company. He is survived by a widow and three young daughters. The funeral was held Tuesday afternoon at 2, Rev O. I. Darling officiating.

Bur Chinese Hens.

It would appear that the hens of China find life more real and earnest than enjoyable, for, it is said, when not hatching out broods of their own kind, the additional and novel task of hatching fish eggs is thrust upon them. Chinese owners of hens collect fish spawn, introduce it into empty eggshells, hermetically seal them and place them under the deceived and conscientious hen. In due time the shells are removed and the spawn, now warmed into life, is emptied into a shallow pool. Here the fish which appear are nursed and guarded until strong enough to be turned into a lake or stream, and subsequently add to the edible resources of the people.

PROTECT THE CHILDREN.

In a few short weeks the schools of the town will open again, and then between 400 and 500 children of all ages from 6 to 16 will be in attendance at the Palmer grammar building. Along Park street, on which the building is located and in which many of the children will play, scores of autos will pass during school hours, and the tendency to fast driving is well known. Would it not be a material safeguard to erect at a reasonable distance each side of the school building, a sign, sufficiently large to be plainly seen, "Autos drive carefully—school building ahead," or something similar? This is done in some places, and should serve to call the attention of many autoists to a dangerous condition which would otherwise be unknown to them.

A MURDER trial which has broken all the records in a country where trials are noted for their length, was ended in Italy on Monday, when all but two of the famous Camorrists were found guilty. The crime for which they were tried was the murder of a man and his wife on June 6, 1906; the trial began March 11, 1911, and continued for a year and almost a third. Because of the alleged membership in a criminal organization and apparent high standing of some of the prisoners, who had traveled extensively, and were educated and had plenty of funds, the trial attracted more attention in all parts of the world than any other ever known.

ONE of the effects of the hot spell of the past week—it could hardly be attributed to anything else—was a suggestion from Progressives in Washington that both Taft and Roosevelt withdraw from the presidential race and allow the naming of a third person, satisfactory to both branches of the Republican party. Needless to say that it died a-borning. The former couldn't if he would, and the latter wouldn't under any circumstanees—just yet.

WITH all the bluster and talk of a new third party does any close student of the situation really believe it will ever be born? The Journal makes the prediction that, when noses are finally counted, it will be found that there are not enough who will support the would-be leader through thick and thin to make a respectable showing in November compared with the old parties, and that some good "reason" will be found for not making the running.

THE fact that steers are averaging 37 pounds less in weight than formerly is solemnly given as one reason for the advanee in the price of beef. Apparently the producer must have so mueh per animal, regardless of weight. On this basis a further possible shrinkage of a few pounds is not to be regarded with complaceney in view of the already severe strain on the pocketbook.

THE rain of last evening was a welcome relief from the heat and dust of the preceding six days. To be sure, it did some damage to the roads, but it washed the face of nature clean of the dust and grime of weeks, freshened up the atmosphere and did a vast amount of good to the erops, and for these we are all duly grateful.

RESIDENTS on North Main street are wondering if they'll ever, ever, EVER get the dust out of their houses which sifted in during the drying out of the street preparatory to repairs to the macadam, and find an answer in the "Hardly ever" of Pinafore.

THE recent advance in the cost of beef has brought it up to where the price to the retailer by the earcass is as mueh or more then some of us who are not so very old have paid for the best cuts in the animal.

WE are holding our own pretty well, thank you, in the Olympic games at Stoekholm. At the close of yesterday's program Ameriea held the lead with a score of 88 points, Sweden being seeond with 62.

THERE'LL be no kick over the reduction of the tax rate this year. And at that, we seem to have secured a pretty fair return for the appropriations if they were eut down a noteh.

MORE hot weather is promised for next week. We can do without it.

Changes in Teaching Force.

Resignations Received, Appointments to Fill Vacancies.

The school committee held a meeting Tuesday evening and received the resignations of several of the teaehers reappointed a few weeks ago. Appointments were made to fill the vaeaneies, and some transfers were made, the detailed aetion being as follows: Resignations aecepted—Miss Jennie M. Linton, teaeher of English at the high school; Miss Clara A. Holmes, grade 5, Three Rivers; Miss Julia G. Daley, grades 3 and 4, Thorndike; Miss Margaret Bradley, grade 6, Palmer. The following teaehers were appointed: Clarence W. Lombard, seienee teacher at the high sehool; Miss S. Leola Franklin, a graduate of Westfield normal school, grade 6, Palmer; Miss Gertrude A. Walsh, Westfield normal, grade 5, Three Rivers; Miss Mary I. Hartnett, Westfield normal, grades 3 and 4, Thorndike; Miss Clara L. O'Connor, Westfield normal, grades 1 and 2, Wire Mill district. Miss Agnes Mahoney, transferred from grade 7 to grade 8, Palmer grammar school; Miss Mary E. Quirk, transferred from Wire Mill to Bondsville grammar sehool. The eoal eontraet for Bondsville was awarded to Brown Bros., and for the rest of the town to W. F. Fillmore.

Boys Scouts Will Camp Out.

Start Next Monday For a Hike and a Week in the Open.

Palmer troop No. 1 of the Boy Scouts of America is planning for a six-days' camping trip to Lake Florence in Wales, in charge of Scout Master Roscoe C. Adams. They will leave next Monday morning and will "hike" both ways, returning Saturday afternoon. The program of the week in camp includes many games and athletic contests and the boys are manifesting much enthusiasm in the organization. The Palmer troope consists of 24 boys between the age of 12 and 18, who are under the leadership of Scout Master Roscoe C. Adams and Assistant Scout Master Earl Linnell.

No Scarcity of Water.

Palmer Water Company Has Both Its Reservoirs Full.

Any fears which may have arisen as to a scareity of water on account of the long dry spell and the laek of rain may be set aside, for unless some unforeseen calamity occurs to empty the reservoirs there will be plenty to last through the summer. A visit to the reservoirs of the company yesterday found both full, a most unusual condition for this time of year and one which has never obtained before. The combined capacity of the two reservoirs is about 15,000,000 gallons, and the company's contract with the fire district requires it to maintain 1,600,000 gallons at all times.

Forest Lake Attractions.

The Carter Troubadors have been the attraction at Forest Lake this week, and have been giving a good show. Wednesday evening there was a display of fireworks which was unusually good. The management is certainly trying hard to satisfy its patrons. The attraetions hereafter will be of an unusually high order, it is announeed. To-morrow there will be a grand free exhibition drill by the Spencer Guards of Honor; on Sunday there will be a free attraetion in the pavilion. In the theatre next week will be a high-class musieal comedy, and in front of the pavilion all through the week will be seen the three original diving girls, who will perform various aquatic feats. These young ladies have been performing at Revere Beaeh for three years, and are headed by Miss Anne Morecroft, who is called the little Annette Kellerman.

Cheap Trip to Seashore.

The Central Vermont railroad is offering a unusually low rate for a round-trip between Palmer and New London, which is not generally known. The fare one way is $1.80, and the round-trip rate is only $1.90. To get this however passengers must go and return the same day and must use the "Limited." This train leaves Palmer at 5.35 in the morning, reaching New London at 8; returning it leaves New London at 8.05 in the evening, reaching Palmer at 10.20, this gives 12 hours at the shore. The down trip is made in the cool of the day and the train stops only at Stafford, Willimantic and Norwich.

Change in Electric Express Agency.

Fred M. Ralton, who has had the local management of the Eleetric Express Company since its establishment several years ago, has resigned that position and is succeeded by John Stevens, who has been a starter in the street railway office. Mr. Ralton has moved the office of his trucking business from the electric express office on South Main street to the Dr. Holbrook office building near the Elms house, and will devote his entire time to the management of the Palmer Trucking and Ice Company. He will retain the services of C. E. Fish.

Republican Convention Photograph.

An unusually large photograph of the Republican national eonvention at Chicago is on exhibition in the window of the Kinsley Pharmacy on Main street. The photo is remarkably clear, and was taken by flashlight. It is the property of David F. Dillon of Palmer, who was one of the alternates from this congressional distriet.

A Hot Week.

The mercury for the past week—beginning last Saturday—has hung around the 100 mark nearly every day, Monday and Tuesday being the worst; on Monday it was reported to have been 104 in the shade for a short time. A hard shower about 6.45 last evening eleared the atmosphere somewhat, and to-day has been more comfortable.

Did Not Have Auto Registered.

C. W. Chamberlin appeared in the distriet eourt Monday morning on complaint of a state offieial, the charge being that of operating an automobile which had not been properly registered. He pleaded guilty and paid a fine of $10.

The Walcott—Cameron furniture bloek on North Main street is receiving a eoat of paint externally.

There will be installation of offieers of Court Palmer, F. of A., next Tuesday evening. The court will not meet again until Aug. 20.

The funeral of Mrs. James Thomson was held at her home near the carpet mill Saturday afternoon at 3, Rev. O. S. Raspe officiating. Burial was in No. 1 cemetery, Monson.

Two Poles living on Water street were before the distriet eourt Monday in an assault ease, one as complainant and the other as defendant. The ease was continued until September 3.

The Woman's Relief Corps members, with their children, will hold a basket picnic next Thursday at the home of Mrs. Calkins. The party will leave Palmer on the 9.15 eleetrie ear and get off at the Calkins sawmill in East Wilbraham.

Thirteen are scheduled to take the examination to-morrow for the position of assistant clerk and carrier in the local post office. The greater portion are from out of town and some from out of the state, who take the examination for the experienee.

A leak in a water pipe leading into the basement of the store of J. S. Knox & Co. on Main street necessitated the digging up of the brick paving in the street in order to make repairs. The work was done for the Palmer Water company by the E. Brown Co.

Mrs. James Connor, 67, died at the home of her son on Main street Monday after a long illness. She leaves her son, James Connor, who is em-employed on the street railway. The funeral was held Wednesday morning and burial was in St. Thomas' cemetery.

There is a good attendance at the meetings held in the gospel tent at Palmer Center every evening. There is speaking by the different pastors and special music. There are children's meetings in the afternoon. The students under the leadership of Rev. Mr. Cook of Pittsfield are doing good work.

The 5000 Chinook salmon which were recently placed in the rearing pools at the Forest Lake fish hatchery are thriving fast, and although but a few months old disclose their nature as "leapers," for which they are noted, by jumping above water at eventide, and woe to any insect which comes too close to the surface.

The funeral of Edward McDonnell Jr., who died last week Wednesday, was held Sunday afternoon at 1.30 at the home of his parents, Rev. Otto S. Raspe officiating. The bearers were Robert Huggard, Martin Huggard, Jesse Lever, Arthur Hall, Albert Ayers and John Dalton. Burial was in Oak Knoll cemetery.

Mrs. Clara Johnson of Converse street has taken the agency for an extensive line of Wilton rugs, art squares, Wilton and ingrain carpet, Smyrna rugs, art rugs and squares, stair carpets and hall runners, and will be pleased to show samples at her home. The goods are manufactured by one of the largest mills in the country, and are fully guaranteed.

The changes being made in the office of the Central Massachusetts Electric company in the Commereial block are practieally completed, and the company will soon be back in larger and more convenient quarters than heretofore. The immense new sign, "Use Electrie Light and Power," has been installed and is on duty every night until 11 o'eloek. It gives the offiee a deeidedly metropolitan aspect, and aids materially in lighting up the street at that point, a feature much appreciated by electrie car patrons, as the terminals of the several lines are within the spaee illuminated by the sign.

Japanese Dentistry.

There are mighty few fancy touches to the manner in which the Japanese native dentists conduct their business. The victim is seated on the ground, the dentist bends over him and forces his left hand between the patient's jaws in such a manner that the mouth cannot possibly be closed. Then the dentist grabs the doomed tooth between the thumb and forefinger of the right hand and with one deft wrench yanks it out.

Passing of the "Writing Masters."

One sometimes regrets the passing of the "writing master of the schools of the last century, for even in these days of typewriting the signature must be handwritten. There seems to be a sort of slap-dash conceited belief among the users of type machines that everybody can recognize his personal signature. This is an unfounded belief, and in a drawer by his side there are letters signed—by unknown persons who have never learned to write their name. Their bankers may possibly recognize the hieroglyphic. But it would ease matters if the user of the type machine would learn to write his own name distinctly. We are not all everybody's bankers.

The Best Eating.

The best things which ye eat are those ye earn yourselves or which your children earn.—Mohammed.

Meeting Mrs. Fleming

Gerber is a bachelor. When his bosom friend Fleming suddenly married a girl unknown to Gerber, married without the slightest preliminary warning, Gerber felt hurt. He was in Shanghai when the news reached him. Smothering his feelings, he cabled his congratulations. Then he wrote, promising to drop in on the Flemings the very first moment he landed in Chicago.

Mrs. Fleming was anxious to know Gerber. She had heard all about the old school days, the tricks, the summer evening larks, the swimming hole and the pasture lot athletics. She felt as though she knew Gerber and would instantly recognize him, even though Will had no picture of his chum to show her.

Time went on regardless of matrimony and friendship. The business in Shanghai proved long drawn out. When a year and a half had passed Fleming had ceased talking about his boyhood days and Gerber's arrival was a mislaid hope. Fleming put in all his spare time amusing William Fleming, Jr.

On the memorable night that Mrs. Fleming was called away to her mother's, at the other end of the city, Fleming was alone with his son and heir, his pipe and papers and memories.

The son and heir went to sleep. Fleming's pipe was drawing well and the memories slowly crept out of the years. It was just then that Gerber walked in.

The two old friends skimmed briefly over the main events of their history and Gerber was about to begin on his oriental experience when Fleming interrupted him.

"Just hold on a minute. I'll telephone Mildred that you are here. She's perfectly crazy to know you."

Fleming started for the nearest drug store to telephone. He no sooner had closed the door behind him than a fretful murmur from some corner of the flat caught Gerber's ear. Almost immediately the fretful murmur became a wail.

Gerber, panic-stricken, made one jump for his hat, put it on and started to escape. But a blood-curdling roar made him turn desperately toward the noise.

A baby! Fleming had a baby! What did one do for a dying infant and where was the fool father?

Gerber's knowledge of babies came slowly from the comic pictures in the newspapers. You picked them up and walked with them.

Gerber tried this with shaking hands. It worked like a charm. Round and round the flat went Gerber. On the twenty-second round, just as he swung with graceful stride toward the parlor, the door opened and a natty hatted, gowned and gloved young woman stood blinking dazedly at the interior of her home.

Gerber surmised that the young woman was Mrs. Fleming. He was sure of it when, with flashing eyes, she demanded: "What are you doing with my baby?"

Gerber stared helplessly. "I heard him crying and I thought I'd pick him up," he explained hesitatingly.

"Oh, you thought you'd pick him up!" cried Mrs. Fleming, her mind one gallery of newspaper headlines, pictures of kidnapers and "black hand" murderers. This dark, olive skinned, smooth faced tall man, with the soft slouch hat—

For one awful second Mrs. Fleming's heart stopped beating. Then with lightning swiftness she was at the library table and her hand touched her husband's brand new gun. She pointed it straight at the head of the man.

"Put that baby on the couch!" she ordered.

Gerber obeyed and then opened his mouth to explain.

"Don't move or make a sound. I'll fire if you do!" commanded the woman with the gun.

Gerber flushed and stood motionless.

Fleming found an interesting tableau on his return. A rigid Gerber, a deathly pale wife with a shining new gun rigidly poised and a sweetly slumbering infant.

"What the—Mildred! What in heaven's name are you doing with that gun? Put it down! This is Gerber. Gerber, you know. I went out to call you up to tell you to come home and meet him. Your mother said you had just left. I stopped in to get some cigars and—"

Gerber began to gurgle something. Mrs. Fleming gave a sudden lurch and with a "Well! The baby!" crumpled up on the library table.

Fleming gave one look at Gerber and then at the sleeping infant. Then he threw up his hands. "Gerber, I clean forgot the kid," he cried.

Would Save the Trees.

Mrs. Helen G. Longstreet is working hard to save the forests of Georgia, and is making speeches in the state to get money to carry on the work. She would have the state build dams in different parts of the state to provide power for mills. Mrs. Longstreet is very much interested in the work of Mr. Gifford Pinchot in the direction of conservation, and wishes to help him as much as possible.

Going as if he trod upon eggs.

Her Disarranging Plans

"How nice to meet you, Martha Shaw!" exclaimed the little woman with her hat awry as she sank into the vacant seat on the elevated train beside a serene faced young woman. "I suppose you also are bound on that necessary errand. Don't you absolutely dread Christmas shopping?"

"Not in the least, you funny Josie Graham," Mrs. Shaw answered with a superior air, "I don't believe in rushing madly around at the eleventh hour to select gifts that invariably prove unsuitable and oftentimes are unappreciated. I'm giving only to my Sunday school class and the children in the family. For the girls I have made dainty little fancy things during the summer; for the children I bought books away back in September. Today I'm going downtown to lunch with a dear friend."

"Fortunate creature!" Mrs. Graham sighed, enviously, another wrinkle appearing in her forehead as she opened her bag, drew forth a list and hurriedly added another line of cramped writing. "I've just remembered that I must get something for the little girl next door. Last year her mother sent the baby a book, and, of course, she'll expect something for Betty this year."

"Don't you think that is a wrong conception of the Christmas spirit, giving because one gets?" Mrs. Shaw asked. "I never will be a party to such a mercenary arrangement."

"It doesn't seem quite right, but I hate to hurt any one's feelings by seeming to slight her," Mrs. Graham replied, looking out of the window anxiously. "Mercy! How this train crawls. I know I won't have time to buy half the things on my list."

"I wish I could persuade you to try my plan," Mrs. Shaw said. "Outside the children and the Sunday school class not a single soul will receive anything from me but a card expressing a Christmas sentiment. You know, that is the custom abroad, and it is a very convenient and pretty one."

"But I'd feel awfully embarrassed on receiving gifts, especially if they happened to be things I really wanted, knowing that I had sent the donor merely a trifling card," Mrs. Graham demurred. "Wouldn't you feel embarrassed under similar circumstances?"

"Not in the least," Mrs. Shaw answered, placidly.

Mrs. Graham looked dubious as she removed a needle from the front of her shirt waist and picked a strand of red silk thread from her skirt. "If one could only make up one's mind to begin one's Christmas work early in the year!" she mused. "Some of my friends did and— That reminds me; can you keep a secret? I can't, I'm afraid. When we were at the lake last summer Mrs. Kemper knit you the most exquisite pale pink porch shawl for a Christmas gift."

"How sweet of her!" Mrs. Shaw exclaimed delightedly. "And pink, too! She knows that pink is my favorite color." A thoughtful look came into her eyes.

At the next stop the two arose and left the car together, parting when they reached the sidewalk.

Late in the afternoon when Mrs. Graham paused beside a handkerchief counter she bumped elbows with Mrs. Shaw, who was frantically inspecting the contents of various boxes. Her calm appearance of the morning had vanished and she was disheveled and wild eyed.

"If it isn't the luckiest thing to meet you now!" Mrs. Shaw exclaimed. "Do you think Mrs. Kemper would like a lace handkerchief for a gift? I've racked my brains and I can't think of another thing. There, that's my bundle that dropped—all these are mine. I must have them made into one. You never know when you'll get things if you have them sent at this busy season.

"But I thought——" began Mrs. Graham wonderingly.

"Something fine and exquisite, of course," Mrs. Shaw said. "She has taken so many love-stitches for me in the pink shawl. By the way, I had a delightful visit today with my friend. She brought me an exquisite centerpiece, her own handiwork. I've just bought her a dainty short silk kimono. I met Mrs. Horton after I left you; she said that Fanny had made me the sweetest little Irish crochet jabot; I just love them. I got Fanny a belt buckle—young girls love pretty things.

"I think this is the prettiest handkerchief. It is the last thing I'm going to buy today. I'm completely worn out, aren't you? I'm going to run down again tomorrow and buy the other gifts. I caught a glimpse of my brother Jack's wife at the fancy work counter matching a cord to a pillow top that I know is for me; I have always openly admired hers. I think I'll give Jenny and Jack a piece of cut glass; they are starting housekeeping, you know."

"Haven't your Christmas plans become a little disarranged, my dear?" Mrs. Graham asked, unkindly.

"No, indeed," Mrs. Shaw returned quickly, giving her hat a push which landed it over the left eye instead of the right. She held out her hand encased in a soiled white kid glove for her package and added with dignity, "I am simply elaborating on my plans."

A good poet's made as well as born.

THRONG OF BUYERS CONTINUE.

Special Half-Price Brings Many Patrons To J. P. Lynde's.

The people of Palmer and vicinity appreciate the great advantage J. P. Lynde obtained for them, in getting the Dr. Howard Co. to allow the regular 50 cent size of Dr. Howard's specific, for the cure of constipation and dyspepsia, to be sold at half-price, 25 cents, and have bought hundreds of bottles.

Unlike ordinary medicines for constipation and dyspepsia, the dose of Dr. Howard's specific is reduced after a few day's use and the cure is soon complete and lasting.

If you have not already taken advantage of this chance to get a month's medical treatment for 25 cents, be sure to call at J. P. Lynde's to-day, for he has only a small amount of the speeific on hand.

Ages Add Garments.

Centuries ago, as Sir Walter Scott says, in "Ivanhoe," men wore one thickness of clothes, whether of wool, leather or velvet. The shirt was invented, but for a long time was worn only by the nobility and gentry. Then followed the waistcoat, breeches and, later on, trousers. The overcoat, which succeeded the medieval cloak, was rare until the seventeenth century.

Monson News.

Concerning a Former Monson Boy.

A recent issue of the New York Journal of Commerce contained the following, which will be of interest to Monson people for the reason that Mr. Converse was a Monson boy, son of Mrs. Welcome Converse, well known in Monson:

At the stockholders' meeting of Converse & Co., held yesterday, the following directors were elected: Everett H. Converse, Frederick K. Rupprecht, Frederick R. Downes, Leo H. Wise and Charles G. Todd. The directors elected the following officers: Frederick K. Rupprecht, president; Frederick R. Downes, vice president; Charles G. Todd, treasurer.

Everett H. Converse, who relinquished the presidency of Converse & Co. yesterday, still retaining a first position on the board of directors and his full interest in the business, is to devote most of his time to a well-earned rest on a farm he recently purchased in Connecticut. This action is in accordance with an agreement he made with his younger partners five years ago when the last partnership and corporate arrangements were arrived at, but he will continue to attend the regular meetings of the directors and keep in touch with the trade of the house. Mr. Converse is one of the oldest cotton goods merchants in the trade in point of service, although he is still on the safe side of 70, and the "call of the soil" has been appealing to him for many years. He has maintained a high standard of personal and commercial integrity in a long business career, and his gentleness, coupled with a manly firmness, inspired many friendships that will be cherished by his fellow merchants for years to come.

To Improve Mail Service.

That the train and mail service on the Central Vermont railway is to be improved very soon is welcome news to Monson people. Since the change in time of trains, which took place three weeks ago, there has been no outgoing mails until 11.05 a. m., and but one incoming mail in the morning. At a meeting of the public utilities commission in Hartford this week, the officials of the railroad were notified that the service must be improved, and it is understood that a morning train at about 7 o'clock going north and a south-bound train at about 1.30 will be put on, the exact time having not been definitely decided upon.

Clerks Get Half Holiday.

The assessors have finished their work on the 1912 tax levy and have turned their books over to the collector, H. F. Miller. The levy amounts to $40,985 for 1912, the heaviest in the history of the town. The reason for this is not on account of so heavy an appropriation, but on account of the treasury being so depleted at the opening of the year.

No definite action has been decided upon regarding the rebuilding of the hat shop but the owners repeat their advice to their help, asking them not to contract for any other position for any length of time. This is taken as a good indication that they will rebuild. Work on fitting up the Langewald mill to continue the felt work is progressing rapidly.

Nine members were added to the club. Twenty-two towels were hemmed and 22 holders made during the afternoon and these will be sent to Good Cheer camp for girls at Woburn. Plans for the annual lawn party in August were talked over. The club will be entertained next Monday by Mrs. Andrews at the club house at 3.30.

Eyes of Night Prowlers.

Many creatures are noctambulists. Some have eyes specially adapted to the conditions of the night among them cats, night birds and night butterflies In the eyes of night animals the ends of the optic nerve are divided into about 120,000,000 cylindrical fibers and 60,000 conical fibers According to Von Kries, the conical fibers perceive dark colors Many animals see clearly in the dark because in their eyes cylindrical and conical fibers are uniformly intermingled.

The horse follows the road, however dark the night; the owl sees dark things better than he sees light things; therefore, it is probable that the cylindrical fibers of his optic nerves are either more numerous or more powerful than the conical fibers. —Harper's Weekly

IT'S A MISTAKE

Made By Many Palmer Residents.

Many people in a misguided effort to get rid of kidney backache, rely on plasters, liniments and other makeshifts. The right treatment is kidney treatment, and a remarkably recommended kidney medicine is Doan's Kidney Pills. Palmer is no exception.

The proof is at your very door. The following is an experience typical of the work of Doan's Kidney Pills in Palmer.

Mrs. William H. King, 406 Main St., Palmer, Mass., says: "I had kidney complaint for years and was steadily growing worse. I was rarely free from a dull, bearing-down pain in my back and the kidney secretions bothered me. My head also ached and I had dizzy spells. Finally my husband obtained a box of Doan's Kidney Pills for me at Lynde & Gould's Drug Store (now J. P. Lynde's Drug Store) and I began their use. They restored me to good health and at that time I gave a public statement, telling of my experience. It is a pleasure for me to confirm all I have previously said in praise of this remedy."

RETAIN THEIR RACIAL TYPE

Gipsies In Spain Are of That Country Only Because It Is Their Birthplace.

One of the things to attract the notice of every traveler that visits Spain is that strange race which he finds scattered here and there in small groups in the remote rural districts or near the great centers of population. It presents a type that can be mistaken for no other in the Spanish dominions.

The lips thick, the eyes large, black and piercing, the hair long, black and straight, the complexion olive tinted, the Spanish gipsy, whether encamped in a sheltering ravine or under the arches of an aqueduct or in the shadow of an overhanging cliff, is indeed Spanish because born in Spain, but in all else he is a gipsy.

Time was when Spaniards of the true blue blood called gipsies "New Castilians," or "Egyptians," or "Moorish footpads;" but while their traits have undergone no change their name is now definitely gitanos, or gipsies.

Between fifty and sixty thousand is the number of them now in Spain, says America. Most of them have no fixed abode; but in some parts, and notably in Andalusia, there are several small settlements, for towns they can hardly be called, where these wanderers have taken possession of caves in the mountain side, whence they sally forth to tell fortunes and to filch. Wherever they are, they are inclined to be quarrelsome among themselves and to enforce their arguments by means of wicked looking knives, which they wield with great dexterity.

Point of View.

When the necessity of daily labor is removed and the call of social duty fulfilled, that of moderate and timely amusement claims its place as a want inherent in our own nature. To relieve this want and fill up the mental vacancy games are devised, books are written, music is composed, spectacles and plays are invented and exhibited. And if these plays have a moral and virtuous tendency; if the sentiments expressed are calculated to rouse our love of what is noble, and our contempt of what is base and mean; if they unite hundreds in a sympathetic admiration of virtue, abhorrence of vice or derision of folly—it will remain to be shown how far the spectator is more criminally engaged than if he had passed the evening in the idle gossip of society, in the feverish pursuits of ambition or in the unsated and insatiable struggle after gain.—Walter Scott.

Flowers in Ceremonies.

When the swarthy Spaniards captured Mexico, they found in the lake which almost surrounded the capital city many floating gardens, the fragrant temples. In Greece and Rome flowers were made into huge triumphal arches, and a special feast of flowers, known as the Flora, was established in their honor.

Starve to Gain Weight.

The fat one who has been cut out of meals galore will now rejoice. The last cure for thinness is to omit every other dinner. A man under such treatment by advice of an up-to-date physician has gained at the rate of two pounds a week. With Parisian specialists advising five meals a day for obesity it sounds as if the doctors liked change as much as the modemakers.

The Father

The man whose story is here to be told was the wealthiest and most influential person in his parish; his name was Thord Overaas. He appeared in the priest's study one day, tall and earnest.

"I have gotten a son," said he, "and I wish to present him for baptism."

"What shall his name be?"

"Finn—after my father."

"And the sponsors?"

They were mentioned, and proved to be the best men and women of Thord's relations in the parish.

"Is there anything else?" inquired the priest, and looked up.

The peasant hesitated a little.

"I should like very much to have him baptized by himself," said he, finally.

"That is to say on a week day?"

"Next Saturday, at 12 o'clock noon."

"Is there anything else?" inquired the priest.

"There is nothing else;" and the peasant twirled his cap, as if he were about to go.

Then the priest rose. "There is yet this, however," said he, and walking toward Thord, he took him by the hand and looked gravely into his eyes: "God grant that the child may become a blessing to you!"

One day sixteen years later, Thord stood once more in the priest's study.

"I have come this evening about that son of mine who is to be confirmed tomorrow." "I did not wish to pay the priest until I heard what number the boy would have when he takes his place in church tomorrow," said Thord.

"He will stand number one."

"So I have heard; and here are $10 for the priest."

"Is there anything else I can do for you?" inquired the priest, fixing his eyes on Thord.

"There is nothing else."

Thord went out.

Eight years more rolled by, and then one day a noise was heard outside of the priest's study, for many men were approaching, and at their head was Thord, who entered first.

The priest looked up and recognized him.

"You come well attended this evening, Thord," said he.

"I am here to request that the banns may be published for my son; he is about to marry Karen Storliden, daughter of Gudmund, who stands here beside me."

"Why, that is the richest girl in the parish."

"So they say," replied the peasant, stroking back his hair with one hand.

"This is now the third time. Thord, that you have come here on your son's account."

"But now I am through with him," said Thord, and folding up his pocketbook he said farewell and walked away.

The men slowly followed him.

A fortnight later, the father and son were rowing across the lake, one calm, still day, to Storliden to make arrangements for the wedding.

"This thwart is not secure," said the son, and stood up to straighten the seat on which he was sitting.

At the same moment the board he was standing on slipped from under him; he threw out his arms, uttered a shriek, and fell overboard.

"Take hold of the oar!" shouted the father, springing to his feet and holding out the oar.

But when the son had made a couple of efforts he grew stiff.

"Wait a moment!" cried the father, and began to row toward his son.

Then the son rolled over on his back, gave his father one long look, and sank.

Thord could scarcely believe it; he held the boat still, and stared at the spot where his son had gone down, as though he must surely come to the surface again. There rose some bubbles, then some more, and finally one large one that burst; and the lake lay there as smooth and bright as a mirror again.

For three days and three nights people saw the father rowing round and round the spot, without taking either food or sleep; he was dragging the lake for the body of his son. And toward morning of the third day he found it, and carried it in his arms up over the hills to his gard.

It might have been about a year from that day, when the priest, late one autumn evening, heard some one in the passage outside of the door carefully trying to find the latch. The priest opened the door, and in walked a tall, thin man, with bowed form and white hair. The priest looked long at him before he recognized him. It was Thord.

Thord laid some money on the table. The priest counted it.

"It is a great deal of money," said he.

"It is half the price of my gard. I sold today."

"What do you propose to do now, Thord?"

"Something better."

They sat there for a while, Thord with downcast eyes, the priest with his eyes fixed on Thord. Presently the priest said, slowly and softly:

"I think your son has at last brought you a true blessing."

"Yes, I think so myself," said Thord, looking up, while two big tears coursed slowly down his cheeks.

Make a virtue of necessity.

Caring for Uncle Horace

Uncle Horace was over sixty and discouragingly rich.

There is a point where one's income becomes so great that people pass from common, ordinarily covetous envy to a resignedly helpless state of mind. They write down the figures of that income, stare at them and then say: "Oh, shucks! There ain't no such income!" That was the delightful kind of income Uncle Horace had.

Mrs. Stebbins and Mrs. Cromp, his two nieces, were so devoted to him and said they counted it such a joy to have the dear old man's presence glorify their homes that they lost good sleep planning how to entice him away from each other.

Moreover, each was firmly convinced that the other was a designing person.

Since he had come to stay with Mrs. Stebbins for a few months she had felt that something was wrong with Uncle Horace. If it had not been for his income Uncle Horace would have been a small, insignificant individual with pale eyes and an unpleasant habit of wanting the best chair, and of sitting in the next room and coughing when his niece had callers. Under the circumstances he was a reserved, original man with ideas of his own, which his relatives delighted to humor.

What worried Mrs. Stebbins especially was Uncle Horace's air of abstraction and his unwonted helpfulness. Usually he was under feet, investigating everything that went on and getting in the way tremendously. On these occasions Mrs. Stebbins was wont to say, through her teeth, that it was perfectly wonderful the way Uncle Robert kept up.

This time he paid no attention to what was going on in the house, but would sit deep in meditation or stare out of the window. Mrs. Stebbins' first fear was that he was losing his mind.

She said she would feel perfectly terrible if anything like that happened to the dear old man while he was under her care. She said she never would be able to forgive herself, never!

"Mebbe it's rheumatism," Stebbins suggested, hopefully. "That is liable to make a man do almost anything!"

"Don't you want some more blankets on your bed, Uncle Horace?" his niece asked him after this suggestion. "Are you perfectly comfortable?"

"Thank you, Tilda, I'm perfectly comfortable," Uncle Horace had responded. "I guess I'll go after the mail!"

This was really a double blow, for Uncle Horace normally was not polite, and he always wanted anything that was offered him, no matter what it was, and also it was a long walk to the post office.

Mrs. Stebbins had begged him to let little Johnny go and save his own strength, but Uncle Horace had persisted. He said he felt that he ought to do something instead of sitting around and letting the family wear themselves out waiting on him, and that he was glad to be of service.

"Not in this rain, Uncle Horace!" "Surely not when the wind is blowing so, Uncle Horace!" or "Don't worry me by going out in this snowstorm, Uncle Horace!" had not the remotest effect upon him when he started to climb into his galoshes and wrappings to go after the mail.

Mrs. Stebbins said to her husband, dolefully, that she feared it was the beginning of the end.

The week that Uncle Horace took to starting at a sound and to flush at a word or an unexpected look, filled Mrs. Stebbins with alarm. That something awful was the matter with Uncle Horace she was convinced and she besought him to see a doctor. She made him jelly and fed him beef tea despite his protests and tried in vain to get some intelligible conversation out of him.

Then one day he went after the mail and did not come back.

Mrs. Stebbins had the whole town out searching for him. She wept as she looked on closet shelves and up trees and in other impossible places and said that nobody could know how her heart bled at the idea that darling old Uncle Horace might be in terrible danger that very moment.

The Stebbins family and most of the town stayed up all night searching. Then the next morning a note that explained everything came from Uncle Horace.

"I went away to get married," he wrote in his crabbed hand. "I have been corresponding for some time with a most estimable widow of forty-five, who wants to make a home for me in my old age. She has four children, and we will all come to visit you soon, for I know you will be as fond of Sally and the children as you are of me."

They revived Mrs. Stebbins three times before she quit fainting. Then she remembered that Mrs. Cromp was Lit just as hard as she was and that made her feel better.

"It serves that designing, self-seeking woman exactly right!" she told the neighbors. "Pretending to care about the doddering, foolish, tiresome old man! As for me, I took him in because I felt it was my duty!"

Old friends are best.

Doing all the Giving

"I think I'll have to change my position," declared the little stenographer, belligerently, as she closed the drawers of the filing cabinet with a force that would have smashed any but a steel contrivance.

"Be calm, be calm!" remonstrated the bookkeeper as he turned for further particulars. "Count one hundred slowly and then tell me about it."

"Well, I've nearly made up my mind to change!" she exclaimed, dropping into a chair. "I'm going to look for a private office, a private secretaryship!"

"Oh, ambition ails you, does it?" The bookkeeper smiled knowingly. "Salary ran low at Christmas?"

"No, it isn't that," objected the little stenographer, "but, of course, I'd just as soon have an increase of salary. I think I could use it." She paused, meditatively. "No, I think I'd be willing to stay here, if only to remain in your company"—he smiled and bowed—"even with the meager stipend I now receive, if I could use it for my own needs, and in my own way!"

"Ah! Aged mother—crippled brother—educating little sister," suggested the bookkeeper, helpfully.

"No," returned the little stenographer, with surprisingly little heat. "Not that you mean it, and yet that's the very reason! But it's some one else's mother and brother and sister!" The little stenographer looked at him out of sad, wide eyes.

"Say," exclaimed the bookkeeper, "you aren't playing square. You've got to talk, not look sad. Why, in a minute I'll be handing you my pay envelope!"

"Well, to prevent such a dire catastrophe I'll explain," she agreed. "It begins in the morning about two minutes after I get my hat off and my pocket book by my side where all may see it. The door opens, and as it's my duty to greet all callers I have to get up and talk. Now, all the men have said not to call them except on real business, and I can't tell every beggar, or agent, or little boy or girl, to go see Mr. Brown or Mr. Daniels! My position wouldn't be worth two cents if I did! And I can't call Mr. Brown or Mr. Daniels out to see them, can I? No! But I have ears, and they at once proceed to work on my sympathies. They think if they can't get the big men perhaps I can help them a little. I look kind—oh, I know I do, for they all tell me so—and won't I please help them out?

"I can't tell them that I have no money, for they see my giant bag, and they know there must be something in it. You may ask why I don't buy a small bag, just big enough for car fare and lunches, but it's the honest truth that I don't have enough money left from my many charities to buy one!

"It might be all right and do my soul good, if only I felt charitable—but I don't, not a bit! I fairly despise every youngster who pleads. 'I'm trying to earn money by selling this chewing gum or "these beautiful cards!" And when a woman explains that she must have $10 to pay her rent or else be compelled to go out on the street with a three-month-old baby, I'm fairly nauseated!

"No, it isn't charity, not a bit of it. "Now, I like to give something sometimes when I feel that I can spare it, but I don't like to do the charity work for this whole big establishment. Why, I give to everybody! And why? For pure shame! That's all it is—I'm ashamed not to! Somehow or other, everybody makes me feel that I'm a selfish pig if I don't help, and I'm sorry all the time they are talking and ever afterward that I'm so soft—but I can't help it!

"So you see, the only remedy I know of is a private secretaryship, where I can give commands to the outer office force not to call me for anything at all! Do you happen to know of anybody who is in need of my services in that capacity?"

$15,000,000 Forged In 1911.

"Albert S. Osborn, author of 'Questioned Documents,' and an authority on the subject, declares that the forgery loss in this country for the year 1011 is fully $15,000,000," writes Frank Marshall White in the Munsey. In an article, "The Day of the Forger," the writer quotes Osborn as saying: "Clever penmen are leaving a trail of bad checks reaching from Portland, Me., to Portland, Ore. Banks and hotels are naturally the shining marks of the forger; but nearly, if not quite, as much money is paid out on forgeries by individuals, small storekeepers, and business houses as by all the banks and hotels combined. A large proportion, especially of the unreported forgeries, is in amounts of less than $100. If the forger of a small check has vanished, and only a doubtful clue remains, the natural impulse is not to "send good money after bad." In most cases, nothing is done, and the criminal goes on his way unhampered and unafraid. Banks naturally do not care to have it known that they pay out customers' money on forged paper, and if the forger is gone they are not inclined to take much trouble to find him.'"

ANOTHER SIDE TO THE CASE

Just a Few Things Elderly Man Overlooked in His Indictment of Lazy Housewives.

Said the elderly man in the street car: "One thing that runs up the cost of living is the laziness of the average woman. She's too lazy to carry bundles home from the stores. Everything she buys, from a spool of thread up, she asks to have delivered, and the cost of the delivering adds 10 per cent to the cost of every article. Now, my wife is different from the common run. Every week day in the year she goes to the market with a big basket, does her own buying and carries the stuff home herself. That's more than your wife does, I'll bet."

Said the younger man:

"Does your wife do her own housework?"

"No, we keep a girl."

"Has your wife got a houseful of children to care for?"

"No, we only have a tomcat.'

"Does your wife have to go to market in an overcrowded street car?'

"No she has her limousine.'

"My wife doesn't own a limousine, she has a houseful of children to care for and she does her own work. Under the circumstances I don't see that my wife isn't just as much of a woman as yours, even if she doesn't get down town very often."

"You needn't get cross about it, retorted the elderly man

"I'm not cross,' said the younger man. "Only I don't like to hear women libeled."

"Yes. Now two more cities widely separated."

COMPLAINT OF LIGHTS.

Criticism of Poor Service in Street Lighting.

ELECTRIC COMPANY'S EXPLANATION.

Is Trying to Maintain Service With Worn-out Equipment and Also Rebuilt Lines.

There have been numerous complaints of late regarding the street lighting service. The lights have failed to burn many times when they should have been lighted, and the public has naturally "kicked." So many complaints were made to the Journal that Manager Parsons of the Central Massachusetts Electric company, which has the street lighting contract, was interviewed regarding the cause of the poor service. Mr. Parsons asked to be permitted to make the explanation in his own words, and we give it in full below:

"Believing that a detailed explanation is due the public, giving them fullest possible information concerning the reasons for the poor street light service, we desire to review the operations of this company since it was purchased by the C. D. Parker interests on March 8th, and came under the direct management of Mr. Parsons.

"To make a full understanding of the condition of affairs, it seems necessary to review a number of facts concerning the old equipment at the station and the general condition of the lines when this property was taken over.

"The street lights were supplied by two old-type Thompson Houston machines. There was no auxiliary machine provided, so that in case of a breakdown in any town—such as in Warren—half the lights in Palmer went out; or in event of a breakdown in Monson, the other half the lights in the town went out. This of course was caused by all the towns being tied in together on the same machines. This allowed no flexibility in the service, and made successful service and operation almost an impossibility.

"The first move made by the new management was to do away with these two machines. Before this could be done, it was necessary that some provision be made to do away with the old direct current arc lamps which used to illuminate the streets of the town. To that end, at considerable expense to the company, it was suggested and recommended to install Tungsten clusters, the only modern system of lighting in place of the arc lights, and rearranging the present distribution of lights so that the streets might be better and more generally illuminated, and thus do away with the glare produced by the old arc lamps, which was impossible to see through as it was approached from either side.

"Then it became necessary to rearrange the street lighting circuits so that Warren and Monson, Wilbraham and Palmer would be entirely independent and separate from one another, so that in event of any trouble arising in either town it would have no effect in the other towns.

"Just at the time when these lines were cut over, one of the old arc machines at the station broke down. To repair this machine would have been a matter of some weeks, and as there was no auxiliary machine at the station to carry this service while the old machine was being repaired, the management was forced to take strenuous measures to restore its service. To that end a large gang of men was rushed to Warren, where permission was received to take out the arc lamps and replace them with clusters. This was done, and Monson being already a Tungsten lighted town, and placed on an independent new type apparatus, as was Warren, and this relieved the one machine which was trying to supply the entire territory. To make the necessary changes took approximately one week, and during that time the lights in Palmer were lighted at intermittent periods.

"It was impossible to change all the lights in Palmers to clusters as quickly as it could be done in other towns, as there were a considerably larger number in Palmer. Therefore it was planned to put the outside towns on the new type apparatus at once, and supply Palmer from the remaining arc machine. The operation of this machine, when in its best condition, was not to be depended on, and in its condition at that time it was almost impossible to supply a steady uninterrupted service.

"So much for the station machines.

"As the public undoubtedly know, if they have observed the condition of the lines at all, they would have long since realized that they were in very *bad condition. This point is very readily emphasized by the frequent in*terruption of service for both house light and street lighting, which occurred during the old ownership of the company. It was not an unusual thing for poles to fall over, endangering the lives of many people as well as the loss of considerable property. It was at once realized that under these conditions we could never give satisfactory uninterrupted service, and the new management set to work immediately to rebuild the distribution lines. To do this work in the shortest possible time, one hundred linemen and helpers were placed in the different towns supplied by this company, and a general rebuilding of the entire lines was started. During the course of this reconstruction it was impossible to do the work without causing the public some inconvenience, such as the shutting down of the house lights for a short interval, while necessary changes of 2300 volt feeders were made. The men doing this work were all in charge of careful and competent foremen, but it is a very easy matter in line construction to leave a series street light service open, and this during the time of rebuilding was unfortunately done in a number of instances. As soon as it was known that the street light circuit was open—it mattered not at what hour of the night—a gang of men were sent out to locate this trouble and repair it, the idea being to get the lights in the town at the very earliest possible moment. It is not hard to realize that with lines running from village to village in the town of Palmer alone that the mileage is great and the break in a line might be anywhere throughout the entire system. It is therefore no easy matter for one to place one's finger immediately upon any such trouble. But every effort was made by the management to give the towns uninterrupted street light service.

"This rebuilding of lines, the purchase of new machinery and supplies, is a task which embodies several months' work. It is impossible to get immediate shipments from any electrical jobbing house for supplies. It is therefore very easy to understand why some of these changes had to take a considerable length of time.

"The new management published broadcast its intention when it took over this company to give the public the best possible service and to make radical changes in the old service. That is still their intention. In their first announcement they asked for co-operation from the public and in general this co-operation on the part of the public has been given, and we wish to thank the public for the patience they have displayed in putting up with this poor street service. It is very likely that the company cannot guarantee first class, uninterrupted service very much before the first of November. The reason for this is apparent if one is acquainted with the facts; as they now exist, the lines are rebuilt, the new

Wilbraham Academy Teachers.

Force Selected for Institution, Which Will Reopen in Fall.

The teaching force at Wilbraham academy for the year 1912–1913 has been announced. Alfred A. Gustafson of Middletown, Ct., will have charge of the science department and will also teach some courses in mathematics. He has taught in East Haddam, Ct., East Greenwich academy and Montpelier seminary, Montpelier, Vt. The first-year classes in mathematics will be taught by Fred E. Peck, who is also business manager of the school. He taught science and mathematics at Mount Hermon in 1907–1909, and later was superintendent of the agricultural department of the Berry school in Rome, Ga. Merwyn L. Aultman of Cincinnati, O., will have charge of the English department and will also teach Latin. He will also direct very largely the outdoor sports here. The work in history and some of the classes in English will be taught by William K. Schwab of Rochdale, who was graduated from Clark college in 1911. H. Claude Hardy of New Milford, Pa., will teach modern languages. He has had a successful teaching position at the Rocky Ridge school, Wellesley Hills. The classes in the English Bible will be taught by Principal Gaylord W. Douglas, who has had much experience as a teacher in boys' schools and as a high school principal.

Three members of the faculty are married and their wives will live at Rich hall. Mrs. Fred E. Peck is to be house mother, having had experience in the duties of this position elsewhere.

Work is progressing rapidly on Rich hall and the building will be in condition for school use before September 1.

NOMINATION PAPERS.

Have Begun to be Circulated For State Election.

MAY NOW BE SIGNED BY ANY VOTER.

Provided He is Not Enrolled With Any Political Party. Recent Change In Law.

Nomination papers for persons who wish to be candidates for office in the coming state election have been in circulation in this vicinity this week. The papers must be filed with the secretary of state not later than Aug. 20, and must be certified by the registrars of the town, who must go over them and see that every signer is a voter and has a right to sign the paper.

The question as to who is eligible—under the direct primary law—to sign nomination papers has been raised, and it has been supposed that only those who have attended a primary and become enrolled as affiliated with some political party, had a right to affix their signature to nomination papers. This seemed to be borne out by the original law, which stated that after July 1, 1912, none but enrolled voters may sign such papers. An enrolled voter is designated as one who has attended a primary and asked for a ballot of a certain political party. But it has been found that this law was later amended so as to permit, in addition to voters who had been enrolled, "Voters not enrolled in any political party" to sign nomination papers. This seems to open the way for almost any voter to express his preference for nominees if he desires.

HAMPDEN.

Rev. C. M. Seamans, pastor of the Advent church in Springfield, will preach in the Congregational church Sunday morning in exchange with Rev. Charles B. Bliss.

Mr. Bridgman of Springfield, secretary and treasurer of the Bay State Corset Company, has bought the George Butterworth farm, paying $6000 for same. This farm includes the finest building site on the Wilbraham road, commanding an extensive view. Mr. Butterworth has bought a farm of Mrs. Esther Smith. It is situated on the Boston road in Wilbraham near the Springfield line.

WARE.

Auto Burned.

A five-passenger Parry touring car, owned by the Leahan motor company, was destroyed by fire on the road to West Brookfield Tuesday morning. The car had been laid up for repairs since spring, and Monday new parts arrived and the engine was put together. Tuesday two employes of the company, Frank Stone and Samuel Carroll, took the car out to test it. Shortly before 11 o'clock word was received at the garage that the car was afire. Henry Leahan and his father, James F. Leahan, went in another car to the scene and found the Parry almost a total loss. The two men had no idea how the fire started. They stated that they had but just left their seats when the gasoline tank exploded, sending a ball of fire into the air and burning the leaves on the trees. The car was left by the side of the road. The loss is covered by insurance.

McKay–St. Germaine.

Miss Mary M. McKay, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel H. McKay of West Main street, and Albert St. Germaine of East Main street were married Monday morning in All Saints' church, Rev. J. J. Roberts officiating. Miss Mary Heffernan, step-sister of the bride, was bridesmaid, and Edward St. Germaine, brother of the groom, was best man. The bride was gowned in a light gray traveling suit. The couple left for a honeymoon to be spent in Boston.

Nenameseck tribe of Red Men held a raising up of chiefs in their rooms Monday night. Deputy Sachem John Fitzgerald of West Brookfield officiated. The officers were as follows: Prophet, Daniel P. Griffin; sachem, Charles D. Myers; senior sagamore, James E. Kennelly; junior sagamore, John F. McElhenny; guard of wigwam, Herbert F. Barnes.

The New England Telephone Company petitioned the selectmen Monday night for permission to place underground their wires on Main street. At the meeting of the selectmen it was found that there will be about $1000 left of the appropriations for macadamizing North Water and Pleasant streets. No decision was made as to the manner of using the money, but it is likely a special town meeting will be called to see what disposition the voters wish to make of it.

WILL RUIN SURFACE.

Water Should Not be Put on North Main Street.

ROAD WOULD BE IDEAL IF LEFT DRY.

Sprinkling Prevents Proper Mixing of Materials in New Surface, Just Put On.

The residents along North Main street want that street sprinkled with the rest in order to keep the dust down as is natural. Supt. D. L. Bodfish of the State Highway Commisssion, who has recently repaired the road under the direction of that body, says that sprinkling will ruin the new surface. Whether the property owners along that thoroughfare will have the dust laid or whether the town will preserve the street surface lies with the superintendent of highways, Mr. Michael McKelligott, for he, having control of the town's highways, is the only person who has authority in the matter; and Mr. McKelligott says the street may be sprinkled as much as is desired, for all he cares.

The condition is somewhat peculiar. The road was built two years ago under specifications prepared by the state highway commission, oil macadam being the material. It was finished late in the fall and in the winter chipped up. To prevent this a coating of coarse sand was put on. This was not removed in the spring as it should have been, and instead of working into the tar surface of the road accumulated in places and much dust was the result in dry times. This was allayed by sprinkling, and the water turned the dust into mud which ac*cumulated to a depth of several inches in some places and materially* damaged the road's surface. This spring the road has been re-surfaced, the work being done by the state highway commission. A coating of oil and gravel was put on, and this in time mixes and much resembles a concrete sidewalk. After repairs were completed the sprinkling was resumed again, and this, Mr. Bodfish says, will materially impair the surface of the road. While the oil is fresh the heat of the sun draws it up and the gravel beds into it, making a hard smooth surface. But if the surface is kept wet the oil does not soften and the gravel does not get embedded as it should. A road surfaced in this way is practically dustless and requires no sprinkling, and none is allowed on road which is controlled by the state.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

Mrs. Lester Butler has returned to her home in Dighton after spending a week with her mother, Mrs. A. L. Warriner of East Wilbraham.

Mrs. Harry Bancroft and daughter Elinor of Springfield have been spending the week with her mother, Mrs. A. L. Warriner in East Wilbraham.

WALES.

George H. Lanphear is seriously ill.

Mr. and Mrs. William Walls spent Thursday in Palmer.

Miss Ruth Dolan of Holyoke is the guest of Miss Ada Rouke.

Earl Loudon of Norwich, Ct., is spending his vacation in town.

Mrs. George Parker of West Warren is spending a few weeks at her home here.

Selah Walbridge has gone to Worcester, where he has a position in an express office.

Miss Milly Royce of Stafford is spending her vacation with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Royce.

The members of the Baptist Ladies' Aid society spent Thursday at the lake, where they were entertained by Mrs. N. M. Stebbins.

Mrs. George Steen and Miss Viola Steen of Worcester and Miss Beatrice Belding of Monson have been spending the week at the hotel.

The old home day invitation cards are out and may be obtained at the post office, Thompson's or Royce's store. The picture this year is that of the old Munger house, one of the oldest in town, and now owned and occupied by William Peck.

The gospel tent and the young men who have charge of the services came to town Wednesday. The tent is centrally located on the open space between the residence of H. E. Steel and the house formerly occupied by the late Mrs. Mary Nelson. Services will be held each evening with children's meetings in the afternoons. The young men are sent out by the Congregational state missionary society and are well spoken of by those who know of their work in other places.

Big Show at Forest Lake.

Five High-class Vaudeville Acts. Diving Girls Act Free.

The show which opened at the Forest Lake theatre last evening is by far the best of the season. At the head is Phil Ott, famous as a German comedian and well known in musical comedy, then there is Nellie Burt, character artist, making four complete changes of costume in full view of the audience; Honey Johnson, who has few equals among real 'coons as a singer and dancer; the Musical Croftons, with a variety of instruments; and the Yokohoma Japs, three in number. They appeared yesterday for the first time, but quickly proved that the bill is one of no mean order. The theatre will be filled at every remaining performance, it is safe to predict. In addition to the above the diving girls, — Misses Rhoades, Thelma and Morecroft — will continue to give free exhibitions of their skill afternoon and evening from a specially constructed float in front of the pavilion. Their work so far this week has attracted much attention and well-merited applause. Another feature is the high dive of Arthur Farrar of Nantasket, who goes from a staging erected on the roof of the pavilion, making a magnificent leap through space and entering the water head first at some distance from the building.

The attractions for Sunday will include the diving girls and Farrar's act, and a swim across the lake and back by Miss Morecroft, who will try for a record. Miss Morecroft attempted the swim to Boston light Sunday and was taken with cramps, having a narrow escape from serious trouble.

The show the first of the week was taken off after Wednesday night. There was one act—a made-up 'coon in monologue and dance—which was passable, but the principal number, a so-called musical comedy entitled "Music a la carte," had no excuse for existence; it failed to contain even one bright or pleasing feature. Manager Rohan was quick to realize this and by quick work secured at considerable expense from a New York booking agency "The Minstrel Four," who arrived Tuesday evening to help out. They proved an instant success; the act is supposed to run 12 minutes, but call after call kept them on the stage more than double that time, and the audience was reluctant to let them go then. Unfortunately, other engagements prevented them from staying after last night. The "Musical comedy" was fired as soon as the acts named above could be engaged. Mr. Rohan much regrets the inferior quality of the first show; he has a contract with a booking agency for a much higher grade of talent, and is of the opinion that there will be no cause for complaint during the remainder of the season.

Probate Court Business.

At a session of the probate court in Springfield Wednesday the following business of local interest was transacted:

Wills proved in the estates of — Margaret Collins, late of Palmer, Thomas J. Dwyer executor; Sophy K. Sutcliffe, late of Monson, Harry M. Sutcliffe and Eva S. Shumway of Monson executor and executrix.

Administrations granted in the estates of — Theodore L. Jonse, late of Wilbraham, Henry M. Green of Wilbraham administrator; Susan L. Thompson, late of Palmer, James A. Thompson of Palmer administrator.

Accounts rendered in the estate of— Mary P. King, late of Monson.

BELCHERTOWN.

The first morning service ever held by the Episcopal residents of Belchertown in a home of their town was last Sunday. It was largely attended. Thomas Pulsifer conducted the services.

Mrs. N. W. Farrar entertained the women of Trinity mission at the Blaze of Peace tea rooms Monday afternoon, after which a "guild" was formed. The following officers and committees were chosen: President, Mrs. John Anderson; first vice president, Mrs. Libbie Davis; second vice president, Miss Dorothy Holland; secretary and treasurer, Miss M. E. King; altar committee, Mrs. Dewey; flower committee, Miss Hall; assistants, Miss Dorothy Thomson, Miss Ethel Dewey; music, Mrs. Arthur Bridgman. Sixteen women were present and joined the movement. The meetings will be held Thursdays. The first work proposed will be kneeling stools. The guild will be known as Trinity mission guild.

Mrs. Julia A. Wallace, 53, died at her home in Palmer last Friday. The funeral was Sunday afternoon, Rev. Frank S. Brewer of the Congregational church officiating; burial was in the No. 1 cemetery in Monson.

BRAVERY RECOGNIZED.

Three Rivers Life Saver Presented With Watch.

THOMAS W. HOLT GETS TESTIMONIAL.

Swam Out to Young Polish Boy Being Carried Away in Swift Current Of River.

Thomas W. Holt of High street, Three Rivers, was presented with a handsome gold watch this week in recognition of his bravery recently in rescuing a young Polish lad from drowning in the Chicopee river. The token was purchased by subscriptions secured from the friends of Mr. Holt. The watch is engraved as follows: "Presented to Thomas W. Holt by Three Rivers friends for saving Peter Goudek from drowning April 6, 1912."

The act which prompted the presentation was one requiring quick thought and quicker action. The Goudek boy, only two years old, was playing in an open space on the "Island" in Three Rivers, and tumbled into the stream. The current is swift there and the water deep, and he was being carried rapidly down stream when Holt, who was working in the machine shop of the Palmer Mill, saw him. He quickly ran out of the shop and, without stopping to take off his clothes, plunged in, swam to the lad and brought him ashore, neither being materially the worse for the experience.

WARREN.

Pastor Installed.

Rev. John Logan Findlay was installed as pastor of the Congregational church Tuesday afternoon. The council was composed of pastors and delegates from Barre, Carlton, Dudley, Gilbertville, New Braintree, North Brookfield, Spencer, Sturbridge, Ware, West Brookfield, Westboro, Central church in Fall River, Euclid-avenue church of Cleveland, O., Rev. John J. Walker of Boston and Rev. Benson M. Frink. The council organized by the choice of Rev. J. H. Smith of Barre as moderator and Rev. Alfred W. Budd of North Brookfield as scribe. After listening to a statement of his belief by Rev. Mr. Findlay, the council withdrew to private session and voted unanimously to proceed with the exercises of installation. Dinner was served at noon and the afternoon exercises were resumed at 2.30, the program of installation being carried out. In the evening a reception was tendered Rev. and Mrs. Findlay by the members of the church. Mr. and Mrs. Findlay were assisted in receiving by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Findlay of Cleveland, O., and her parents, Mr. and Mrs Myron L. Washburn of Fall River.

Dr. J. W. Dailey of Cambridge has been the guest of his grandmother, Mrs. James Dailey on Lombard street.

James McMahon has been elected janitor of the high school building and Agar W. Barlow of the East street school building.

The Worcester County Association of the Grand Army and the Woman's Relief Corps held a meeting in the Warren town hall to-day.

The Lucius engineering company have begun the work of clearing up about the bridge built for the Boston and Albany railroad over the Quaboag river last winter. It was necessary to build cofferdams, and much material was left in the riverbed near the Sayles & Jenks Manufacturing Company.

A special town meeting has been called for Thursday evening of next week at 8 o'clock. Two matters are to be considered, first to see if the meeting will vote to resurface the macadam road built by the town in Warren and West Warren, and the second matter is in regard to widening Southbridge and Maple streets and the bridge under the Boston and Albany railroad tracks just west of the passenger station.

Helped by Cloudburst

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press)

"I don't care about the bridge, so much," explained Dustan Carmichael, impatiently. "That is annoying and expensive and all that, but unless I can rush these papers to New York in time for the meeting it will cost me pretty close to $2,000,000. I'll give $10,000 to any man who will cross the stream."

"I wouldn't do it for the whole $2,000,000," said Cassidy, the foreman decidedly. "Mebbe some of the boys wants to try. I'll ask 'em."

Dick Breslin looked at the raging flood. During the night there had been a cloudburst up in the mountains. The ordinarily shallow stream was swollen to a width of 300 feet and the temporary railroad bridge had been swept away.

Breslin shared his employer's nervousness and accompanied him in his restless pacing until, from the private car, there stepped a hooded figure.

"Is it still bad?" asked the girl as he approached.

"Worse, Claire. I don't think the water will fall before tomorrow."

"And no one will try for the reward?"

"No one seems anxious to try for a suicide's grave," he laughed. "That's about what it would mean."

"Will you go halves with me?" she demanded suddenly.

"Die together?"

Claire shook her head.

"Father said we could get married when you had earned $5,000. It will take you two years with this construction gang to earn that much. We can hurry it along."

"I'm with you," he cried. "What is the idea?"

"Let's arrange with dad first." They went toward the bank. Mr. Carmichael paused to greet his daughter.

"You had better go back to the car," he said. "This weather is not made for young women."

"It won't hurt me," she said. "I've a proposition to make, dad."

"And that is?"

"You told Dick that we could be married when he had earned $5,000. Then you put him with this construction gang and it will take two years for him to earn it at the salary you pay him."

"And you've just discovered that if I pay him more the time will be shorter? This is a bad time for discoveries." Claire shook her head.

"Will you give us that reward if we get the papers across for you? Dick and I are partners. We'll each take half."

"You ought to help me out anyhow," he declared.

"I won't," she said, "and Dick doesn't know how." Her dimpled chin squared itself determinedly. Mr. Carmichael knew what that meant. She inherited his stubbornness, and he surrendered unconditionally.

She drew Breslin aside and whispered for a moment. Then she went back to their private car while he headed in the direction of the tool car. Some whisper of an attempt to bridge the stream was passed about and both banks were lined with workmen as Breslin returned.

"Going to shoot the box across?" demanded Cassidy, as he noticed that Dick carried a gun.

"Something like that," he admitted, as he proceeded to grease the outside of the gun barrel. Cassidy watched him in surprise. But his surprise was nothing to his amazement when Breslin began to drive stakes into the clay and wind a fishing line about it. Then he drew from his pocket a section of pipe from one of the steam drills and fastened the line to the cap of the pipe.

Claire and her father came down to watch the proceedings, and, with quiet care, Breslin slipped the cap on the gun and rested it in a crotched stick. There was a report, the line whizzed out over the stakes, but the projectile fell short.

"I'll get it yet," he cried, as he drew another cartridge from his pocket.

Slowly he drew back the line. It was a quarter of an hour before the projectile was back on land.

This time there was a heavier report, the black projectile rose in a curve and fell on the opposite bank. There Gillis caught it and raised the line out of the water.

From the telegraph kit, they obtained some light, strong rope and this in turn was drawn across. Then a water tight box containing the papers and a letter of instruction to Gillis was fastened to the line and hauled across. Ten minutes later the puffs of smoke announced the departure of an engine for the junction.

Carmichael watched the smoke until it faded into the distance, then he turned away with a sigh of satisfaction.

After the chill of the morning, the car seemed gratefully warm and Carmichael grew genial.

"Whose scheme was that?" he demanded.

"Dick's" said Claire promptly.

"It was Claire's," corrected Breslin. "I don't want any credit that is not due me."

Carmichael smiled indulgently. "At any rate," he said, "you did your share and you did it well. When I made work a condition of my consent in your marriage I only wanted to make sure that there was good stuff in you."

BRIMFIELD.

Special Town Meeting and Electric Lights.

A special town meeting was held last Friday afternoon in regard to the matter of electric lighting of the streets of the Center village and East Brimfield. There was a large attendance. The committee appointed at the annual town meeting in March, consisting of Orrin Hicks and Merrill Dunham, members of the board of selectmen, and Edward H. Brown, reported on their investigations, and the matter was referred back to the committee to be reported on at the next annual town meeting. At the meeting Friday there was a vote of 41 to 31 in favor of rescinding that vote, after which it was voted to install and operate electric lights in Brimfield village and East Brimfield and the committee was instructed to contract for the same. A sum of money was appropriated from funds on hand to defray the cost for this year, so that there would be no increase of taxation. After the meeting those opposed to electric lighting petitioned the selectmen to call another town meeting to be held Monday, the 22d.

Mrs. Harlan Allen of Rhinebeck-on-the-Hudson is a guest at the hotel.

Miss Ethel Hitchcock of Chicopee Falls have been visiting relatives in town.

Mr. and Mrs. Gurdon W. Gordon of Springfield are at the cottage owned by Clarence B. Brown on Tower Hill road.

Principal and Mrs. George Kenney have returned from a stay of two weeks in Edgartown.

Mrs. J. H. Seymour and little daughter Ruth, of Peoria, Ill., and her cousin, Miss Julia T. Brown of Springfield, have been spending a part of the week in town.

Miss Florence E. Chase of Sturbridge, a graduate of the Academy in the class of 1896, has been in town obtaining data from representatives of the various classes graduated since the last historical sketch was written. At the alumni meeting in 1905, held in connection with the semi-centennial celebration of the founding of the Academy Miss Helena Corey, as historian, prepared statistics concerning the members of the graduating classes since 1869, the year when public exercises were first held. Her successor, Mrs. Alice Haynes Marsh, followed a similar plan of reporting succeeding classes, and Miss Chase will continue the report for the coming triennial meeting Thursday, August 29th.

HAD LOST HIS "CREDENTIALS"

Salesman May Have Improved His Appearance, But Shave Cost Him Customers.

Charles A. Cotterill has a grand and gorgeous set of whiskers which, in their own gold and tawny way, show as many varying hues as changeable silk under the midday sun. There are mixed up in that growth of beard all the marvelous tints of the sunrise, the South African gold mines, and the circus posters. But there is a sad story connected with the facial adornment.

The first year that Cotterill traveled for a big drug firm of New York city, he waved the whiskers up and down a wide territory, selling much merchandise and making many friends. At the end of the season he got a shave and on his next trip the tragedy began to unfold. Nobody knew him. Every time he went up to a man to whom he had made a sale previously, the fellow would say:

"You are not Cotterill. How well I remember Cotterill! He was a merry, good-natured, entertaining fellow, and he told such good stories. Besides, he had whiskers, and you have none. You can't be Cotterill."

After a week of this, Cotterill, utterly dejected by the fact that he could make no headway in his business, telegraphed his firm as follows:

"Must have leave of absence long enough to grow a beard."

He has not shaved since.—Popular Magazine.

SOUNDS MADE BY ELEPHANTS

Those Familiar With the Animal Easily Recognize Meaning of Its Different Expressions.

Elephants are said to make use of a great variety of sounds in communicating with each other and in expressing their wants and feelings. Some are uttered by the trunk, some by the throat. The conjunctures in which either means of expression is employed cannot be strictly classified, as fear, pleasure, want and other emotions are sometimes indicated by the trunk, sometimes by the throat. An elephant rushing upon an assailant trumpets shrilly with fury. Fear is similarly expressed in a shrill, brassy trumpet, or by a roar from the lungs; pleasure by a continued low squeaking through the trunk or an almost inaudible purring sound from the throat. Want—as a calf calling its mother—is chiefly expressed by the throat. A peculiar sound is made use of by elephants to express dislike or apprehension, and at the same time to intimidate, as when the cause of some alarm has not been clearly ascertained and the animals wish to deter an intruder. It is produced by rapping the end of the trunk smartly on the ground, a current of air hitherto retained being sharply emitted through the trunk as from a valve, at the moment of impact. The sound made resembles that of a large sheet of tin rapidly doubled.

The Sale of Sales

Our Semi-Annual Clearance Of HIGH-GRADE FURNITURE

At Honest and Actual Savings of From 1-4 to 1-2 On Regular Prices

The Most Important Trade Event Springfield Chronicles During the Year

Now comes the last and biggest and best of all our money-saving clearance sales — our Annual Mid-Summer Sale of Furniture, with thousands of dollars' worth of the very best furniture made at actual reductions of from one-quarter to one-half on regular prices.

The biggest and most important sale chronicled in Springfield during the year, judged by every standard—the volume and the value of the goods included, the variety and the beauty of the merchandise, and the money-saving made possible.

Twice each year — in January and in July — we take this means of reducing our stocks and closing out patterns which will not be made again, and at the same time affording some of our favored manufacturers an opportunity to close out the balance of their remaining stocks. With this two-fold interest we are able to afford our patrons unparalleled opportunities for money-saving on the very finest Furniture made in America.

LOOK FOR THE RED TAGS

We have done everything in our power to simplify this great sale — to arrange the stock to best suit your convenience, and to make it perfectly clear just what is included and just what the saving is on each article. Every article in this Sale will bear a big Red Tag, and on this tag will be in plain figures the former price and the marked-down price, enabling you to see at a glance just what you save.

In this sale you will find beautiful, practical Furniture for every room in the house, not in a few odd and undesirable patterns, but in each instance in a splendid assortment of handsome patterns which have been up to now the very latest productions of the leading Furniture factories of America. This Furniture is marked at actual reductions of from one-fourth to one-third less than regular prices, with a considerable number of desirable pieces marked at exactly half-price.

Some of the Bargains in Chamber Furniture

This bargain story is so long and so interesting that the best we can do is to take it up by piecemeal and tell it to you in chapters every day. To-day we enumerate some of the splendid bargains to be had in Chamber Furniture. Among these chamber pieces is included more than one whole carload of brand new Furniture straight from the factory, marked at just 25 per cent less than regular prices.

SEVEN YEARS OF MISERY

How Mrs. Bethune was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Sikeston, Mo. — "For seven years I suffered everything. I was in bed for four or five days at a time every month, and so weak I could hardly walk. I had cramps, backache and headache, and was so nervous and weak that I dreaded to see anyone or have anyone move in the room. The doctors gave me medicine to ease me at those times, and said that I ought to have an operation. I would not listen to that, and when a friend of my husband's told him about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it had done for his wife, I was willing to take it. Now I look the picture of health and feel like it, too. I can do all my own housework, work in the garden and entertain company and enjoy them, and can walk as far as any ordinary woman, any day in the week. I wish I could talk to every suffering woman and girl, and tell them what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."—Mrs. DEMA BETHUNE, Sikeston, Mo.

Remember, the remedy which did this was Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

It has helped thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing down feeling, indigestion, and nervous prostration, after all other means have failed. Why don't you try it?

The Old Banjo.

In a corner, forgotten, forsaken—
Among relics of long ago,
All rusty and dusty and broken,
I discovered my old banjo.

All the charms I once cherished so fondly
Have passed with the swift fleeting years,
As the joys of those bright happy moments
Have been drowned by the later tears.

For the metal is shining no longer,
And the wood is falling apart,
While the strings are all ragged and broken,
Like the strings of my stricken heart.

How the scenes of my free happy boyhood
Come crowding upon me to-night,
As I gaze on the poor wreck before me,
That once was my pride and delight.

There's the laughter of happy children,
As they gath.red about my knee,
To hear the homely melodies
Of the old-time minstrelsy.

And I see the youths and maidens
Tripping gracefully to and fro,
As they joyfully time their footsteps
To the strains of the old banjo.

And the sounds of merry laughter,
And the echoes of joyous song,
As the happy youths and maidens
Speed the glorious night along.

Oh, happiest time of boyhood!
Oh, beauteous days of our youth!
When life is all brightness and music,
And living is loving and truth.

Ah, never again shall I listen
To such measures of joy and love
Till I hear the celestial music
Of the heavenly harps above!

Palmer Town League.

Bondsville 10, Palmer 2.

Bondsville won easily from Palmer at Bondsville Saturday by the score of 10 to 2. The game was featureless. Bennett pitched well, but was hit fairly hard. Palmer had several men left on bases, and was unable to hit the ball at times. Two runs were forced in on McLean's error. Fitzpatrick hit the ball hard at times, getting a home run in the second after Belisle had been passed. Bondsville got four runs in the first on hard hitting, coupled with errors and two passes. In the second two came on a pass and a four-sacker. In the sixth a few errors let in four more. Palmer got one in the second on a pass, a hit and Bennett's wild heave. One more was added in the ninth on two errors and a single. The score:

Stealing a Plate

"I don't think it is fair," cried Nettie Bourn. "To think that one horrid old plate should make all this trouble! It was mean of Uncle John to make a will like that."

"He didn't make a will like that," contended Harry Warren. "How was he to know that one of the plates should be broken between his death and the reading of the will? He was fair enough. He left one to your mother and one to my father. Surely that was a fair division of the two. His intention was all right."

"Well, then," said Nettie, stamping a very pretty little foot, "it's shameful that our parents should be so horribly stubborn as to fight over one miserable old plate!"

"You can't blame them, exactly," defended Harry, charitably.

"And in the meantime we can't even announce our engagement," wailed Nettie, "to say nothing of getting married."

"We don't want to get married until spring," reminded Harry, optimistically. "Something will turn up before then—if I have to turn it up myself."

He smiled down into the worried little face, but found no answering smile. Ever since Jason Pomfret's will had been read, and it was found that the two famous Washington plates were left to his brother, Silas Warren, and to Martha Bourn, there had been a bitter warfare waged between the two legatees. In the bustle of preparing for the funeral one of the plates had been broken beyond the skill of the most expert mender to put together, and Mrs. Bourn and Silas Warren, who were both a little mad on the subject of china, had taken the matter into the courts, each insisting that the remaining plate was the one Jason Pomfret had repeatedly indicated as the one he wished the claimant to have.

But Harry did not let the grass grow under his feet. He went to see his closest friend, Dick Lyons, who was noted as an expert in old porcelains. He had done Dick a great favor once, and Dick did not hesitate a moment. He managed to meet Mrs. Bourn at an evening party.

"I don't want to see you get the worst of this row over that Washington plate," he said when he had aroused her curiosity sufficiently. "I've often studied that collection of Jason Pomfret's, and other experts had always agreed with me that his Washington plates were not genuine."

"Don't tell me that," she commanded with a sniff. "I've seen the plate a hundred times and I know very well that it is a real Washington."

"Look here," suggested Dick. "You can look the plate over closely so long as you don't take it out of the executor's office. You've seen it a hundred times, but you never looked at it with doubt because you took it for granted that it was what Pomfret said it was. You look it over carefully and you'll get the credit for dropping the fight over a plate that is not worth fighting over."

"If this is a trick—" began Mrs. Bourn, and she paused. She could think of no threat terrifying enough and her silence was more eloquent.

"It's not a trick," assured Lyons.

What Harry had not counted on was that his father and Nettie's mother should arrive at the office of the lawyer executor at the same time.

"It is the same that I took from the cabinet," declared the lawyer tartly, not relishing the suggestion that was conveyed in their demands.

"It's not that," Mrs. Bourn hastened to explain. "I've always had an idea that the plate was not genuine and I want to make certain that the plate is worth fighting over."

"Funny you never thought of that before," commented Silas Warren suspiciously. "I've always had my doubts," he added, with the collector's vanity and pride in his knowledge. "Harry told me the other night that one of his friends, also, had expressed his doubts. I'm going to bring another expert in."

"I don't think that that will be necessary," hastily said Mrs. Bourn.

She looked doubtfully first at the plate, then at the lawyer. The latter was above suspicion even if the plate was not. With a sigh she turned it over to Silas who in turn laid it on the desk.

"I don't want ever to see it again," he declared. "To think that a cheap copy should have spoiled our friendship all these months! That's worse than the loss of the plate. We used to be pretty good friends, Martha."

"We can be good friends, still, Silas," she reminded.

"Let's go out and have luncheon and talk it over," suggested Silas; and they talked it over with such good effect that they went from there to the jeweler's and when they came out a solitaire on the widow's finger announced that she expected shortly to change her state of loneliness.

Nettie and Harry, watching across the street, smiled at each other.

"That will simplify matters a great deal," declared Harry in tones of relief. "We'll give them the Washington plate for a wedding present."

"But that is not worth anything," objected Nettie.

"The real one is," explained Harry. "In a good cause the end justifies the means. I got Benson's clerk to exchange the plates."

What can't be cured must be endured.

Complaint of Lights.

street light equipment is installed at the station, but the supply of electricity for this equipment and for the house lights is not entirely to be depended upon. The management will make every possible effort to keep the old apparatus in first class condition and supply the needs of the town in every way, and there is no question but that this can be done and will be done.

"To take care of the winter load and the future power business of this company, they are making numerous changes at the power station, one of which is the installation of three new water wheels which will generate, when the new installation is completed, approximately 1200 horse power. The contract for the wheels has been made and delivery guaranteed by the first of September. The contract for the generators attached to these wheels has been made, and delivery guaranteed the middle of September. The contract for the excavation and rebuilding and installation of new wheels has been given to a local contracting firm. This work, it is hoped, will be done the first of September. As soon as this new equipment is installed it will very materially add to the safety of operation, and will make it possible to guarantee almost perfect operation and service.

"The street lights are all on the moonlight schedule. This means that during certain portions of the night, when the moon is full or waning, the lights may burn in the early portion of the evening and go out in the latter portion, or they may burn in the latter portion of the evening and not in the early portion, or they may not burn at all. The rate for this class of service is figured on a certain number of hours burned per year. If the company operates their lamps over this number of hours, they are supplying the town at a loss. Under these conditions it is not good business for the electric light company to burn these lights any more than the schedule actually calls for. It has, however, been the policy of the new management to be liberal in this respect, and in cases where the night was dark and stormy, even though moonlight was scheduled, the lights have been burned. Other nights on which the moon was scheduled to shine and did not, but on which there was some possibility of the moon coming out, the lights were not put on. The company has been criticised for this, but if any business man will stop to consider what this means in dollars and cents, he will very readily realize that it is impossible to supply something which costs money for nothing.

"From now on, provided that no heavy storms arise which will blow down our lines, as was the case last Thursday, the lights should burn strictly according to schedule every night.

"The house service has been very much improved; in fact the lights have not been out ten minutes in any night since the taking over of the old company."

PALMER NEWS.

Death of George A. Rice.

Well Known Railroad Man and Longtime Resident of the Town.

George A. Riee, 56, died at his home on Pleasant street at 6 o'eloek this morning of septie perieardi tis after an illness of about a month, although confined to his bed only for the last two weeks. Mr. Rice began to have trouble with erysipelas about four weeks ago, but kept at work for a week, and was then eonfined to his bed for several days. He went to work again the first of the month, but on the following Sunday was obliged to give up again. The disease broke out onee more and blood poisoning developed, finally affecting the heart.

Mr. Rice was born in Belehertown in September, 1856. He attended the public school of that town and then went to Tolland, where he learned telegraphy. He came to Palmer at the age of 20 and entered the employ of the New London Northern railroad, later going to Barretts Junction as agent for the two roads. From there he went to Westfield as ticket agent for the Boston and Albany for six months, coming from there to a position in the freight house of the company in Palmer. He was made agent of the company in 1886, and has held the position ever since, with the exception of four years—1899 to 1903—when he was assistant to the division superintendent in Springfield. It was while there, during ten weeks of continuous day and night work at the time of the coal strike, that he contracted troubles which undoubtedly materially shortened his life.

Mr. Rice married, June 8, 1886, Emily G. Gray of Palmer, who survives him, with three children, Sophia E., Edward G. and Clarence L. He also leaves two sisters, Mrs. Samuel Allen of Belchertown and Mrs. Jennie C. Brown of Enfield. Mr. Rice was a member of Thomas lodge of Masons of Palmer, and a charter member of Quaboag council of the Royal Arcanum, and has been an officer in each.

The funeral will be held in the Congregational church Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock; burial will be private, at the convenience of the family.

Was Former Palmer Woman.

The following, from the Hartford, Ct., Times of July 6, will be of interest to many residents of Palmer who knew Mrs. Wheeler as Miss Jessie Parks, daughter of William R. Parks, who resided on South Main street for a good many years:

"The death of Mrs. John P. Wheeler occurred at 9 o'clock this morning at the family home, 31 North Beadon street, after an illness of only about a week's duration. Mrs. Wheeler was a native of Monson, Mass., and had resided in Hartford since her marriage in 1888. She was a member of the Smith College club and an attendant of the Asylum Hill Congregational church, the pastor of which, Rev. Dr. Joseph Twitchell, will officiate at the funeral services Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock at the residence; burial will be in the Cedar Hill cemetery. A son, Raymond P., connected with the Travelers' Insurance company, and a brother, Samuel Shaw Parks of Chicago, Ill., are the only relatives in addition to Mr. Wheeler."

Death of Mrs. R. Florilla Granger.

Mrs. R. Florilla Granger, 71, of Park street died at the Wesson Memorial Hospital in Springfield yesterday morning after a short illness. She leaves six children: Mrs. Francis Jones, with whom she had her home, Mrs. Edgar Bemis of East Brookfield, Miss Mary Granger of Keene, N. H., Mrs. H. W. Burbank of Wilbraham, Mrs. Elbridge S. Bemis and Mrs. William Adams of Brookfield. She also leaves one grandson, Leslie F. Bolt of Chicopee Falls, and seven other grandchildren. Funeral services will be held at her home in Palmer, Saturday at 10 a. m. She will be buried at Greenwich, her former residence, at 2.30 p. m.

Dogs Were Unlicensed.

Six owners of unlicensed dogs appeared in the district court last Saturday to give reasons for their delinquency. Five of them paid fines of $5 each, and the case of one was continued.

Lawn Party Postponed.

The lawn party which was to have been held last evening under the auspices of St. Mary's parish, Thorndike, was postponed on account of the rain. It will be held this evening and tomorrow afternoon and evening.

Miss Susan Barlow has taken a position as bookkeeper in the Woodmont garage.

The barbers will close their place of business every Thursday afternoon until September 1.

George W. Newbury, formerly employed by the E. Brown Co. as a plumber, will again enter the employ of that firm.

A speeial meeting of Quaboag Council, Royal Arcanum, will be held in the office of D. F. Dillon to-morrow evening at 7.30 to act on the death of George A. Riee.

The Boy Scouts, who had planned to camp out in Wales this week, were obliged to defer their trip until later, as their leader was unable to be with them this week.

The Worcester County Association of Woman's Relief Corps invited L. L. Merriek Corps of Palmer to attend its meeting in Warren to-day, and several members were present.

Toekwotton tribe of Red Men will meet next Tuesday evening. Clarence E. Dearden, distriet deputy grand sachem, and suite of Springfield will be present to raise chiefs.

Eugene Mitehell has resigned his position with the Kinsley Pharmacy, and after a vaeation will be employed in the grocery store of E. B. Taylor, beginning there August 1.

Miss Imogene Osborne was pleasantly surprised by a party of friends last Friday evening. Light refreshments were served. Miss Osborne was presented with a handsome ehain and pendant.

The Christian Endeavor Union of Palmer and vicinity will hold a joint picnic at Minnechaug Farm, Nine Mile Pond, Wilbraham, Saturday, the 27th. The following unions will be represented: Ware Valley, Southbridge and Eastern Hampden. The party will meet from 1 to 9 o'clock in the afternoon and a basket lunch will be served.

A special meeting of the Eastern Hampden Christian Endeavor Union will be held in the Congregational church in Palmer Wednesday evening, July 31, at 7.30 p. m. It will be an echo meeting and reports from delegates to the Sagamore convention will be read. It is expected that delegates who were in attendance from Warren and Springfield will be present. There will be special singing.

Rev. Michael J. O'Connell, curate at St. Thomas' church, was taken violently ill while traveling on the Boston and Albany division train from Boston which arrived in Worcester shortly before 9 o'clock Wednesday night. He was removed to St. Vincent's hospital, where it was found he was suffering from acute indigestion. He was more comfortable late in the evening and is expected to be able to leave the hospital in a few days.

Persons who travel to New London on the special round-trip tickets good only on the Limited will do well to read the conditions which are printed thereon carefully. In order to be good for the return trip the ticket must be stamped at New London by the ticket agent. This specification was not noticed by a party of several people who made the trip recently, and there was some trouble in getting the conductor of the train home at night to accept the tickets, but it was finally accomplished by wiring to the office in New London for instructions.

Among the Churches.

There will be preaching in the Advent chapel Sunday afternoon at 3 by Elder J. J. Fuller of Westfield.

Preaching by the pastor in the Congregational church Sunday morning. Sunday school at 12. Christian Endeavor service at 6; subject, "Common Sense."

The tent meetings at Palmer Center closed last Tuesday evening. An effort is being made to continue them by Sunday afternoon preaching services, but no definite announcement can yet be made.

At the Baptist church Sunday morning there will be a men's prayer meeting at 10.15; morning service at 10.45, sermon-subject, "Apostolic and modern Christianity;" Bible school at 12; evening service at 6, sermon-subject, "A reasonable settlement."

The Baptist church will be closed the last Sunday in July and the first two Sundays in August. The last Sunday n July and the four Sundays in August the church will unite with the Congregational church in union services, which will be held July 28, August 4 and 11 in the Congregational church, August 18 and 25 in the Baptist church.

Steiger's Semi-annual Sale.

The Albert Steiger company of Springfield opened Wednesday morning its 13th semi-annual pre-inventory clearance sale, an event organized for the disposition of summer stocks throughout the stores. One of the cardinal principles of this store has been the reduction of stocks to a minimum prior to inventory. The company also recognizes, as with all progressive stores, the importance of fresh new stocks at the beginning of each season. The accomplishment of both is, of course, cause for drastic action and is the reason for this great sale. It is on event that has won prestige throughout Western New England for its value giving and the extent of its offerings. Noteworthy are the exceptional offerings in garments, millinery, corsets, undermuslins, waists, silks, wash goods, children's wear, shoes and domestics.

Power of a Word.

A single word was often sufficient for Talleyrand to make his keenest retort. When a hypochondriac, who had notoriously led a profligate life, complained to the diplomatist that he was enduring the tortures of hell Talleyrand simply answered, "Already?"

To a woman who had lost her husband Talleyrand once addressed a letter of condolence in two words:

"Oh, madame!

In less than a year the woman had married again, and then his letter of congratulation was.

In the Second Row Back

The ominous tinkle of the little clock striking the hour made them both look up. He was first to speak. As he drew from his pocket two slips of pasteboard, his words came in dull even tones.

"Here are the theater tickets I bought last week. If you care to go, we may as well pass the time there as in any other way."

Before answering she closed her book and placed it carefully upon the table. She gave no hint of haste nor of the response that passed through her at his words.

"Since you have the tickets, yes."

Just as she feared, he caught her wrist as she passed and held her in a firm grasp.

"Marian, what sense is there in this stubbornness? You know that I do not care so much for the reason of your going as I do your not telling me."

She tried to free herself. "That is not true," she gasped. "You want to know why I went there. I'd have told you, some time, if you'd trusted me."

"But, Marian, I hear you've been going there for a month, and I've known nothing of it. You knew I'd hate a thing like that."

"Your informant ought to have found out more. Why not have him try again? I'll never tell you, never. No matter what happens, I'll—never—tell—you."

He dropped her hand at that, and she went on into the other room. When she returned she had all her emotions well in control.

They reached their seats in the theater just as the curtain went up. In the half light Marian removed her hat and coat, and tried to settle herself to gather the threads thrown out in the first act.

Suddenly into the strained silence of the audience came a voice. "She says she doesn't love him but she'll marry him."

It was a girl's voice, and there was a familiar ring in it to Marian. "Did she say she'd marry him?" This time it was an older, more cautious voice. "Yes, but she does not love him."

There was a stir and a wavering titter among those within hearing. Marian sighed and wondered if ever again she should feel so much interest in anything as one could hear in that girl's voice. The play held nothing for her. She wondered how it was with James. To her the pretense of enjoyment was becoming a burden and she wished that they had not come.

"She says she does not love him, but he'll never know. Oh, it's awfully exciting!" Again Marian felt the stir in the audience, again she longed to see the play with the heart and eyes of the girl. If she could keep her thoughts upon the actors she must forget, for a little while, her heartache. "He says he's a buttinski. Oh, he's the funniest."

The curtain fell, the lights flashed up. Marian found herself in a state of painful bewilderment. Sometimes when she and James talked it over between the acts, they could come to a better understanding of the play. She took a cautious glance at her husband. He was sitting severely straight and still.

Marian gave up all thought of following the play. An unexpected tragedy had come into her own life, and nothing could blot it from her mind. Each moment she was becoming more frightened at the outcome of her quarrel. They could not go on like this.

"Hector says he'll stand by her to the end, if he dies for it." It was the girl's voice again in explanation.

Marian felt a relaxation of her tense nerves. Oh, what a time she should have had to keep James quiet if—. She was back at the old worry again. It pressed harder. She began to believe that she could not bear it much longer. She would have to tell James, but things could never be the same again. He had doubted her and he had been so cruel about it that he had forced her to tell.

Marian glanced at her husband. He cleared his throat and changed his position. The voice in continued conversation was tantalizingly familiar. Cautiously Marian moved her head. Just a little way, and then—

"Oh, mamma, there's the lady that comes to Helen's to give us the dancing lessons. Yes, the one right here in the silk dress, the shepherd's check. Oh, she is just lovely!"

"That's her husband; Helen showed him to me yesterday. He is awfully good looking."

Marian moved closer to the chair next the aisle and whispered:

"I—I wanted to buy that Gibbons for your birthday, James, with my own money. I knew you wouldn't like my doing—"

"Don't, dear," murmured James.

He kept a firm hold of her hand, pressing it gently now and again. She knew that he was ruining her glove but she was content. And while the last act held little more for her than the first and second, she could guess that it ended happily. And it gave a pretty glow to the reconciliation that had, in the past 15 minutes, changed things for her so materially.

Added Years

"If you desire to realize that time is flitting and you are getting old," said the girl who likes to talk, "go live at a summer resort for a few years!

"I still can swim a half mile and I yet break into a speedy run when I am in a hurry. I don't use crutches nor false teeth. Nevertheless, this season a crushing sense of my antiquity has descended upon me. When I investigated the queer feeling that surrounded me I found it was the atmosphere of the shelf I was upon. There I was, tucked away coldly! I've been peering out over the edge lately at what is going on down below and, believe me, it is both appalling and entertaining!

"Just a few years back the Daggett children used to go by with their nurse. They were scrawny and quarreling and Tom Daggett always made Susie cry. I used to think what a mercy it was that their parents were blind enough to love them, because, goodness knows, no other human being would have done so!

"I wish you could see Tom this year. He is the best looking creature in five counties and all the girls are crazy about him. They hang on his slightest word and if he asks one to go canoeing she nearly faints with joy. The other night he led the cotillon at the party. As for Susie—I helped her make a doll's dress just yesterday, I believe, and yet at that same dance I found myself admiring a willowy, dark eyed, rose cheeked, haughty young person, and bless me if it wasn't Susie Daggett!

"It seems perfectly absurd that she should be sitting up later than 8 o'clock! She isn't satisfied with being a belle among the boys of her own age, selfish thing! but she has to grab out for the older men, too! I'll have to box her ears if she doesn't look out.

"Just a year ago I realized only vaguely that the Crosbys had a daughter. Lillian was a shy, silent little thing, always slipping out of sight and mooning by herself and scared to death when any outsiders appeared. I don't know what has happened to her, but I suspect that some one told her she was pretty, and that settled it. I can't turn around now without setting eyes on Lillian Crosby in the most distracting outing suits, working her eyelashes till I know they're getting frayed and smiling at precisely the angle to show her dimples!

"'We're going to have a hay ride,' she told me casually once when there was nobody else to talk to. 'The young crowd, I mean. Dear me, I should think it would be so stupid for the rest of you, with nothing to do!'

"I restrained myself from grasping her firmly by the shoulders and shaking her! Haven't I taken hay rides till I had so much hay down my neck and in my ears and eyes and throat that I never wanted to look at a haystack again as long as I lived? Haven't I had suppers on the beach and eaten sand in the deviled eggs, ants in the sandwiches and June bugs in the cake and thought I was having the time of my life? Haven't I sung 'We're here because we're here, because we're here' till I swallowed mosquitoes all the way home? Haven't I fallen over the fence trying to get into the front door in the pitch dark? And then that infant has the nerve to act as though all the joys of life were denied me, just because she was going on a scratchy, uncomfortable, choked up expedition instead of sanely eating supper at home!

"The last straw, however, was when Jim came over from Chicago to see me. Naturally, I wanted to show him the place by moonlight. It was not at all that we were hunting secluded spots! Besides, all the chairs on our front porch were occupied. Quite casually we headed for the summer house on the lake shore, but as we stepped inside I heard some one murmur: 'Did you ever care for another girl before me!' It was Lillian and Tom Daggett!

"I should have spanked them both and sent them home, but I contented myself with saying, in a stern tone: 'Oh, excuse me!' Then we walked on. I knew of a most charming retreat under the wild grape vine, where you have a lovely view of the moon. Just before we stepped around I heard a deep masculine voice of nineteen or twenty blurt out: 'Susie, did you ever care for another man as you do for me?'

"I grabbed Jim hysterically at this and we ran. There was another infant couple at the end of the pier and still more infants were out in all the rowboats. There didn't seem to be any place on earth for Jim and me except under the lake or up with the old people under the glare of the arc light telling stories about what happened before the war.

"Jim growled in disgust: 'Before I come here again I wish you'd manage to kill off a few dozen of these pestiferous children! There are so many of them that a few more or less won't really matter, and then we'd have room to breathe!'

"I think I'll have to! I'm going to begin with Tom Daggett's freshman friend. He said that the resort would be a nice place if there weren't so many old folks around cluttering up the verandas and the ferry boats and making things uncomfortable for people."—Chicago Daily News.

Sharing An Orphan

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press)

"And there is no hope?" asked Burke softly.

Eunice Telford shook her head.

"I like you very much—very much," she said slowly. "But I don't think that it is more than liking, Burke."

Burke Edwards gritted his teeth hard as he looked out over the water for a moment, but when he turned his head again the pain had gone from his features and he was again the Burke that Eunice liked so well.

For a long time they had been good friends—Eunice liked to call it chums—and more than once he had asked for a reconsideration of his proposal, but Eunice always shook her head. She liked Burke; liked him better than any of the other men she knew, but he seemed to lack tenderness and that was the quality Eunice most admired. She was sorry to inflict pain and suggested that they might go in if he wished.

"No, thanks," he said evenly. "It's more pleasant out here on the drive."

Across the road three boys were playing ball. On the curb sat another boy of about their age dressed in the gingham apron that was the uniform of the orphanage up the street.

'How absurd," said Eunice. "That boy must be twelve and yet he is wearing an apron like a little boy of six."

"They all have to wear them," explained Burke. "They are easily washed and they are cheaper than coats. They wear them the year 'round."

"Not in winter," gasped Eunice.

"Sure," explained Burke. "My sister's house overlooks their yard and you can see them playing in the snow. I don't think there is an overcoat in the place. Mostly they tie the aprons about their waists in a vain endeavor to suggest a shirt waist when they are let out. It's the reward of especial merit to be permitted to come over to the drive alone."

The ball slipped from one of the players' hands and came rolling toward the orphanage boy. He sprang up to toss it back, but the player came rushing up.

"You leave that ball alone," he demanded hotly. "We ain't goin' to have you charity kids swiping our ball, are we, fellows?"

The others had joined the first and the assent was unanimous. "You girls are getting too fresh," went on the first speaker. "Why don't you stay in your prison and play by yourselves? We don't want girl-boys over here. Who wants to play with a boy who wears dresses?"

The orphan had sprung to his feet at the first approach. There was cold welcome to the orphans from the boys in the fashionable apartments along the drive and the first demonstration of hostility was sufficient warning. Now he faced his tormentors hotly.

"I'm no girl," he cried, "even if I do have to wear an apron. I'm not to blame for that."

"You are a girl," insisted the aggressor. "You don't wear a coat and you do wear a dress. Go on. I could lick you with one hand."

By way of illustration, his fist shot out and bruised the pale cheek of the orphan. With a cry, Eunice sprang up, but Burke's arm held her back.

"Wait a moment," he said quietly. "It would be a treat to see some of those young snobs get thrashed."

The boy had answered the blow and the fight had become general. It was three against one, but that one was holding his own bravely and Burke looked on approvingly. The orphan, smarting under a sense of wrong, was a match for the three and fought them savagely.

He had them in retreat almost before Eunice realized that the battle was over. The elevator boy in one of the houses bordering the drive, came running over, seeing in prospect a fat tip for taking the part of the tenant's sons, but Burke was beside the boy as he came up and the newcomer hesitated.

"Those youngsters got what they deserved," he said shortly. "Clear out of here."

"I've been wanting to see some of these young bullies trimmed up for some time," he said with a satisfied smile. "Those kiddies cannot help the absurd fashion in which they have to dress and the young snobs know it. I'm going to adopt that boy."

"Just because he is a good fighter?" asked Eunice contemptuously.

Burke turned to her with a new expression on his face, a light in the kindly blue eyes that she had never seen before, though the men he worked with knew it and were warned.

"Because he has the spirit to avenge his wrongs," he answered. "Because he deserves a better chance than he can get in that institution. I am going to give him the chance that is his heritage because he has in him the makings of a man."

Eunice put out her hand. "Forgive me," she cried. "I did not understand. I want to share your orphan, Burke. It was because you seemed to care so little for others that I feared to marry you. I am not afraid now, dear."

His hand closed over hers as he softly quoted: "And a little child shall lead them."

No man is the wiser for his learning.

Discomfited Masher.

A gray-haired masher, easily over sixty years of age, was given a cold reception when he endeavored to become acquainted with the wife of a well-known newspaper man recently.

The day was cold and rainy. The newspaper man's wife was standing holding an open umbrella. She was waiting for her car. The gray-bearded individual unannounced stooped under her umbrella, and stood beside her for an instant before he remarked:

"You seem to be waiting for some one."

He was nearly taken off his feet when the woman with a quick reply said, "I think you are mistaken, Santa Claus.'

The gray-bearded individual left suddenly.

Difference in Fathers.

Mme de Stael, daughter of M. Necker, being at a ball with the daughter of M. de Guichen, lieutenant general of the marine, for whom she was in mourning, kept tormenting the latter to dance. The woman replied that she could not dance while she was in mourning for her father; but Mme de Stael still importuned her, until she said:

"Consider, madame, if you had had the misfortune to lose your father, could you think of dancing so soon?"

"Oh!" returned the other with a haughty air, "there is such a difference between fathers and fathers."

"True, madame," replied her companion, "there is a great difference. My father served his king and country for sixty years—yours, in a fortnight, has ruined both."

THORNDIKE.

Death of a Former Resident.

Edward Ford, 38, died the past week in Cambridge. The deceased was at one time a resident of this place, but had worked in the former place for the past 14 years, being engaged in the foundry business. The funeral was held from the Catholic church in Cambridge, where a mass of requiem was offered. He was a member of the Foresters of America and the Holy Name society, both of which attended in a body. The deceased leaves a wife and three children, besides four sisters, Mrs. Daniel Sullivan and Mrs. Ernest Bordeau of Thorndike, Mrs. J. Howard of Northampton and Mrs. J. Murphy of New York, also one brother, Patrick of Thorndike.

Monson News.

Hat Shop Will Stay Here.

Cushman Mill Property Sold to Heimann & Lichten For Factory.

There has been general rejoicing among the people of Monson since Wednesday afternoon, when Julius Heimann, senior partner of the firm of Heimann & Lichten of New York city, announced that the firm had decided to continue their hat manufacturing business in the town and that they had purchased the Cushman mill property on Cushman street. This includes the plant itself, a four-story structure of brick built in 1886, and the water privilege and pond, one four-tenement block and one single tenement on the south side of the street, and all of the land on the north side of the street from the mill to the Methodist church, including the large boarding house. The land included amounts to about 11 acres.

In the transaction the Cushmans will receive the site of land on the corner of Main and Washington streets, on which the former hat factory was located. Just what this land will be used for has not been definitely decided upon.

Although the purchase will cause general rejoicing in Monson, there is some regret that one industry is to be discontinued, but the importance of the Cushman mill is small in comparison with the hat shop; the mill employed but 75 hands while the hat shop employed between 400 and 500.

The first cloth making industry on the site of the Cushman mill was in operation as early as 1800, when a cording and finishing mill was in operation. In 1813 a two-set woolen mill was built on the site, and until 1877 the mill was operated under the direction of Horatio Lyon. At that time it went into the hands of Soloman F. Cushman, father of the present owners of the property, and has been operated under the name of S. F. Cushman & Sons for many years. At the end of about six weeks, which time will be necessary for them to close out their stock, Heimann & Lichten will take possession.

The first hat was made and completed in the temporary shop in the Langewald mill Wednesday afternoon and it is a matter of a very few days when the entire force of felt, velvet and satin hat employers will be called to work.

Fund For Sidewalks Insufficient.

Work on the Thompson street sidewalk, for which the sum of $400 was appropriated at the town meeting last spring, is progressing rapidly under the direction of Selectman J. P. Herlihy, but it is found that the appropriation will be sufficient for the construction of but little more than half of the proposed sidewalk from Granite street to North Main street. The large boulders which had to be broken or blasted made the construction of the walk more expensive, and therefore the work will have to be stopped when the appropriation runs out until another year when another appropriation can be made.

Rev. F. W. McConnell Resigns.

Rev. F. W. McConnell, pastor of the Methodist church, has resigned to take effect August 15. It is learned with much regret that he is to leave town as his pastorate here has been a successful one. His resignation is to enable him to accept an appointment as an instructor in a girls' college in Lynchburg, Va. Mr. McConnell is a graduate of Boston Theological University.

Mrs. F. S. Chapman, who for the past two weeks has been chaperoning a party of young people at Webster Lake at Webster, has returned to her home on Green street.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Stanton, Mr. and Mrs. Emory Prentice and Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Faulkins and family of Cushman street are spending the month in Nova Scotia.

By the will of Mrs. Louise J. Morris, late of Springfield, formerly of Monson, the sum of $500 was bequeathed to Monson Academy, the interest on which is to be used a scholarship as the trustees see fit.

While washing clothes at her home on Green street Tuesday, Mrs. Wesby Lilly was painfully injured. A large black pin pierced her hand and broke off just below the skin. It was removed by Dr. E. W. Capen and fortunately no serious consequences resulted.

An afternoon bridge whist party will be held at the Quaboag country club house at North Monson to-morrow afternoon in charge of Mrs. A. D. Ellis, Miss H. F. Cushman, Mrs. F. S. Chapman, Mrs. R. D. Tucker, Mrs. A. D. Norcross, Miss Cook and Miss Muskgrove.

The dam at the Conant pond is being rebuilt under the direction of the water commissioners. This will give an additional storage of water, which is case of necessity can be turned in to the mains at once in case of serious fire, or for domestic use in case of a serious drought.

For the third time in five years, the 9-years-old son of Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Johnson of South Main street fell and broke his right arm below the elbow, at his home Saturday evening. He was jumping from a settee to a horizontal bar, missed and fell to the ground, breaking his arm. He was attended by Dr. Capen.

About thirty of the Summer Sewers met at the club house Monday and spent a very pleasant and busy afternoon with Mrs. Andrews as hostess. It was voted to take a penny collection each week for the purpose of raising money to be used in sending flowers and other comforts to sick or shut-in people in town. Miss Mildred Moulton, Miss Bessie Allen and Miss Ruth Hibbard were elected a special committee to investigate such people. The club will meet next Monday afternoon with Miss Frances Brainerd on Main street.

GREAT WRITER IN JEOPARDY

Charles Dickens Once Threatened With Arrest for Attempting to Pass Counterfeit Money.

One night when Dickens had retired at Gad's Hill he found he could not sleep. So he got up, dressed and determined to walk to London, about thirty miles away. He reached the suburbs early in the morning and applied at an early coffee house for some refreshments. When he had finished he gave the proprietor a sovereign, the smallest coin he had with him

"It's a bad un," said the man, biting at it and trying to twist it in all directions, "and I shall give you in charge."

The coin did have a suspicious look Dickens had carried some substance in his pocket which had oxidized it. Seeing that matters looked awkward, he said,

"But I am Charles Dickens!"

"Come, that won't do; any man could say he was Charles Dickens. How do I know?"

The man had been victimized a week previous and would take no more chances. At length Dickens suggested that they go to a chemist's and have the coin tested. A chemist was finally found when the shops had opened. The chemist immediately recognized the novelist, in spite of his dusty appearance, and the coffee house keeper was satisfactorily convinced that he had not been entertaining a confidence man.

No Use.

Johnnie was out walking with his nurse, who stopped with him to look at a funeral on his block As the coffin was carried down the stoop Johnnie asked, "What is that?" Nurse replied, "That's the box Mr. Brown is in."

When asked that night to say his prayers he refused to do so. After much coaxing and questioning he was prevailed upon to tell the reason of his refusal.

"'Cause God won't have time tonight to hear them, he'll be too busy unpacking Mr Brown."

Last of Schagticoke Indians.

The few survivors of the Litchfield county (Conn.) tribe of Schagticoke Indians own 300 acres of land and five houses, valued at $3,000, besides a little personal property. They subsist by selling potatoes and other products, cutting railroad ties and wood and working on neighboring farms. The tribe is reduced to ignorance and poverty as a result of leading shiftless lives and by intermarriage and mixtures of races. The great event at the reservation is the annual rattlesnake hunt in the spring, when the paleface joins in the sport and furnishes all the whisky antidote needed.

KNOW IT WELL

Familiar Features Well Known to Hundreds of Palmer Citizens.

A familiar burden in many a home.

The burden of a "bad back."

A lame, a weak or an aching back

Often tells you of kidney ills.

Doan's Kidney Pills are for weak kidneys.

Here is good testimony to prove it.

W. E. Griffin, North Wilbraham, Mass., says: "I injured my back about two years ago and after that had considerable trouble from my kidneys. There was a dull pain in my back and it was often impossible for me to get about. The kidney secretions were too frequent in passage and caused me annoyance. My general health was affected and when I saw Doan's Kidney Pills advertised so highly, I procured a box. This remedy gave me prompt relief and I continued its use until all symptoms of kidney trouble had disappeared."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—DOAN'S—and take no other.

German Students and Their Dogs.

Dogs are nowhere in such favor as companions for men as among the college students of Germany. Each student is apt to have one or more marked by the college colors and trained to render service by carrying water, baskets, bundles and the like.

Slow Process.

"Do you think your constituents favor the initiative and referendum?"

"Can't decide yet," replied Senator Sorghum. "They haven't yet got through arguing about the exact meaning of 'it is plain.'"

Tip to Talkers.

You can't prove you are a good talker by doing it all; comparisons are needed.

Wife's Unqualified Praise.

The young novelist, had had a hard time of it, and his dear wife had had just as hard a one. She held his talents in poor esteem and often urged him to try something else, for she was sometimes hungry and all the time ill clad. But one day his luck changed. He began to make money. And there came a day when he was able to write his check for $100 and pass it to his wife.

Her eyes filled with tears as she read it.

"Willibrand, darling," she said, as she hastened around the table and put her arm about his neck, "I'll take back all the mean things I ever said about your work. This is the best thing you ever wrote?"

Novel Forces.

Two novel forces have arisen in recent times for the defense and support of the religious feeling; psychology and comparative religion; these are already applying to the soul the same vitalizing method which the scientists have applied to the rest of the universe.

Weight of Snow.

A cubic foot of newly fallen snow weighs five and one-half pounds and has 12 times the bulk of an equal weight of water.

Delayed in Transit

Corson smiled to himself as the camp came in sight when he rounded the point in his frail canoe. It was the first time that Corson had smiled in some weeks, for he had passed a dolorous summer in town. At the camp, he was sure to find rest from the doubts that assailed him, for in the woods Charley Corson forgot even Lillian Blakslee.

It was not an easy matter to forget Lillian, for Lillian had been the cause of his wretched summer. He had let the Blakslees have the camp for the hot months. His business kept him in town through what Corson called the "scorching season," but he had taken pleasure in the thought that Lillian was in camp and learning to love it as much as he did.

Next year he hoped that there would be a June wedding, and a July honeymoon in the camp. There was nothing more than an understanding between them, but Lillian had made it plain what her answer would be when Corson spoke, and as the weeks sped by, and her letters grew more and more irregular, Corson first grew puzzled, then worried.

Even when they broke camp Corson did not learn the fact until after they had left the woods. Mrs. Blakslee's note of thanks hinted at an earlier letter, but there was none from Lillian, and Mrs. Blakslee did not speak of her. In spite of the thanks, there was a tinge of coldness and reserve in her note that made Corson more doleful than ever. He and Mrs. Blakslee were great chums. Now she seemed to share Lillian's dislike.

He had welcomed the news that the camp was again at his disposal, for in the woods he could forget his troubles for a time, and find the rest that he sought. The camp might remind him of Lillian, but with rod or gun he could conjure the vision away.

He paddled to shore, and was delighted to find that the camp had been left in perfect order. The Blakslees had brought their servant with them, and it was only necessary to remove the board shutters from doors and windows, give things a dusting and set up housekeeping. Before long a pot of coffee was perfuming the air, and bacon was sizzling in the pan.

The supper things out of the way, Corson fired his pipe, and made the round of the camp. He had reached the rough road that ran at the rear of the camp, when he encountered the dead stump that two years before had been used as the mail box for a private mail delivery. Teddy Griscom had been in camp with him that year, and it was Teddy who induced one of the farmers to make tri-weekly trips with the mail. Ted had fixed up the stump as their private box.

There was a cunningly contrived door in the opposite side of the trunk, and Corson glanced in to see how much the stump had decayed since the year before.

To his surprise he found that the cavity was half filled with letters and in a flash he realized that the Blakslee's servant, a recently landed emigrant, had mailed the letters here.

It was all clear enough now. He carefully did them up in a bundle and then he sat down to write a letter of explanation.

"I never supposed that the letters had been 'delayed in transit,'" he concluded, "and I blame myself for not understanding what the matter was. I should have removed the slot from the tree, but I didn't suppose that even a newly-arrived 'greeny' would suppose that Uncle Sam had mail boxes scattered through the woods. It was a delight to get so many letters from you all at once, but I will swap the lot for one little letter containing the single word 'Yes.'"

He made a special trip to the village to mail the package and then made daily trips for the answer. He had not long to wait. Before the end of the week he found a bulky letter in the box and he could not wait until he got to camp to read it. With the canoe floating on the surface of the lake he let it drift while he read over the letter.

"It was not Norah," wrote Lillian, "but the rest of us—and Teddy Griscom. When we left town Ted begged us to use his private post office if we wanted to. I suppose that he thought we should see the joke, but we didn't and unless we were going to town we mailed the letters in the box and it never occurred to us to wonder whether they had been collected or not. You see we are not woodsmen like yourself. Next year you can show us, for I accept your offer of exchange and will send the 'Yes' as soon as I receive the package. I don't want to let you keep the letters after we are married to prove what a bad temper I had."

Corson struck across the lake as he had never paddled before and he got the letters back in time for the night mail. Then he paddled home more slowly and in the cool of the evening he dug up the trunk and dragged it to the camp.

It is still used as a mail box, but it stands within the hall and Mrs. Corson warns their occasional guests that letters are liable to be delayed in transit.

"We lost a lot that way," she explains, but she does not add the explanation of the smiling glance that is exchanged between herself and Corson when she speaks of the letters.

One religion is as true as another.

A Hole in the Wall

A large and very gray old dog came shambling up the pebbled path leading to the veranda of Orrin Cannon's country home. With a half growl at the owner, the animal entered the open door and vanished down the corridor.

Cannon was a new resident of Dewberry, the little village that he had motored through the year before, and that had so inspired him by its quiet and its greenness. This old manse, with the well-kept lawn and neat paths and rare shrubbery, had appealed to him, and a chance remark to the one general merchant of the community, where he had stopped to buy gasoline, had elicited the information that the place was for sale. An impulsive word to his lawyer upon reaching Boston, and the estate was his.

Cannon possessed a fine greyhound. After the curious dog had entered the house there came out to the nature lover the sounds of strenuous battle.

"Keno objects to company," laughed Cannon, as he hurriedly entered the house.

The aged shepherd dog was outclassed. He was pretty well torn by the punishing jaws of the lithe Keno before Cannon could part them.

Strange to say, the old dog showed no disposition to leave, even after this chastisement. Calling a servant, Cannon turned over to him the bruised and mangled canine with instructions to mend him as well as possible before allowing him to go his way.

That afternoon the Bostonian received his first visitor—a minister of a sect of worship strong in New England.

"I am the pastor of the local flock," prefaced Rev. John Dobbs, "and I came to ask if we are to include you in our congregation."

Before Cannon could answer, there came to him again the war-like canine voices, and rushing into the hall he dragged the resentful greyhound from the persistent collie.

"I perceive," came from Rev. John Dobbs, when the two were again in the parlor. "I perceive, sir, that you are of a kindly disposition. Miss Helen wil thank you for your treatment of her dog. He is old. He forgets that this place is no longer his home."

"Ah, then he used to belong here? That accounts for his persistence!"

"Yes, he is owned by Miss Helen. When her uncle died, and by some mischance failed to leave a will making her his heiress, his scape-grace son came into the property, and it was promptly offered for sale. We are all positive that Judge Gray wished Helen to have, at his demise, all of his earthly possessions, but—"

The visit of the minister was followed within the hour by the arrival of a very pretty and evidently very much worried young woman.

"You!" she cried when Orrin Cannon answered the ring at his door.

Cannon's own dark eyes beamed recognition.

"You!" he echoed. "Helen Darrow, of all people! I can't imagine you as a resident of this town."

"Nevertheless, I am," laughed the girl. "The miracle, to my mind, is that you are the Cannon who has bought my uncle's home." A wistful look came into her great blue-black eyes. "I don't know of any one I would rather see here," she finished.

It was a warm June day. Cannon had drawn a porch chair forward for the girl.

"You should have married me, Helen," said the man. "You know I loved you, and—sometimes—I half believed you loved me—in spite of the fact that you sent me away."

"Bark, g-r-o-w-l, bark," came from the hall, and with an impatient explanation Cannon sprang to his feet and dashed into the hall.

The dogs were fighting again.

While the two previous battles were beyond doubt won by the greyhound, this melee was in favor of the collie, who had a throat hold on his enemy.

Hither and yon threshed the combatants, nor could Cannon get to them until after they had smashed into a heavy umbrella holder and sent it crashing to the floor.

Then a strange thing happened.

As the huge affair struck the side of the tiled wall three feet of this swung silently inward on a concealed hinge to reveal a heavy safe.

"Oh!"

The girl, who had followed Cannon into the hall, gasped at the revelation.

"The hidden safe that uncle told me of, and that I could never find!"

The door of the safe was ajar. It contained but one article—an important looking paper.

"A will!" came breathlessly from the girl, after she had read this, and it leaves everything to me!"

"Which," ruefully commented the youth, with a sigh, "puts you farther away from me than ever."

"It unites us," corrected the girl, and two arms, there in the dusk of the hall, crept up and about his neck. "I would be lonesome here alone—dear—I want you. I—I want you, O! so much."

Outside, the greyhound bayed angrily, and the collie on guard at the door, ears a-cock, growled in defiance.

BONDSVILLE.

Banister, returned to her home in Putnam, Ct., Sunday.

Mrs. Minnie Gowan and two daughters, Helen and Marguerite, have returned to their home in Medway after spending a ten-days' vacation with her mother, Mrs. Mary Fauteux.

The many friends of Jeremiah Spellane, an old resident who has been residing in New Bedford since spring, will be pleased to know that he has accepted a position in the Holyoke mills.

Mrs. R. L. Bond is spending the week with her daughter, Mrs. A. C. Cordner, in Longmeadow, during the absence of her husband, Andrew Cordner, who is in Montreal, where he has business interests.

Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Knowlton and daughter of Springfield were guests Sunday of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Knowlton. Mr. Knowlton returned home Sunday night, but Mrs. Knowlton and daughter remained for a longer visit.

The lawn party to be given by the parishioners of St. Bartholomew's church will be held next Thursday and Friday evenings. There will be different tables, including those for fancy work, ice cream, candy and other things. There will be an entertainment consisting of solos and drills.

Rain which had been badly needed for the past six weeks made its appearance in a mild thunder shower and a regular downpour of rain Friday evening; another rain came Sunday morning and the sky was overcast all day. The lawns have commenced to look fresher and the garden crops have taken a fresh start.

John Fitzgerald, the youngest son of Patrick Fitzgerald, who injured his right foot nearly two weeks ago, while walking up the abutment of the railroad bridge near Carmody's crossing, is improving and will soon be able to be around with the use of crutches. The young lad stepped on a rolling stone which threw him heavily to the ground where he remained for sometime before help came. He was taken home in a team and has been confined to the house and under the care of a physician since the accident.

Finally Excused.

A juror summoned to serve in the court of Judge Gates asked to be excused because of pressing business that he must attend to. The judge refused to excuse him and went on with the examination of other jurors. Every once in a while this juror would interrupt and ask to be excused because of the pressing needs of his business and the judge would command him to sit down. At last Judge Gates, losing patience, demanded:

"And what is your business, sir, that is so pressing?"

"I am a guard at the smallpox hospital and I have left six smallpox patients there this morning who need my attention," he answered.

There was a stampede from the court room and the judge, holding his handkerchief to his nose, nodded for the juror to go.—Exchange

COLLIDED WITH AUTO.

Man Gets Broken Leg By Stepping Against Car.

AFTER FRONT HAD GONE PAST HIM.

Autoists Do Everything Possible For Victim in Early Morning Hours Tuesday.

Wojcieh Sliska is in the House of Mercy hospital in Springfield with a broken ankle and internal injuries as the result of careless familiarity with an auto on the highway Tuesday morning.

Sliska was walking in the road east of the electric plant at Blanchardville about three in the morning, when an auto approached from behind. It swung out to pass the man, but when the front of the machine had gone by Sliska stepped back against the rear mud-guard. He was thrown down and his left ankle broken, besides receiving internal injuries.

The driver of the car was Charles E. Harris of Easthampton, and there were several people with him. They took the man aboard and brought him to Palmer. The police were notified of the accident and Dr. J. P. Schneider was summoned. He made the man as comfortable as possible and accompanied him to the hospital, the trip being made in the Harris car. Everything possible was done for the injured man by those in the auto party.

Motor Truck Through Bridge.

West Brimfield Structure Gives Way; No Damage Except to Bridge.

The three-ton motor truck of the Palmer Trucking company broke through a bridge over the Quaboag river near West Brimfield Monday afternoon, but did not drop into the river and was finally got out without any serious damage.

The truck had been to the Marcy & Gardner yards at West Brimfield for brick, and the men had loaded on 2000, weighing somewhere between four and five tons. The "King" bridge west of the station was not considered safe, so the route to the state highway was taken. As the rear of truck rolled upon the bridge the timbers gave way and the load dropped. The rear of the truck, which has a considerable overhang, had not cleared the abutment however, and about a foot of it caught there. The front wheels remained on the river end of the timbers, which had not broken, and there the truck hung, the rear wheels suspended in the air.

The town of Brimfield had some heavy timbers near, and these were secured and the vehicle jacked up, after which it was run off under its own power and was found to be practically uninjured. The men on the load, John and Wallace Maynard, were uninjured. The bridge is of iron with wooden timbers and floor, and has long been considered unsafe for heavy loads. In fact, a former town official states that he remembers a consultation with the Brimfield selectmen back in the later '90s, when the bridge was condemned.

HAMPDEN.

Emerson G. Gaylord has nearly completed a garage on his place.

Misses Kenia and Florence Carew and Miss Hazel Pease are spending two weeks at Block Island.

Mrs. J. L. Moore entertained a party of 10 friends from Springfield at Maple Tree Inn Monday evening.

Charles N. Whitaker has been appointed tax collector by the selectmen and he has duly qualified.

At a meeting of the Hampden baseball club Monday evening, Frank D. Perry resigned as captain and secretary. Robert S. Brown was elected captain and Francis Eldridge was elected secretary.

The assessors have completed their work and find the total valuation of the real and personal property in the town is $424,575, showing an increase of $17,995 over the valuation of last year. Appropriations made by the town amount to $6070. This is about $550 more than the amount of the appropriations last year. The state tax of $625 is $75 more than last year. The county tax, $365.63, is $9 less than last year. The tax rate is $16 on $1000. This is $1 more than the rate of last year.

Old Home Week at Wales.

Celebration Begins To-morrow, Continued Sunday. Many Visitors.

Preparations are fully completed for the annual Old Home celebration in Wales. All the week visitors have been arriving in town, and they have come from all sections of the country back to the place of their birth or former residenee, or the residenee of their ancestors. Many of them have not been in the town before for years. Fully 1000 souvenir postal invitations to the gathering were sent out, the cards bearing a cut of the residence of William Peck.

The celebration begins to-morrow forenoon, when there will be special music, with a baseball game and other sports. At noon there will be a dinner, followed at 1 o'clock by speaking by various residents and visitors. The address of the day will be by Rev. Charles H. Ricketts of Norwich, Ct.

Sunday afternoon there will be services in the old Baptist church, the speaker being Rev. H. P. Smith of Dayton, Ohio. The church is an ancient structure and is not now used for regular services. It contains a museum which has been established by those who take an interest in the old home celebrations, and additions are constantly being made to the collection therein.

Accepts Important Position.

Three Rivers Man Goes to Management of Large Fruit Farm.

Albert R. Jenks of Three Rivers has accepted the position of fruit manager of the large estate of C. G. Rice in Ipswich. This is the largest fruit farm in New England, having 120 acres of apples, 65 acres of pears, 18 acres of red raspberries, besides peaches, plums, currants, gooseberries and strawberries. Mr. Jenks will have under him a force of 50 or 60 men.

Mr. Jenks was born in Palmer and graduated from its high school in 1907. He was graduated last year from the Massachusetts Agricultural college at Amherst, and has received the degree of B. S. from Boston University. He was a member of the agricultural college faculty, lecturing upon fruit subjects, but resigned last April to take charge of his own fruit farm near Three Rivers and his new orchards in Hampden. He has received several flattering offers since that time, but has refused them all until now; one was an offer of the professorship of horticulture in the University of Kentucky.

Mr. Jenks was much interested in village improvement, and it was largely through his efforts that something over 100 shade trees were set in Three Rivers last spring. He was also closely identified with the effort to teach foreigners the English language, and did much work in that line in the evening schools.

START OF BAD BLAZE.

Fire Wednesday in Paint Barrel in Barn Basement.

CHEMICALS MANAGE TO CONTROL IT.

One of Group of Four Wooden Structures Surrounded by Other Buildings of Wood.

The immense value of chemical extinguishers in the first moments of a fire was demonstrated in a forceful manner Wednesday forenoon, when a blaze was discovered in the cellar of a barn in the rear of 386 Main street, owned by H. W. Holbrook and occupied by the Central Massachusetts Electric company as a storehouse. Several employes were at work on the ground floor when one was sent to the basement for an article. He secured it and turned to come out, when fire blazed up close to his feet from the base of a barrel of paint. He yelled an alarm and those up-stairs ran to his assistance. An attempt was made to throw earth on the blaze, but it was too hot to get near. H. W. Holbrook was at work in his garden within 50 feet of the fire, and securing an extinguisher which was in his barn turned it on the blaze, which by this time was filling the entire basement. Two others were at hand in a moment or two and held the fire until the arrival of the auto truck and the larger supply of chemicals from one of its big tanks. This squelched the blaze in short order and the damage was slight. There were all the "makin's" of a big blaze however, and had it started in the night the damage might have been extensive, as there are several barns close by.

Annual Furniture Sale.

Forbes & Wallace of Springfield announce in a full page ad. on page three to-day their 11th annual August furniture sale. This is their greatest sale of the year and includes good furniture for every room in the house. A greater stock, larger variety and better bargains are the features which make this sale more important than any of its predecessors to the people of this section.

HAD NIMBLE FINGERS.

Woman Abstracts $10 Bill From Man's Pocketbook.

WHILE HE HOLDS IT AND WATCHES.

Money Not Missed Until Later. Woman Arrested and Pays Fine. Second Victim.

The three-card monte player's dictum that his game is simply one of "the quickness of the hand deceiving the eye" was convincingly exemplified last Friday when a gypsy, giving later the name of Lizzie Mitchell, extracted a $10 bill from the pocketbook of Herbert Sumner while he held the book and watched every movement — or thought he did — which she made.

The woman appeared at Mr. Sumner's place of work and in an attempt to reveal what the future had in store for him secured a small coin. She then proceeded to go through an incantation, blessed the coin, made a few supposedly magic passes and expressed a desire to wish the coin into Mr. Sumner's pocketbook. He suspected that she was up to some scheme, but thought he'd keep a sharp watch. He produced the pocketbook, in which lay several bills, and held it in his hand. The woman made a few more passes, said a few more words and tucked the coin into the book, which Mr. Sumner all the time retained in his possession. He returned it to his pocket, but on examining it later missed a $10 bill. The woman was apprehended later and released on bail until Saturday morning, when she appeared in the district court to answer to a charge of larceny. She was found guilty and fined $25, which she paid.

She came from Worcester to Palmer Saturday for her trial, and on the way, just to keep her hand in and assist in paying the expenses of the trip, worked the same game on the conductor of the train, although the amount she secured from him was small. He discovered his loss before reaching Palmer, and gave her the choice of restoring the money or being handed over to an officer here; the money was given back.

Representative Candidates.

F. Q. Ball of Monson Decides to Run, Also S. M. Stebbins.

Announcement was made Monday that Freelon Q. Ball of Monson had consented to be a candidate for the Republican nomination for representative in the first Hampden district. His papers are being circulated. Mr. Ball is well known in the district and is capable of representing it most acceptably. He is a lawyer and for the past 10 years has been chairman of the board of assessors of Monson, and has also been clerk of the water board for seven years.

Mr. Ball is not to have things all his own way, however, for another candidacy was announced Tuesday, that of Sherman Stebbins of Monson. Mr. Stebbins is a member of the board of selectmen, having held the position for three years, and is superintendent of highways. He is a decidedly practical man, and counts on a maximum of strength among the farmers, to which class he belongs. Mr. Stebbins has made a good highway superintendent, and has been successful in getting help from the state for highway construction in the town. He has proved a good vote-getter in Monson, and is confident of a generous following in the other towns of the district.

Sunday School Convention Date Changed.

Owing to a conflict of dates with another important meeting, the fall convention of the Three Rivers District Sunday School Association at North Brookfield will be held on Tuesday, Sept. 24th, instead of Sept. 17th, as previously announced. Sessions of the day, morning, afternoon and evening are to be held in the Congregational church, and dinner and supper will be served at the Episcopal church. Through the day emphasis will be placed upon actual teaching of classes, the training of teachers, and men's work in the school.

Hampden House Destroyed.

The house of Alvin G. Robbins on the Wilbraham road in Hampden was destroyed by fire Monday morning. Mr. Robbins, who lives alone, discovered the fire about 7.30. It started in the chimney. He called the neighbors to his assistance and a vain effort was made to save the house. The furniture on the first floor was saved, but all on the second floor was lost. The house and contents were covered by insurance. Mr. Robbins intends to rebuild.

Two Calls to Forest Fire.

Firemen Have Hard Fights Sunday in Northeast Corner of Town.

The firemen were called out about 11 o'clock Sunday morning in the A-shaped point of the town which lies between Ware and Warren. It was a fierce blaze and the boys had all they wanted of fire fighting before it was out. They had barely returned to the engine house when they were recalled, about 4.15, to the same place for another hard fight. About 100 acres were burned over.

Ware's Heavy Taxpayers.

The assessors in the town of Ware have completed their work and find there is an increase of $34,040 in the total valuation, which is $4,883,615 this year. The largest taxpayer is of course the Otis company with an assessment of $21,450.26. The rate for the town tax this year is $19.10, which, with the $1.65 for the fire tax, will make the rate $20.75. Those who are assessed for $100 or over are:

Joseph Albertine, $283; Mrs. Johanna Anderson, $112; Ware national bank, $573; Ware savings bank, $712; Mrs. Clara B. Barlow estate, $330; Herbert F. Barnes, $128; Henry F. Barnes, $310; Frank L. ## WEST WARREN.

Death of Charles W. Crouch.

Charles W. Crouch, 64, died at his home on Crouch road Sunday after a long illness of nephritis. Mr. Crouch was born in Brimfield, but came to West Warren with his parents when five years of age and had lived there since. He leaves three children, Mrs. Joseph F. Davis of Thorndike, Leon E. Crouch of Winchester and Miss Mabel, who lived at home; five grandchildren, two sisters, Misses Emma and Ada Crouch of Holyoke. The funeral was held Tuesday afternoon. Rev. William Wilkinson officiating and burial was in Pine Grove cemetery in Warren.

ON WRECKED STEAMER.

Palmer Vacationists Have Some Exciting Experiences.

ON THEIR RETURN TRIP FROM MAINE.

Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Kempton and Son Reginald of Knox Street in Rockland Smash.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Kempton and son Reginald of Knox street returned Wednesday from their vacation with an experience which they will probably remember for the remainder of their lives, but which they do not care to repeat, despite the fact that they came through it unharmed. They were passengers on the steamer Rockland, which collided with a collier just after midnight of Monday in a dense fog off the Maine coast. The Rockland had about 25 feet of her bow crushed in like an eggshell, but the watertight compartments held and the passengers were safely transferred to the collier, in the process of which two of the boats were upset and the passengers dumped into the water, though none were drowned.

Mr. Kempton, who is assistant postmaster, had been with his family to Southport, Maine, on his regular vacation. The party boarded the boat at Bath Monday evening and it left on time at 6.30. Mrs. Kempton, who is a poor sailor, retired immediately after supper, and Reginald, the 14-years-old son, about 9.30. Mr. Kempton met an acquaintanee on the boat and they sat up talking until 11.30, when Mr. Kempton turned in. He had barely got to sleep when the crash came at 12.05. All were immediately awakened, and from the window of the stateroom the lights of the collier could be seen close to. Heads appeared at other windows near by but no one seemed to know what the trouble was. Mr. Kempton partly dressed and stepped into the corridor, where he found employes of the steamer with life preservers on. He took this as a sign that there was serious trouble and began getting them on his wife and son, when there came a call for all to get on life preservers and get out on deck. Here he met his friend and all moved along toward the boats. They barely missed the first two, and it was fortunate that they did, for both were upset and the occupants thrown into the water, though as they all had life preservers on they were quickly rescued. Finally they reached a boat which was being loaded; the order was "Women first," and the captain assisted Mr. Kempton to put his wife over the rail and into the boat. This was the last he saw of her until he reached the collier some time later. After a little while the collier came alongside and the men jumped aboard, the drop being about four feet to the collier's deck. The sea was perfectly smooth, but it was dark and there was a dense fog. The collier proceeded slowly, and later the lights of the Belfast, another steamer, were sighted. She stood by for about 15 miles, when all the passengers — about 300 — were transferred to her and taken on to Boston, arriving there about 9 in the morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Kempton consider themselves fortunate in many ways. When Mr. Kempton applied for a stateroom on Saturday there was already a "Chance" list, on which he was No. 11; staterooms which were uncalled for at sailing time were awarded on this list in the order of the numbers. But on Monday before sailing Mr. Kempton managed to secure an outside room at the rear of the boat, away from the noise of the machinery, and farthest from danger when the smash came. He states that there was not a great deal of undue excitement, though in a gathering of 300 it would be unusual if there were not some hysterics. When he left the stateroom he took his suitcases, determined to hang on to them until compelled to let-go; as a result he saved all his belongings, while others who were not so thoughtful lost theirs. The only loss sustained was a bracelet from Mrs. Kempton's arm, which was pulled off in the handling incident to the trip to the collier in the small boat. At the collier Mrs. Kempton, with the others, was obliged to climb a swinging rope ladder to the deck, and in the process her clothing was somewhat torn.

WILBRAHAM.

H. W. Burbank has sold his farm to S. W. Watts, who will take possession the middle of the month.

Mrs. C. B. Hitchcock was taken to the Hampden hospital in Springfield Friday for an operation for appendicitis and is recovering.

CHAPTER IV.

This time the trail was easier. It was better packed, and they were not carrying mail against time. At Forty Mile they laid over two days for the sake of the dogs, and at Sixty Mile Daylight's team was left with the trader. Unlike Daylight, after the terrible run from Selkirk to Circle City, they had been unable to recuperate on the back trail. So the four men pulled on from Sixty Mile with a fresh team of dogs on Daylight's sled. The following night they camped in the cluster of islands at the mouth of the Stewart. Daylight talked town sites, and, though the others laughed at him, he staked the whole maze of high, wooded island.

"Just supposing the big strike does come on the Stewart," he argued. "Mebbe you-all 'll be in on it, and then again mebbe you-all won't. But I sure will. You-all 'd better reconsider and go in with me on it."

But they were stubborn.

"You're as bad as Harper and Joe Ladue," said Joe Hines. "They're always at that game. You know that big flat jest below the Klondike and under Moosehide Mountain? Well, the recorder at Forty Mile was tellin' me they staked that not a month ago—The Harper & Ladue Town Site. Ha! Ha! Ha!"

Elijah and Finn joined in his laughter; but Daylight was gravely in earnest.

"There she is!" he cried. "The hunch is working! It's in the air, I tell you-all! What'd they-all stake the big flat for if they-all didn't get the hunch? Wish I'd staked it."

The regret in his voice was provocative of a second burst of laughter.

"Laugh, dang you, laugh! Why your eyes ain't open yet. You-all are a bunch of little mewing kittens. I tell you-all if that strikes come on Klondike, Harper and Ladue will be millionaires. And if it comes on Stewart, you-all watch the Elam Harnish town site boom. In them days, when you-all come around makin' poor mouths . . ." He heaved a sigh of resignation. "Well, I suppose I'll have to give you-all a grub-stake or soup, or something or other."

In the meantime there was naught to show for it but hunch. But it was coming. As he would stake his last ounce on a good poker hand, so he staked his life and effort on the hunch that the future held in store a big strike on the Upper River. So he and his three companions, with dogs, and sleds, and snowshoes, toiled up the frozen breast of the Stewart, toiled on and on through the white wilderness where the unending stillness was never broken by the voices of men, the stroke of an ax, or the distant crack of a rifle. Gold they found on the bars, but not in paying quantities, and in the following May they returned to Sixty Mile.

Ten days later, Harper and Joe Ladue arrived at Sixty Mile, and Daylight, strong to obey the hunch that had come to him, traded a third interest in his Stewart town site for a third interest in theirs on the Klondike They had faith in the Upper Country, and Harper left down-stream, with a raft-load of supplies, to start a small post at the mouth of the Klondike.

"Why don't you tackle Indian River, Daylight?" Harper advised, at parting. "There's whole slathers of creeks and draws draining in up there, and somewhere gold just crying to be found. That's my hunch. There's a big strike coming, and Indian River ain't going to be a million miles away."

"And the place is swarming with moose," Joe Ladue added. "Bob Henderson's up there somewhere, been there three years now, swearing something big is going to happen, living off'n straight moose and prospecting around like a crazy man."

Daylight decided to go Indian River a flutter, as he expressed it; and lingered a few days longer arranging his meager outfit. He planned to go in light, carrying a pack of seventy-five pounds and making his five dogs pack as well, Indian fashion, loading them with thirty pounds each. Depending on the report of Ladue, he intended to follow Bob Henderson's example and live practically on straight meat When Jack Kearns' scow, laden with the sawmill from Lake Linderman, tied up at Sixty Mile, Daylight bundled his outfit and dogs on board, turned his town-site application over to Elijah to be filed, and the same day was landed at the mouth of Indian River. He continued down Hunker to the Klondike, and on to the summer fishing camp of the Indians on the Yukon.

Here for a day he camped with Carmack, a squaw-man, and his Indian brother-in-law, Skookum Jim, bought a boat, and, with his dogs on board drifted down the Yukon to Forty Mile Then it was that Carmack, his brother-in-law, Skookum Jim, and Cultus Charlie, another Indian, arrived in a canoe at Forty Mile, went straight to the gold commissioner, and recorded three claims and a discovery claim on Bonanza Creek. After that, in the Sourdough Saloon, that night, they exhibited coarse gold to the skeptical crowd Daylight, too, was skeptical, and this despite his faith in the Upper Country. Had he not, only a few days before, seen Carmack loafing with his Indians and with never a thought of prospecting? But at eleven that night sitting on the edge of his bunk and unlacing his moccasins, a thought came to him. He put on his coat and hat and went back to the Sourdough Carmack was still there, flashing his coarse gold in the eyes of an unbelieving generation. Daylight ranged alongside of him and emptied Carmacks sack into a blower. This he studied for a long time. Then, from his own sack, into another blower, he emptied several ounces of Circle City and Forty Mile gold. Again, for a long time, he studied and compared. Finally, he pocketed his own gold, returned Carmacks, and held up his hand for silence.

"Boys, I want to tell you-all something,' he said. "She's sure come—the up-river strike. And I tell you-all, clear and forcible, this is it. There ain't never been gold like that in a blower in this country before. It's new gold. It's got more silver in it.

"Who-all's Got Faith to Come Along With Me?"

You-all can see it by the color. Carmack's sure made a strike. Who-all's got faith to come along with me?"

No one volunteered.

"Then who-all 'll take a job from me, cash wages in advance, to pole up a thousand pounds of grub?"

Curly Parsons and another, Pat Monahan, accepted, and, with his customary speed, Daylight paid them their wages in advance and arranged the purchase of the supplies, though he emptied his sack in doing so. He was leaving the Sourdough, when he suddenly turned back to the bar from the door.

"Got another hunch?" was the query.

"I sure have," he answered. "Flour's sure going to be worth what a man will pay for it this winter up on the Klondike. Who'll lend me some money?"

On the instant a score of the men who had declined to accompany him on the wild-goose chase were crowding about him with proffered gold-sacks.

"How much flour do you want?" asked the Alaska Commercial Company's storekeeper.

"About two ton."

The proffered gold-sacks were not withdrawn, though their owners were guilty of an outrageous burst of merriment.

"What are you going to do with two tons?" the storekeeper demanded.

"I'll tell you-all in simple A, B, C and one, two, three." Daylight held up one finger and began checking off. "Hunch number one: a big strike coming in Upper Country. Hunch number two: Carmack's made it. Hunch number three: ain't no hunch at all. It's a cinch. If one and two is right, then flour just has to go sky-high. If I'm riding hunches one and two, I just got to ride this cinch, which is number three. If I'm right, flour 'll balance gold on the scales this winter."

CHAPTER V.

Still men were without faith in the strike. When Daylight, with his heavy outfit of flour, arrived at the mouth of the Klondike, he found the big flat as desolate and tenantless as ever. Down close by the river, Chief Isaac and his Indians were camped beside the frames on which they were drying salmon. Several old-times were also in camp there. Having finished their summer work on Ten Mile Creek, they had come down the Yukon, bound for Circle City. But at Sixty Mile they had learned of the strike, and stopped off to look over the ground. They had just returned to their boat when Daylight landed his flour, and their report was pessimistic. But an hour later, at his own camp, Joe Ladue strode in from Bonanza Creek. He led Daylight away from the camp and men and told him things in confidence.

"She's sure there," he said in conclusion. "I didn't sluice it, or cradle it. I panned it, all in that sack, yesterday, on the rim-rock. I tell you you can shake it out of the grass-roots. And what's on the bed-rock down in the bottom of the creek they ain't no way of tellin'. But she's big, I tell you, big. Keep it quiet, and locate all you can. It's in spots, but I wouldn't be none surprised if some of them claims yielded as high as fifty thousand. The only trouble is that it's spotted."

A month passed by, and Bonanza Creek remained quiet. A sprinkling of men had staked; but most of them, after staking, had gone on down to Forty Mile and Circle City. The few that possessed sufficient faith to remain were busy building log cabins against the coming of winter. Carmack and his Indian relatives were occupied in building a sluice box and getting a head of water. The work was slow, for they had to saw their lumber by hand from the standing forest. But farther down Bonanza were four men who had drifted in from up river, Dan McGilvary, Dave McKay, Dave Edwards, and Harry Waugh. They were a quiet party, neither asking nor giving confidences, and they herded by themselves. But Daylight, who had panned the spotted rim of Carmack's claim and shaken coarse gold from the grass-roots, and who had panned the rim at a hundred other places up and down the length of the creek and found nothing, was curious to know what lay on bed-rock. He had noted the four quiet men sinking a shaft close by the stream, and he had heard their whip-saw going as they made lumber for the sluice boxes. He did not wait for an invitation, but he was present the first day they sluiced. And at the end of five hours' shoveling for one man, he saw them take out thirteen ounces and a half of gold. It was coarse gold, running from pinheads to a twelve-dollar nugget and it had come from off bed-rock The first fall snow was flying that day and the Arctic winter was closing down; but Daylight had no eyes for the bleak-gray sadness of the dying short-lived summer. He saw his vision coming true, and on the big flat was upreared anew his golden city of the snows. Gold had been found on bed-rock. That was the big thing Carmack's strike was assured. Daylight staked a claim in his own name adjoining three he had purchased with plug tobacco. This gave him a block two thousand feet long and extending in width from rim-rock to rim-rock.

Returning that night to his camp at the mouth of Klondike, he found in it Kama, the Indian chief he had left at Dyea. Kama was traveling by canoe, bringing in the last mail of the year. In his possession was some two hundred dollars in gold-dust, which Daylight immediately borrowed. In return, he arranged to stake a claim for him, which he was to record when he passed through Forty Mile. When Kama departed next morning, he carried a number of letters for Daylight addressed to all the old-timers down river, in which they were urged to come up immediately and stake. Also Kama carried letters of similar import, given him by the other men on Bonanza.

"It will sure be the gosh-dangdest stampede that ever was,' Daylight chuckled, as he tried to vision the excited populations of Forty Mile and Circle City tumbling into poling-boats and racing the hundreds of miles up the Yukon; for he knew that his word would be unquestioningly accepted.

One day in December Daylight filled a pan from bed-rock on his own claim and carried it into his cabin. Here a fire burned and enabled him to keep water unfrozen in a canvas tank. He squatted over the tank and began to wash. Earth and gravel seemed to fill the pan. As he imparted to it a circular movement, the lighter, coarser particles washed out over the edge. At times he combed the surface with his fingers, raking out handfuls of gravel. The contents of the pan diminished. At is drew near to the bottom, for the purpose of fleeting and tentative examination, he gave the pan a sudden sloshing movement, emptying it of water. And the whole bottom showed as if covered with butter. Thus the yellow gold flashed up as the muddy water was filtered away. It was gold—gold-dust, coarse gold, nuggets, large nuggets. He was all alone. He set the pan down for a moment and thought long thoughts. Then he finished the washing, and weighed the result in his scales. At the rate of sixteen dollars to the ounce the pan had contained seven hundred and odd dollars. It was beyond anything that even he had dreamed. His fondest anticipations had gone no farther than twenty or thirty thousand dollars to a claim; but here were claims worth half a million each at the least, even if they were spotted.

He did not go back to work in the shaft that day, nor the next, nor the next. Instead, capped and mittened, a light stampeding outfit, including his rabbit skin robe, strapped on his back, he was out and away on a many-days' tramp over creeks and divides, inspecting the whole neighboring territory. On each creek he was entitled to locate one claim, but he was chary in thus surrendering up his chances. On Hunker Creek only did he stake a claim. Bonanza Creek he found staked from mouth to source, while every little draw and pup and gulch that drained into it was likewise staked. Little faith was had in these side-streams. They had been staked by the hundreds of men who had failed to get in on Bonanza. The most popular of these creeks was Adams. The one least fancied was Eldorado. which flowed into Bonanza, just above Carmack's Discovery claim. Even Daylight disliked the looks of Eldorado; but, still riding his hunch, he bought a half share in one claim on it for half a sack of flour. A month later he paid eight hundred dollars for the adjoining claim. Three months later, enlarging this block of property, he paid forty thousand for a third claim, and, though it was concealed in the future, he was destined, not long after, to pay one hundred and fifty thousand for a fourth claim on the creek that had been the least liked of all the creeks.

In the meantime, and from the day he washed seven hundred dollars from a single pan, and squatted over it and thought a long thought, he never again touched hand to pick and shovel. As he said to Joe Ladue the night of that wonderful washing:

"Joe, I ain't never going to work hard again. Here's where I begin to use my brains. I'm going to farm gold. Gold will grow gold if you-all have the savvee and can get hold of some for seed. When I seen them seven hundred dollars in the bottom of the pan, I knew I had seed at last.'

The hero of the Yukon in the younger days before the Carmack strike, Burning Daylight now became the hero of the strike. The story of his hunch and how he rode it was told up and down the land. Certainly he had ridden it far and away beyond the boldest, for no five of the luckiest held the value in claims that he held And, furthermore, he was still riding the hunch, and with no diminution of daring.

Back in Dawson, though he remained true to his word and never touched hand to pick and shovel, he worked as hard as ever in his life. He had a thousand irons in the fire, and they kept him busy. Heavy as were his expenses, he won more heavily. He took lays, bought half shares, shared with the men he grub-staked, and made personal locations. Day and night his dogs were ready, and he owned the fastest teams; so that when a stampede to a new discovery was on, it was Burning Daylight to the fore through the longest, coldest nights till he blazed his stakes next to Discovery In one way or another (to say nothing of the many worthless creeks) he came into possession of properties on the good creeks, such as Sulphur, Dominion, Excelsis, Siwash, Cristo, Alhambra, and Doolittle. The thousands he poured out flowed back in tens of thousands.

Dawson grew rapidly that winter of 1896. Money poured in on Daylight

A NEW SYSTEM NEEDED.

It is plainly evident that the town is sorely in need of a new system for keeping records of its public works, as evidenced the past two weeks by the vain search for a sewer manhole which everybody supposed existed and which ought to have existed, but which was never built. Not a person could be found—town official, ex-town official or private citizen, who knew whether it was there or not. Although the sewer in question was presumably built on plans drawn to scale, no trace of them can be found. They are supposed to be on file in the vault in the selectmen's room, but a search has failed to reveal them. The VanWalkenberg plan, which was accepted by the town and on which all sewers are supposed to be built, gives simply the streets through which the sewers run, but not the exact location, nor the exact location of manholes, catchbasins or branches. The result the past fortnight has been an unfortunate tearing up of macadam road and an expenditure of money far in excess of what might have been had the proper records been kept. The town certainly needs a change in this respect.

THE Illinois Central railroad, in a circular recently sent out to employes, made the following suggestion:

Suppose the employes of all the great railroad systems would stop eating meat, or eat meat once a day. The price of meat certainly would fall. Business would go on just the same, the men would feel better and do much more efficient work.

There's a whole lot of truth in it, especially applicable to the hot weather of summer. There's no question but that the meat trust would have all kinds of spasms if it thought any material number of persons would adopt the above suggestion for a few weeks but it would undoubtedly bring about a big drop in the price of meat. However, there's little relief to be looked forward to in this direction, for as a nation we're altogether too fond of putting things into our stomachs to relieve the drain on our pocketbooks by self-denial.

THE collapse of a bridge this week under a motor truck calls attention to the fact that we have many of these heavy vehicles of modern transportation traveling the roads of the state, some carrying loads of considerable weight. While damages cannot be collected of towns where trucks and loads weighing more than six tons break through bridges, the towns have the bridges to repair or rebuild, and it is notorious that very many of them are not built to sustain anything near the weights being put upon them. It might be good judgment for this and other towns to secure the services of an expert to examine and pass upon the condition of bridges within their borders.

WHILE every day brings its toll of automobile accidents, it is to be noted that Monday's list is usually the largest. The temptation to go tearing through the country on Sunday in a high-powered car seems irresistable to a certain class, presumably because they get little time on other days of the week. Lack of experience undoubtedly figures in the causes of accidents to a large extent, as well as the ability to judge the speed at which curves may safely be taken and the relative speed of a motor and express train in approaching a railroad crossing.

ANOTHER railroad—the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western—has decided that men who use intoxicating liquors at any time, either on or off duty, cannot remain in the road's employ, the action being the result of an investigation into the causes of a disastrous wreck. No company which is engaged in passenger transportation can afford to put daily thousands of lives in the care of men who at any time make use of intoxicants. They need to keep every faculty unimpaired in order to afford travelers the highest degree of safety.

THOUGHTFUL persons who have read this week the full review of the contests at the Chicago convention will wonder how Mr. Roosevelt, with his oft announced fondness for fair play, can keep on crying fraud and robbery. They will also wonder how, if he persists, any believer of fair play can consistently remain his supporter.

SEVERAL hundred factory girls in Brooklyn struck Wednesday—not for recognition of the union or better pay, but—against the profanity and abusive language of the foreman in charge. The strike ought to be short-lived—the foreman should be dispensed with.

PALMER NEWS.

More Sewer Troubles.

Obstructions on Main and North Main Defy Efforts at Removal.

Superintendent of Highways McKelligott is having all kinds of trouble with the Main street sewer, and so far all efforts to solve the problem have proved fruitless. Early in the week it was discovered that there was a stoppage somewhere between Bridge street and Foundry street, and another between Walnut and Bridge streets. Men have been working on the job constantly but have been unable to get an opening. Rods have been run from either direction and a fire hose pushed in to considerable distances, but neither has had the desired effect. The work is continuing however, and Mr. McKelligott hopes to get results soon.

It has been discovered that the manhole which was supposed to be located on North Main street where the sewer branches off through land of R. B. Francis to the river does not exist. The branches from North Main street join in a Y, and there is no means of working from that point to locate the trouble which exists a little to the east. Why it should have been built in this way, when manholes were installed at other and less important points, no one seems to know. It is probable that one will be built now to avoid possible trouble in the future.

Will Be Lighted Soon.

Electrically Lighted Sign Advertising Town Nearly Ready.

The big sign which the Central Massachusetts Electric company and the Town of Palmer is erecting at Blanchardville to advertise the desirability of the town as a residential and manufacturing center, is attracting a lot of attention. In size 20 by 60 feet, it fairly forces itself on the vision of anyone passing by either train or highway. Both the town and the electric company are to be congratulated on the success of the enterprise, and the results should be beneficial to both. The electric company has also made arrangements, through the courtesy of H. P. Marcy, to erect on land owned by him along the river west of the lumber yard, a sign offering free factory sites to anyone to swell the manufacturing industries of the town.

Good Forest Lake Program.

Perry Players and Enoch This Week; Musical Comedy Coming.

The theatre bill at Forest Lake this week has been giving very good satisfaction. The Perry Players have been on their second week and have been drawing large houses. To-night and to-morrow they will play "The Fair Co-ed," which will complete their engagement. A special free attraction near the pavilion the entire week has been Enoch, the man-fish, and the stunts which he does in a large glass tank certainly entitle him to the name. His greatest feat is remaining for a length of time under water; the time Sunday was 2 minutes and 35 seconds, and on Monday and Tuesday evenings 3 minutes and five seconds.

The show next week in the theatre will be musical comedies, by a specially selected company which is a large one with a fine record for good work; it has recently played one of the amusement parks in Albany, and holds the record for big audiences. It is promised that the prineipals are good and the chorus large and nimble.

Death of Patrick J. Crowley.

Patrick J. Crowley, 73, died at his home on the Thorndike road Sunday morning at 11 o'clock after an illness of several months. The cause of his death was heart disease. Mr. Crowley was born in County Kerry, Ire., and came to this country in 1862. He was employed as a carpenter by the Thorndike company for 45 years. He was elected a member of the board of overseers of the poor about 10 years ago and had been continued in that office up to the time of his death. He was a member of St. Thomas' church and was its sexton for a number of years. He was a highly respected resident of the town. He is survived by a widow and four sons, Dr. J. F. Crowley of Adams, John T. Crowley of Springfield, T. J. Crowley of Worcester and James Crowley of Palmer. The funeral was held in St. Thomas' church Tuesday morning at 9.30, Rev. M. J. O'Connell officiating. Mrs. Burke sang "Lead Kindly Light" and Mrs. D. E. O'Connor sang "Fac$ to Face." The bearers were D. J. Mahoney, William Sullivan, J. J. Daley, Thomas Donahue, Michael J. Dillon and M. E. Keefe. Burial was in St. Thomas' cemetery.

The Elms Inn on Main street is being painted externally.

The infant department of the Baptist Sunday school is holding a picnic on Oak Knoll to-day.

A revolving sign, driven by electricity, has been installed this week in front of the McBride barber shop on Main street.

Wednesday was the last day of the present season on trout. The catch has not been remarkably large in this vicinity this year.

The Central Massachusetts Electric company, in a large ad. on the fifth page, announces a special price on electric flatirons for the month of August.

An inquest will be held in the district court to-morrow to inquire into the death of Joseph H. Opray, burned to death by steam on a locomotive at West Brimfield May 14th.

The first of a series of Sunday afternoon services was held at the home of Mrs. George Corey at Palmer Center Sunday. Rev. F. S. Brewer and Rev. C. C. Gorst were the speakers.

Samuel Brooks, the Main street tailor, takes a half page of to-day's paper in which to announce the arrival of his stock of fall and winter cloths for men and women's wear. It will be found on page 6.

Repairs on North Main street were suspended for a part of the week awaiting a shipment of oil. After the completion of this work the section at Shearer's Corner near the wire mill bridge will be built.

The Christian Endeavor society of the Congregational church held an echo meeting Wednesday evening, when a report of the Sagamore convention was given by Miss Marion Clark, the delegate sent by the society.

In the district court yesterday afternoon Thomas Collins pleaded nolo to a charge of reckless automobile driving on the night of July 24, and paid a fine of $75. The complaint was brought by Maj. A. F. Foote of Holyoke, agent of the State Highway commission in charge of such cases.

Autoists have complained the past few days of the quantities of trap-rock which has been scattered along the highway from the Boston and Albany freight house to Blanchardville, dropped there by teams engaged in hauling it to the new construction under way at that point.

The Bay State Drug company is making a special offer, for to-morrow only, of a 20-cent pint brick of the famous Tait Bros.' ice cream for 10 cents and a coupon taken from circulars which they have distributed announcing the event. The cream comes in numerous flavors and is said to be a superior article.

It is expected that the selectmen and overseers of the poor, in joint session, will choose a member of the board of overseers to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Patrick Crowley. There are a number of candidates, it is understood. The member selected now will serve until the town meeting next spring, when the rest of the term must be filled by the voters in the usual election.

The Central Massachusetts Electric company and the New England Telephone and Telegraph company have petitioned the selectmen for joint pole locations on Park, Central, Walnut and Pearl streets, and a hearing will be held in the selectmen's room next Thursday evening. The petition does not call for any more poles than are now in use; on the contrary, by using one line of poles for both sets of wires some of the present poles will be removed.

Card.—We wish to thank our friends for the many kind words and acts, and the many beautiful flowers contributed at the time of our great bereavement.

Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Jones,
Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Bemis,
Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Bemis,
Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Adams,
Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Burbank,
Miss May V. Granger,
Mr. Leslie F. Bolt.

Palmer, Aug. 1, 1912.

Among the Churches.

A religion service will be held at the home of Mrs. Robert Johnston in Palmer Center Sunday afternoon.

Next Sunday the regular morning and evening service will be omitted at the Baptist church and union services will be held with the Congregational church. All other services will be held as usual in the Baptist church.

A union service will be held at the Congregational church Sunday morning, Rev. F. S. Brewer will take for his subject, "Vision and blindness." Sunday school at 12. Christian Endeavor at 6; subject "Temperance, a christian virtue;" leader, Robert Bodfish.

WARREN.

William E. Patrick was successfully operated on at the Hartford hospital last week and is making a rapid recovery.

Rev. and Mrs. John Logan Findlay are spending a vacation at his former home in Cleveland, O. The Congregational church will be closed during August.

At a special town meeting on Thursday of last week it was voted to instruct the selectmen to contract for resurfacing the macadam road in Warren and West Warren, which was built by the town, and $300 was appropriated for the work. The matter of changing the bridge over Maple street was passed over after a little discussion.

A number of skunks were killed on Bacon street Monday. Albert Robinson had caught one in a barrel trap during the night, and Monday morning another skunk with five little ones was seen in the rear of A. S. Tucker's house playing. Alexander Carliell dispatched one with a revolver, after several shots, while George L. Smith, who came to his help with a shot gun, killed the other five.

Card.—We wish to thank our friends and neighbors for their kindness in our recent bereavement.

IF WOMEN ONLY KNEW

What a Heap of Happiness it Would Bring to Palmer Homes.

Hard to do housework with an aching back.

Brings you hours of misery at leisure or at work.

If women only knew the cause—that

Backache pains often come from weak kidneys

'Twould save much needless woe.

Doan's Kidney Pills are for weak kidneys,

Read what a Palmer citizen says:

Mrs. A. Sherman, 24 Park St., Palmer, Mass., says: "All I said in praise of Doan's Kidney Pills when I publicly recommended them in August, 1908, still holds good. It would be hard to fully describe the misery I endured from kidney complaint. I was rarely free from a dull, bearing-down pain in my back and I was subject to chills and dizzy spells. My head ached, my appetite was poor and I had a feeling of languor. When I saw Doan's Kidney Pills advertised, I obtained a box at Lynde & Gould's Drug Store (now J. P. Lynde's Drug Store) and they helped me from the first. As I continued taking them, I steadily grew better until my trouble was a thing of the past."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—DOAN'S—and take no other.

Local Firm Gets Big Contract.

T. J. Hynes & Son, the local contractors, were last week awarded contracts for 11 reinforced concrete bridges by the State Board of Public Works of Rhode Island. Work will be commenced at once, and it is expected that nearly a year will be required to complete the work. Besides these contracts, the company is building a concrete bridge at Turners Falls and a garage at Manchester-by-the-Sea.

WARE.

Fined For Reckless Driving.

George Frost of North street was fined $10 in the district court last Friday morning on a charge of having violated a town by-law in having driven a horse through Main street the Tuesday before so recklessly as to endanger public safety. Frost pleaded not guilty and about 12 witnesses were sworn for the commonwealth. Before any of them were called, however, Mr. Frost's attorney, John H. Schoonmaker, told the court that his client did not deny that there was evidence to show reckless driving, and that he had advised him to plead not guilty, because he wished to call the attention of the court to the fact that in his opinion the by-laws of the town are at present, and have been for some time, inoperative. He quoted the statutes to show that they had not been given the required publicity provided for in the Acts of 1904. He also stated that, aside from this, it was his opinion that they would be disapproved by the superior court, as one section of them has already. Judge Davis ruled the by-laws to be in force, saying that he did not feel it to be the province of the district court to decide the question, but it should go to the superior court. There was no desire in the Frost case to appeal or question the evidence, so the fine of $10 was paid.

Fractured His Elbow.

Stephen McBride of Maple street fell when alighting from a Palmer car near the town hall about 10 o'clock Sunday night and fractured his left arm. The car had difficulty in getting around the corner, according to McBride, because of insufficient power. It stopped and he with others alighted. Just as he stepped off the car started and threw him to the ground. He walked to his home and Dr. D. M. Ryan reduced the fracture.

Death of Mrs. Arthur Lussier.

Mrs. Arthur Lussier, 53, died at her home on Parker street Sunday night of acute enteritis. She leaves, besides her husband, eight children, Mrs. Donald Fortier of Palmer, Wilfred Lussier of Hartford, Ct., Misses Florianna, Angeline and Bertha, Alfred, Napoleon and Leo Lussier of Ware. The funeral was held Wednesday morning with services in Mt. Carmel church and burial was in Mt. Carmel cemetery.

Death of Hugh Kaveney.

Hugh Kaveney, 64, died at his home on East Main street Wednesday morning after a long illness of heart trouble. Mr. Kaveney was born in Ireland, but came to Ware 35 years ago. For 33 years he was employed in the cloth room of the Otis company. He is survived by two daughters, Nellie and Mary and three sons, Hugh, Thomas and Ambrose.

Receiver Has Sanitary Ear Pad.

Sanitary attachments for the transmitters of telephones are numerous in this country, but France has gone us one better in the matter of a sanitary pad for the receiving end of the telephone. The ordinary hard-rubber earpiece of the monophone type of instrument, which is much used in France, is removed and its place taken by a round pad formed of 250 leaves of sterilized paper. Every time the telephone is used one of the leaves is torn off. The purpose of the pad is, of course, to protect the ear from being soiled.—Popular Mechanics.

THREE RIVERS.

Tailor Shop Damaged By Fire.

Another fire was added to the list Tuesday morning about 3.30. The fire was in the building on Main street owned by Charles Ruggles and occupied by Adam Marek, a Polish tailor. Mr. Marek conducts his business in the front part of the store and lives with his family in the rear. The family were awakened by the smoke and discovered the front of the store in flames. Luckily they were confined to the interior and extinguished there by the timely work of Mr. Ruggles. The cause of the fire is unknown. The interior of the store was badly damaged but most of the stock was saved. The loss consists of about 30 suits of clothes, some of which were there to be cleansed and pressed.

Reason For High Tax Rate.

The tax rate in the fire district, announced in the Journal last week, rather "staggered" some of those who had figured that it would be considerably less, after having estimated the amount of taxable property in the district. The difference is occasioned by including in the first estimate buildings which are in process of erection. These, being uncompleted, could not be assessed this year, thus making a difference of probably $50,000 in the valuation, the amount being that much less than was calculated on.

Monson News.

Has Narrow Escape.

Monson Man Jumps From Third Story in Hotel Fire.

Everett T. Maguire, son of Mr. and Mrs. Everett Maguire of Margaret street, is at the home of his parents, where he is recovering from a wrenched back and several other minor bruises and cuts which he received in his leap for life from the third story of the Glens Falls hotel on Lake Morey at Fairlee, Vt., which was burned to the ground at 6.30 o'clock Tuesday morning, with a loss of four lives.

Maguire, who is employed as a bookkeeper by the Knox Automobile Company in Springfield, was taking his annual vacation, and together with Harry Perkins, a chum from Springfield, was asleep in a room on the third floor. Some time between 6 and 6.30 o'clock the clerk of the hotel started a fire in the fireplace in the office and hurried out doors and started for the village nearby. The office of the hotel was decorated with spruce bows and it is thought that these caught fire.

Maguire woke up, smelled smoke and heard people shouting. He awoke his roommate and by this time the flames were roaring in the room all around them. They both jumped out the window, landing on the balcony two stories below and rolled off onto the ground. Maguire fell quite hard on his back, slightly spraining it. Not until he had been on the ground for several seconds did he realize that he had saved a coat and a pair of trousers which he remembered having hung up near the window through which they made their escape. Perkins did not save anything. All of their other property, including their money, watches and jewelry, was burned up.

Mr. Maguire expects to return to his work Monday, but his own narrow escape and witnessing the terrible death of four of the guests of the hotel with whom he was acquainted is something that will never be forgotten.

Death of Edwin M. Hatch.

Edwin M. Hatch, 79, died at his home on the corner of South Main street and the branch road yesterday morning at 8.45, after a long illness with heart failure. He had been in poor health for several months, but had been confined to his bed only the past two weeks. Mr. Hatch was born in Northember, N. H., July 12, 1833. At the age of nine years he moved to Woonsocket, R. I., coming to Monson in 1875. He was married in 1852 to Miss Altheicha Brown of Woonsocket, Following the death of his first wife in 1884, he married Mrs. Mary A. Thompson. He was for several years boss spinner in the Ellis & Co. woolen mill, resigning seven years ago. He was a charter member of the Universalist church and was also deacon of the church. He is survived by a widow and three daughters, Mrs. A. C. Page of Piqua, Ohio, Mrs. E. M. Weaver of Boston and Mrs. C. W. Bennett of Warren. The funeral will be held tomorrow afternoon at 1 o'clock; Rev. Abraham Conklin will officiate. Burial will be in No. 1 cemetery.

Death of Mrs. Phoebe L. Place.

Mrs. Phoebe L. Place, 68, died at her home on Harrison avenue Sunday afternoon at 3.30 o'clock after several months' illness of cancer of the stomach. Mrs. Place was a native of Monson. She was born here November 19, 1844, and with the exception of a short time spent in the towns of Palmer and Southbridge, she had always resided in Monson. She was a member of the Congregational church and of the Woman's Relief corps. The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, Rev. G. A. Andrews officiating. Burial was in No. 1 cemetery.

S. Hughes on Pease avenue.

Tunguse Reindeer the Best.

The reindeer is more to his owner than any other beast of burden, the herd furnishing meat, drink, clothing and candles. The size and strength of the reindeer varies in different parts of the Arctic, the finest being those owned by the Tunguse tribe in Eastern Siberia; the Tunguse deer stand as high as five feet and are frequently used for riding.

Palmer Town League.

Palmer Trims Three Rivers.

Palmer won a game from Three Rivers on the Palmer grounds Saturday, but it wasn't a victory to be proud of. While there was brilliant playing at times, there was also some very loose ball handling and a vast amount of poor judgment in base running. Three Rivers took two in the first inning and Palmer three, Palmer adding another in the second. Three Rivers gathered in three more in the fourth, against Palmer's 2, leaving the score 6–5 in favor of Palmer. Palmer landed four in the fifth and one in the sixth, giving them a lead of 11–5. In the eighth Three Rivers scored five runs on a couple of scratch hits and some erratic playing. The score:

The Proud Parents.

We have discovered why the parents of the Smart Child are inclined to be unduly proud of its achievements. It is clear enough that they feel that their superior mentality is reflected in the child's accomplishments. And as all children are smart children we have a reason why all parents are proud parents and why they prefer their own miserable progeny to those of other people.

These things ought to be excused in a doting mother, but we have known a proud father to break up the social session after the [illegible] ing.—Minneapolis [illegible]

Women Who Know Silver.

Rich women who are ever on the watch for antique bits of silver or pewter, says the New York Tribune, have taken to carrying small silver-mounted microscopes, so that the hallmarks can be examined with ease and the accuracy of the date be determined.

Dealers in antiques are very apt to talk glibly of George II. silver or of George III., and even of William and Mary, pieces of those of good Queen Anne, and this prattle is bound to make an impression with those who do not know, and can also fool the near-sighted customer. Hence the microscope and a little folded paper (not mentioned to the dealer), where by the memory is refreshed.

J. P. LYNDE SUCCESSFUL.

Induced Dr. Howard Co. to Make Special Prices.

After a great deal of effort and correspondence J. P. Lynde, the popular druggist, has succeeded in getting the Dr. Howard Co. to make a special half-price introductory offer on the regular fifty cent size of their celebrated specific for the cure of constipation and dyspepsia.

Dr. Howard's specific has been so remarkably successful in curing constipation, dyspepsia and all liver troubles that J. P. Lynde is willing to return the price paid in every case where it does not give relief.

Headaches, coated tongue, dizziness, gas on stomach, specks before the eyes, constipation and all forms of liver and stomach trouble are soon cured by this scientific medicine.

So great is the demand for this specific that J. P. Lynde has been able to secure only a limited supply, and everyone who is troubled with dyspepsia, constipation or liver trouble should call upon him at once, or send 25 cents and get sixty doses of the best medicine ever made, on this special half-price offer with his personal guarantee to refund the money if it does not cure.

BURNING DAYLIGHT.

from the sale of town lots. He promptly invested it where it would gather more. In fact, he played the dangerous game of pyramiding, and no more perilous pyramiding than in a placer camp could be imagined. But he played with his eyes wide open.

Corner lots in desirable locations sold that winter for from ten to thirty thousand dollars. Daylight sent word out over the trails and passes for the newcomers to bring down log-rafts, and, as a result, the summer of 1897 saw his saw mills working day and night, on three shifts, and still he had logs left over with which to build cabins. These cabins, land included, sold at from one to several thousand dollars. Two-story log buildings, in the business part of town, brought him from forty to fifty thousand dollars apiece. These fresh accretions of capital were immediately invested in other ventures. He turned gold over and over, until everything that he touched seemed to turn to gold.

With the summer rush from the Outside came special correspondents for the big newspapers and magazines, and one and all, using unlimited space, they wrote Daylight up; so that, so far as the world was concerned, Daylight loomed the largest figure in Alaska. Of course, after several months, the world became interested in the Spanish War, and forgot all about him; but in the Klondike itself Daylight still remained the most prominent figure.

Fourteenth Quarterly CLEARANCE SALE

A Gigantic Clearance of Absolutely Every Garment in Our Stock

The clarion note has been sounded—the Fourteenth of our Famous Quarterly Clearance Sales is at hand. Tremendous as our value-giving has been in former sales, it is more extraordinary than ever in this, our Fourteenth. For we are going to make it the most drastic clearance of wearing apparel ever attempted in Springfield. Our policy of absolutely clean, fresh, new stocks each season, does not permit us to carry over one garment. To enforce this rigidly, we have marshaled out every piece of our Spring and Summer merchandise, and reduced it in most cases, to a fraction of its original worth, so that immediate selling will be inevitable. The items advertised below are striking examples of what we have to offer you, but there is many a rare bargain, not advertised, that you can only find by attending the sale personally. Remember ONE DOLLAR will not do double the work in this sale — IT WILL DO THE WORK OF FIVE.

The lawn party which was held on the lawn of Rev. Thomas Kennedy Thursday and Friday evenings of last week, for the benefit of St. Bartholomew's church, was largely attended both evenings. The lawn and booths were prettily decorated with lights and colored bunting. There was a fine display of fancy articles, and the fish pond furnished amusement for both young and old. The following had charge of the various tables: Miss Lucy Fitzgerald, candy table; Michael Bowler, country store; Miss Katherine Quirk, linen and fancy table; Mrs. Mabel Cannon, refreshment table; Miss Nellie Sullivan, fish pond; Andrew Fenton, liquid refreshments. The entertainment was enjoyed and consisted of a scarf drill by nine girls; military drill, 16 boys; solos by John Donahue of Palmer and Anna O'Connor of Springfield. Several hundred dollars will be realized from the lawn party.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

SAVED FROM AN OPERATION

How Mrs. Reed of Peoria, Ill., Escaped The Surgeon's Knife.

Peoria, Ill.—"I wish to let every one know what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. For two years I suffered. The doctor said I had a tumor and the only remedy was the surgeon's knife. My mother bought me Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and today I am a well and healthy woman. For months I suffered from inflammation, and your Sanative Wash relieved me. I am glad to tell anyone what your medicines have done for me. You can use my testimonial in any way you wish, and I will be glad to answer letters."—Mrs. CHRISTINA REED, 105 Mound St., Peoria, Ill.

Mrs. Lynch Also Avoided Operation.

Jessup, Pa.—"After the birth of my fourth child, I had severe organic inflammation. I would have such terrible pains that it did not seem as though I could stand it. This kept up for three long months, until two doctors decided that an operation was needed.

"Then one of my friends recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and after taking it for two months I was a well woman."—Mrs. JOSEPH A. LYNCH, Jessup, Pa.

Women who suffer from female ills should try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, one of the most successful remedies the world has ever known before submitting to a surgical operation.

WOMAN DEFIES RAILROAD.

Construction Gang Held at Bay By Widow and Children.

MRS. SCOVERA DECIDEDLY OBJECTS.

Circle of Children Around Trees Foil Choppers. Tools Grabbed From Workmen's Hands.

The old saying, "If a woman will she will, you may depend on't; if she won't she won't, and that's an end on't," has been exemplified this week along the line of the New Southern New England railroad from Palmer to Providence.

The scene of the trouble is the Robinson farm about four miles east of Palmer, and the "woman in the case" is Mrs. A. Scovera, the owner. Mrs. Scovera is a widow, but apparently well able to stand up for her rights—as she sees them. The advance gang of the construction crew struck the Scovera place this week and began to clear up a little for the more serious work of building the roadbed. Mrs. Scovera objected however, and no amount of argument could change her. The men attempted to cut a few trees and otherwise prepare the way for the excavators and graders, and Mrs. Scovera's method of remonstrance was to seize the tools in the hands of the workmen when they attempted to proceed. If they tried to chop a tree two methods were employed: The ax was seized in the hands of the chopper, and if she was shaken off and he tried to strike the tree, a ring of children—there are ten or a dozen little Scoveras—was formed about it and of course the chopping would have to be suspended. Deputy Sheriff Bills was called to the place but failed to make any change in the woman's attitude.

While the railroad has been given a legal right to go through Mrs. Scovera's land she has not yet been paid for the damage, failing to come to an agreement with the company's land agent. The road has offered to buy her entire farm but she will not take the price offered, which is said to be a good one; an offer has also been made to buy her additional land on the other side of the road to make up her loss; but she "won't;" another offer is to move her house and barn to a new location—the road will pass across the present site—grade up the grounds and make various other improvements, in addition to a substantial sum in cash—but nothing doing. The railroad cannot be expected to suspend operations on her account, and what the result will be remains to be seen. At last reports she was as beligerent as ever.

Bridge Will Be Repaired.

Suggestion to Discontinue West Brimfield Road Is Impossible.

Suggestion has been made that the bridge over the Quaboag river at West Brimfield, which gave way last week under a heavy load, be abolished and the road crossing it be discontinued, making use of another short strip of road in that vicinity and another bridge over the river; the adoption of the proposition would relieve the towns of Palmer and Brimfield of the joint support of the bridge.

This has been found to be impracticable however because the road cannot be closed without the consent of the county commissioners, and they do not give such if there is any protest. That there would be protest against the proposition is certain. There are several residents of that section to whom the closing of the road would mean considerable inconvenience in longer trips to reach the main highway, as well as a heavy grade to climb; the Marcy & Gardner brick company would also protest, as all of their product which goes east by highway goes over the strip it is suggested be discontinued, and the heavy grade of the other would be almost a bar to loaded teams. The selectmen of both towns have looked over the bridge in question and it will be repaired and strengthened.

EAST BRIMFIELD.

Work began with a rush on the Southern New England railroad last Thursday. A large steam shovel, two railroad construction steam engines and 10 gravel cars were put into service. The large cut crossing the main road from East Brimfield to Holland has been shoveled on the gravel cars and been carried either way for grading. It is estimated that two shovels of dirt taken by the steam shovel is equal to six horse loads. Twenty gravel cars will be used later. It was expected that a night crew will be put on soon.

Wales Holds Old Home Day.

Ninth Successful Celebration. Large Numbers Present From Abroad.

Wales is probably the only town in the vicinity that has held a successful old home day celebration for nine consecutive years. Nine years ago the town appropriated a sum of money for an old home day celebration and a committee was appointed to make arrangements for the event. Invitations were issued and the largest crowd that had assembled for years in the little town gathered. So enjoyable was the occasion that there was a call for another celebration on the second year, and the observance of the day has now become a fixed habit, not only to the people of Wales but to many outside the town who return annually. Each year there are some who come long distances and time their visits so as to meet old friends on old home day. This year was no exception to the rule. While many come from Monson, Stafford, Palmer, Springfield, Holyoke and other towns and cities near by, New York, Vermont, Ohio and Illinois also sent representatives this year.

The festivities began Saturday morning, when the people assembled at an early hour in the grove adjoining the old ball ground. At noon the basket luncheon was enjoyed and at 1.30 Rev. Charles Ricketts of Norwich, Ct., who was a former Wales boy, delivered an interesting address. That Mr. Ricketts is a popular speaker is evident from the fact that this is the third time he has been the speaker of the day. Music was furnished at intervals during the day by an orchestra from Willington, Ct.

In the year 1904 a special Sunday afternoon service was added to the program and has since become a regular part of the observance. This is held each year in the old Baptist church, which was erected in the year 1804, and has not been used regularly for service since 1873, when the Baptists began holding services in their new church, which is more centrally located. The first church building in Wales was erected by the Baptists somewhere about 1760, and was occupied by them until 1802, when they sold it to the town. It was then divided into fourteen parts and sold at auction for the sum of $105.80 and each piece was removed by its purchaser.

After this the present building was erected by the town and was generally called the "Union House." The pews were sold at auction and deeds were given, some of which are still in the possession of descendants of the original purchasers. The proceeds were used to help pay for the cost of building and the town reserved the right to use the edifice for municipal purposes. The house was built with the understanding that different denominations might use it, but the Baptists, who were most numerous, might use it on any Sunday when it was not occupied by any other denomination. The apportionment of Sundays was in accordance with the belief of the pew holders and varied from year to year. For instance in 1805 the Baptists were allowed twenty-five Sabbaths, the Universalists nine and the Congregationalists fifteen. In 1846, in accordance with an act of the Legislature, the pews of the other denominations were purchased at their appraised value by the Baptists and the house was repaired and remodeled by them. The organ loft and seats for the choir are in the rear of the church, and in accordance with old time custom, the old home day audience turns its back upon the minister and faces the choir during the singing of the hymns. This year solos were rendered by Miss Ruby Church of South Windsor, Ct., and Miss Annie Krause of Monson. The address was delivered by Rev. H. P. Smith of Dayton, Ohio, who was formerly pastor of the church.

The invitations this year were souvenir postals with a picture of the old Munger house, one of the oldest in town.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

Miss Grace Nichols is spending the month at Oak Bluffs.

George Blanden is taking his annual vacation from his duties in Fuller's store.

LeRoy Gates of Plainfield, N. J., has been visiting his family in East Wilbraham.

Arnold Green has returned to his duties in Fuller's store after a vacation of several days.

Herbert Greene has resumed his duties with the Wright Wire company in Palmer, after a week's illness.

Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Raymond of North Wilbraham have been spending the week in Providence, R. I., and Boston.

A number of Palmer men attended the Elks' clambake at Northampton Wednesday.

RAID AT BRIMFIELD.

Officers Find Liquors in Cellar Of Barney Place.

VISIT WAS MADE SUNDAY MORNING.

Mrs. Barney and Daughter Pay Fines Aggregating $125, and One Case Is Continued.

A successful liquor raid was worked in Brimfield Sunday morning, when Deputy Sheriff Studley of Springfield, with Deputy Sheriff Bills and Officer T. J. Crimmins of Palmer and Constable Orrin Hicks of Brimfield descended on the residence of Dominick Barney, in the south part of the town. A search of the place revealed various amounts of "booze" in various places in the cellar, tucked away here and there in an evident attempt to keep it from prying eyes in the event any should make search. It was speedily discovered however, and confiscated. Barney was not disturbed, but warrants were issued for Mrs. Barney and her daughter, Emma Barney. They appeared in the district court in Palmer Monday, when Mrs. Barney paid a fine of $75 and the younger woman one of $50. Another case against Mrs. Barney was continued.

Spikes on Railroad Track.

Probable Accident at Ware Averted by Timely Discovery.

Two Ware boys—John Kosciez and Karol Krasowski—are said to have been responsible for the placing of spikes on the track of the Boston and Albany railroad yesterday in such a manner that a train passing over them would probably have been derailed. H. E. Giles, a wire foreman, passed over them in a section car, which was thrown from the track, but Mr. Giles escaped unharmed. The 2.25 train south would have been the next over the spot. Patrolman Oliver Dennis was put on the case and rounded up the boys, who are 9 and 13 years old, near the tracks opposite St. Mary's cemetery. They claimed to have had nothing to do with the matter, but alleged that they saw John Suprano of Water street put spikes upon the rails. When Kosciez was asked why he did it he replied that he wished to see if the train would flatten out the spikes. Asked if he did not know that he might wreck the train, replied that he did but wanted to see if it would.

Palmer Fair Speed Classes.

Six Races Arranged For the Two Days, With Good Purses.

The committee in charge of the speed classes for the Palmer Fair have arranged a schedule which ought to provide interesting contests. There will be six races, as follows:

Friday, October 4.

|---|---|
| 2.40, trot or pace, | Purse, $200 |
| 2.22 trot, | $250 |
| 2.19 trot, 2.22 pace, | $300 |

Saturday, October 5.

|---|---|
| 2.14 pace, | Purse, $300 |
| 2.24 trot, 2.27 pace, | $250 |
| 2.17 trot, 2.20 pace, | $300 |

The Palmer society is a member of the New England Agricultural Fairs Association, an organization composed of nine of the agricultural societies in this vicinity, formed this year for mutual advantage and protection. A schedule of races was adopted and each society in the association will have four races of the same class, the amount of the purses being left to the individual societies; they were also at liberty to add other classes if they chose, and this the Palmer Fair has done. This arrangement is expected to bring a large field of entries, as, beginning with Athol on Labor Day, horsemen are offered several weeks of racing in this section of the state with the same or similar classes at each meet.

HOLLAND.

Miss Sarah Phillips of Worcester is the guest of friends in town.

The library trustees and chosen representatives met at the home of Arthur G. Childs Monday evening to consider arrangements for Old Home Day and dedication of the new library, which is to take place the 24th. Various committees were appointed to make arrangements.

The campers at Lake Wickaboag, West Brookfield, held their annual boat carnival Tuesday evening, with prizes for the boats most attractively decorated. One of the cottages there is occupied just now by Chief James Summers of the fire department and Clerk of Courts Arthur E. Fitch and their families, and Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Call of Springfield; the boat representing this cottage was awarded first prize.

NOVEL FIRE DEFENSE.

Tree Sprayer Used With Good Effect in Warren.

AN EXPLODED LAMP STARTED BLAZE.

And Spraying Apparatus Had Fire Out Before Steamer Got to Work. Only Small Loss.

The tree spraying apparatus of the town of Warren was effectively used to extinguish a fire yesterday morning, and incidentally saved a loss of several hundred dollars. Mrs. Ella O'Day, who was sleeping with her baby on the third floor of the "old hotel building" on the corner of Main and Maple streets, awoke about 3.25 to find the room on fire from an exploded lamp. She rushed past the blaze and gave an alarm, and by the aid of several hand extinguishers the flames were held in check. The steamer was got out and hose laid to the building, but before it could be used the tree spraying apparatus, which carries a 400-gallon tank and a powerful gasolene engine, was taken from its quarters nearby and put into commission, extinguishing the blaze in short order and with little water. As a result the loss will be only about $100.

New Block For Main Street.

Arthur W. Holbrook to Build Four Monitor Stores on South Side.

Arthur W. Holbrook, who a little more than a year ago acquired the Main street property on which the building formerly occupied by the Journal stood, as well as the garage adjoining, announces that he has this morning received the plans for a new block which he is to build there. The structure will be 70 by 60 feet, monitor construction, of wood, and will contain four stores. The old Journal building and the garage will be removed and it is expected that work will begin in a very short time. The stores will be ready for occupancy October 15, and will be modern in every way.

Mr. Holbrook states that it was his intention, when he purchased the property, to erect thereon a handsome brick structure of two or more stories, with all modern equipment and the finest finishings—a finer block than the town now possesses—but that inability to make certain arrangements which he supposed could be secured, has forced him to the style of building he has adopted.

Fire Appliances Shown.

Engineers Given Demonstration of Very Valuable Apparatus.

A representative of a firm making various fire-fighting apparatus visited Palmer Tuesday and gave the board of engineers a demonstration of several appliances of merit. The one which appealed particularly to the board was a combination coupling and nozzle by means of which all three openings in a hydrant—steamer and two hose—can be connected with a single nozzle so as to give a solid stream two inches in diameter, called a "deluge," which is particularly valuable in case of a bad blaze. It is also arranged so that the two hose streams from the hydrant can be reinforced by a stream from the steamer. Another useful appliance is one which is attached to the steamer opening of a hydrant and two lines of hose connected thereto, either of which may be shut down without stopping the other. It is not unlikely that the engineers will ask the purchase of some of the appliances by the prudential committee of the fire district.

WALES.

Miss Ada Rourke is visiting friends at Lake Quinsigamond.

Miss Patty Hines has returned to her home in Raleigh, N. C.

Miss Agnes Streeter of Bennington, Vermont, has been spending a few days in town.

Mrs. Emma Stebbins and grandson of Newington, Ct., and Mrs. Chilson of Hyde Park are visiting Mrs. N. M. Stebbins.

Mrs. John Heck has returned to her home after spending several weeks in the Johnson hospital in Stafford Springs, Ct.

Miss Anna G. Hynes will teach the primary school this fall and Miss Clara P. Chase of Sturbridge will be the instructor in drawing.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Chrystal and daughter of Chicago, Ill., are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Charles T. Holt and are spending their vacation at Oak Bluffs.

The regular monthly meeting of the Palmer Business and Social club will be held in the club rooms next Tuesday evening.

Golden Jubilee of 34th Regt.

Will Be Held in Worcester Next Week. Two Members in Palmer.

The golden jubilee of the 34th Massachusetts Regimental Association will be held in Worcester on Thursday of next week, and the plans are perfected to give the "Boys" the best time they ever had. There are only two members of the 34th here, George H. Justin of School street, who enlisted in Co. D from Granville, and Edwin S. Beecher of State avenue, who enlisted in Co. H from Southbridge. The regiment saw much service, and a partial history is as follows:

The regiment left Worcester Aug. 15, 1862, and arrived at Arlington Heights, Va., Aug. 18. On the 24th it marched to Alexandria, where it remained doing garrison duty until May 1, 1863, when it marched to Upton's Hill. June 2d, went to Washington, D. C.; while there it performed guard and provost duty, and was noted for perfection in drill, discipline, neatness, and splendid condition of men, arms and accoutrements. July 9th, went to Maryland Heights, and on the 14th crossed the Potomac on pontoon boats and drove the enemy from Harper's Ferry. Oct. 18, fought and routed twice their number of Imboden's rebel mounted infantry near Ripon, capturing many prisoners. In December formed part of a force of 1500 men, who, under command of Col. George D. Wells of the 34th, advanced 100 miles up the Shenandoah Valley to Harrisonburg to co-operate with Gen. Averill in his famous raid on the Virginia and Tennessee railroad. The expedition returned to Harper's Ferry in 93 hours, without a straggler or the loss of a single man, and with over 100 prisoners. In March, 1864, went to Martinsburg, and April 29th advanced with Gen. Siegel's command up the Shenandoah Valley. May 15th, were hotly engaged in the battle of New Market; June 5th, fought at Piedmont, Va., under Gen. Hunter; reached Staunton the 6th, and fought at Lynchburg the 18th. In their retreat from that place to Kanawha Valley the men suffered for want of provisions. Next fought at Island Ford, near Snicker's Gap, July 18th, with a portion of Gen. Early's army. At Winchester July 24th, and at Martinsburg July 25th; Aug. 26th, at Halltown, attacked the enemy's skirmish line, drove it from its position and captured many prisoners. Were in all the engagements under Gen. Sheridan in the valley, being hotly engaged at Berryville Sept. 3d, Winchester Sept. 19th and Fisher's Hill Sept. 22d. Next fought near Strasburg Oct. 13th; in this engagement the regiment suffered terribly, losing in killed and wounded 102 out of 240 men engaged. Here brave Col. George D. Wells, commanding the brigade, was killed—a braver man never lived, or one that was more loved and respected by the officers and men of his command. Were engaged at Cedar Creek Oct. 19th, where Gen. Sheridan performed one of the greatest achievements of the war in changing a disastrous defeat into a brilliant and decisive victory. Dec. 19th was ordered to the James and attached to the independent division of the 24th Army Corps and was in all the engagements till the surrender of Lee at Appomatox Court House, April 9th, 1865. Were mustered out of the service at Richmond, Va., June 17, 1865.

Church Ladies Annoyed.

Cook Book Promotor Had No Authority From Baptist Society.

Some of the ladies of the Baptist church were much disturbed the latter part of last week because of an advertising scheme which was being worked in their names without their permission.

Last Friday merchants about town were solicited for advertisements in a cook book which it was stated was being gotten out under the auspices of the ladies of the Baptist church, the proceeds to be used to pay for the recently-installed blower for the organ.

So far as known no collections were made, but in at least one instance collection was attempted. Merchants were told that the matter must be closed up at once, as the book was to be published immediately. Merchants who were solicited and happened to know that the blower was already paid for began to make inquiries, and found that matters were not just as the solicitor had represented.

The man called on Rev. Mr. Palmer, pastor of the church, and outlined his scheme; Mr. Palmer told him that he had no authority in such matters, and that the society would have nothing to do with it. The fellow then called on two members of the Ladies' society in reference to his project. One declined to make any comment on it whatever; the other said she thought it might possibly be a good thing; but both told him they had no authority in the matter and declined to give him permission to go ahead.

SEWER NOT YET CLEAR.

North Main Street Outlet Still Giving Trouble.

CITIZENS TIRING OF CONDITIONS.

Work Going On Over Three Weeks. Alleged That Can Be Cleared In Four Days.

Highway Surveyor McKelligott is still at work on the Main street sewer beween Walnut and Knox streets, attempting to clear it out so that the sewage will run properly. Some progress can be reported since last week, but not nearly as much as the public would like to see. Yesterday the work had so far advanced that the savings bank block, which has been without sewer privileges for a week, was once more accorded its use. It is apparent that there are three points of obstruction—between Walnut and Thorndike streets, between Thorndike and Foundry streets, and between Foundry and Knox streets. Quantities of water have been run in from Thorndike to Knox street the past three days, but it does not flow as it should and does not clear away the trouble.

Property owners and citizens are becoming impatient and critical of the work as it is being done. A large opening in the macadam of North Main street was made three weeks ago yesterday in an attempt to remedy the sewer trouble. The first of last week another and larger opening was made less than 100 feet from the first. Though men have been constantly at work on the problem, it seems little nearer satisfactory solution now then at the beginning. An opening will be made and the water used in flushing will run fairly freely for a little, then there will be another stoppage. The truth is that the bottom of the sewer is covered with several inches of sand at the present time, in spite of all the water which has been put through it. There does not seem to be sufficient volume or force of water to loosen up the sand and carry it along. Several cartloads of sand have been removed through the manholes with pails, but only a small fractional part of the whole amount has been touched. And in view of the experiences in other sections of the village it is probable that every trunk line of sewer has a considerable layer of sand on the bottom, which must necessarily act as an obstruction.

Sanitary conditions in several blocks and public buildings are at times well nigh unbearable. A hard rain is sure to send sewage back into the basements of cellars of these buildings, not only on Main street but in other sections, and owners and occupants are complaining. They are beginning to say openly that the work should be accomplished in quicker time and at less expense. They do not approve of the present methods employed, and unless the situation is materially improved in a very short time are likely to be heard from in no uncertain manner. Some of them base their opinions on the statement of a citizen who has had a large experience in the care of sewers, that with different and proper methods it would be possible to clear out the Main street strip now under attack in four days, and to leave it thoroughly clean. If this is possible, some means should be adopted to bring about the result.

Bondsville 14, Thorndike 0.

The Bondsville team shut out Thorndike in the game Saturday, the score standing 14 to 0 in their favor. The Thorndike team played good ball in the field, and with better pitching would not have been beaten as badly. Bennett was master of the game at all times and pitched strongly. Thescore:

BURNING DAYLIGHT

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—Elam Harnish, known all through Alaska as "Burning Daylight," celebrates his 30th birthday with a friendly crowd of miners at the Circle City Tivoli. He is a general favorite, a hero and a pioneer in the new gold fields. The dance leads to heavy gambling in which over $100,000 is staked. Harnish loses his money and his mine but wins the mail contract of the district.

CHAPTER II.—Burning Daylight starts on his trip to deliver the mail with dogs and sledge. He tells his friends that the big Yukon gold strike will soon be on and he intends to be in it at the start. With Indian attendants and dogs he dips over the bank and down the frozen Yukon and in the gray light is gone.

CHAPTER III.—Harnish makes a sensationally rapid run across country with the mail, appears at the Tivoli and there is another characteristic celebration. He has made a record against cold and exhaustion and is now ready to join his friends in a dash to the new gold fields.

CHAPTER IV.—Harnish decides where the gold will be found in the up-river district and buys two tons of flour, which he declares will be worth its weight in gold before the season is over.

CHAPTER V.—When Daylight arrives with his heavy outfit of flour he finds the big flat desolate. A comrade discovers gold and Harnish reaps a rich harvest. He goes to Dawson, begins investing in corner lots and staking other miners and becomes the most prominent figure in the Klondike.

CHAPTER VI.

It was held by the thousands of hero-worshipping chechaquos that Daylight was a man absolutely without fear. But Bettles and Dan MacDonald and other sourdoughs shook their heads and laughed as they mentioned women. And they were right. He had always been afraid of them from the time, himself a lad of seventeen, when Queen Anne, of Juneau, made open and ridiculous love to him. For that matter, he never had known women. Born in a mining-camp where they were rare and mysterious, having no sisters, his mother dying while he was an infant, he had never been in contact with them.

But it was left to the Virgin to give him his final fright. She was found one morning dead in her cabin. A shot through the head had done it, and she had left no message, no explanation. Then came the talk. Some wit, voicing public opinion, called it a case of too much Daylight. She had killed herself because of him. Everybody knew this, and said so. The correspondents wrote it up, and once more Burning Daylight, King of the Klondike, was sensationally featured in the Sunday supplements of the United States. The Virgin had straightened up, so the feature-stories ran, and correctly so. Never had she entered a Dawson City dance-hall When she first arrived from Circle City, she had earned her living by washing clothes. Next, she had bought a sewing-machine and made men's drill parkas, fur caps, and moosehide mittens. Then she had gone as a clerk into the First Yukon Bank. All this, and more, was known and told, though one and all were agreed that Daylight, while the cause, had been the innocent cause of her untimely end.

And the worst of it was that Daylight knew it was true. Always would he remember that last night he had seen her. He had thought nothing of it at the time; but, looking back, he was haunted by every little thing that had happened. In the light of the tragic event, he could understand everything—her quietness, that calm certitude as if all vexing questions of living had been smoothed out and were gone, and that certain ethereal sweetness about all that she had said and done that had been almost maternal. He remembered the way she had looked at him, how she had laughed when he narrated Mickey Dolan's mistake in staking the fraction on Skookum Gulch. Her laughter had been lightly joyous, while at the same time it had lacked its old-time robustness. Not that she had been grave or subdued. On the contrary, she had been so patently content, so filled with peace. She had fooled him, fool that he was. He had even thought that night that her feeling for him had passed, and he had taken delight in the thought, and caught visions of the satisfying future friendship that would be theirs with this perturbing love out of the way.

And then, when he stood at the door, cap in hand, and said good night. It had struck him at the time as a funny and embarrassing thing, her bending over his hand and kissing it. He had felt like a fool, but he shivered now when he looked back on it and felt again the touch of her lips on his hand. She was saying good-by, an eternal good-by, and he had never guessed. At that very moment, and for all the moments of the evening, coolly and deliberately, as he well knew her way, she had been resolved to die. If he had only known it! Untouched by the contagious malady himself, nevertheless he would have married her if he had had the slightest inkling of what she contemplated. And yet he knew, furthermore, that hers was a certain stiff-kneed pride that would not have permitted her to accept marriage as an act of philanthropy. There had really been no saving her, after all. The love-disease had fastened upon her, and she had been doomed from the first to perish of it.

Six thousand spent the winter of 1897 in Dawson, work on the creeks went on apace, while beyond the passes it was reported that one hundred thousand more were waiting for the spring. Late one brief afternoon, Daylight, on the benches between French Hill and Shookum Hill, caught a wider vision of things. Beneath him lay the richest part of Eldorado Creek, while up and down Bonanza he could see for miles. It was a scene of a vast devastation. The hills, to their tops, had been shorn of trees, and their naked sides showed signs of goring and perforating that even the mantle of snow could not hide. Beneath him, in every direction, were the cabins of men. But not many men were visible. A blanket of smoke filled the valleys and turned the gray day to melancholy twilight. Smoke arose from a thousand holes in the snow, where, deep down on bed-rock, in the frozen muck and gravel, men crept and scratched and dug, and ever built more fires to break the grip of the frost.

Organization was what was needed, he decided; and his quick imagination sketched Eldorado Creek, from mouth to source, and from mountain top to mountain top, in the hands of one capable management. Even steam-thawing, as yet untried, but bound to come, he saw would be a makeshift. What should be done was to hydraulic the valley sides and benches, and then, on the creek bottom, to use gold-dredges. There was the very chance for another big killing. He had wondered just what was precisely the reason for the Guggenhammers and the big English concerns sending in their high-salaried experts. That was their scheme. That was why they had approached him for the sale of worked-out claims and tailings. They were content to let the small mine-owners gopher out what they could, for there would be millions in the leavings.

And, gazing down on the smoky inferno of crude effort, Daylight outlined the new game he would play, a game in which the Guggenhammers and the rest would have to reckon with him. But along with the delight in the new conception came a weariness. He was tired of the long Arctic years, and he was curious about the Outside—the great world of which he had heard other men talk and of which he was as ignorant as a child. There were games out there to play. It was a larger table, and there was no reason why he with his millions should not sit in and take a hand. So it was, that afternoon on Skookum Hill, that he resolved to play this last best Klondike hand and pull for the Outside. It took time, however. He put trusted agents to work on the heels of great experts, and on the creeks where they began to buy he likewise bought. Wherever they tried to corner a worked-out creek, they found him standing in the way, owning blocks of claims or artfully scattered claims that put all their plans to naught.

Followed wars, truces, compromises, victories, and defeats. By 1898, sixty thousand men were on the Klondike, and all their fortunes and affairs rocked back and forth and were affected by the battles Daylight fought. And more and more the taste for the larger game urged in Daylight's mouth. Here he was already locked in grapples with the great Guggenhammers, and winning, fiercely winning. Possibly the severest struggle was waged on Ophir, the veriest of moose-pastures, whose low-grade dirt was valuable only because of its vastness. The ownership of a block of seven claims in the heart of it gave Daylight his grip, and they could not come to terms. The Guggenhammer experts concluded that it was too big for him to handle, and when they gave him an ultimatum to that effect he accepted and bought them out. The plan was his own, but he sent down to the States for competent engineers to carry it out. In the Klukabilly watershed, eighty miles away, he built his reservoir, and for eighty miles the huge wooden conduit carried the water across country to Ophir. Estimated at three millions, the reservoir and conduit cost nearer four. Nor did he stop with this. Electric power plants were installed, and his workings were lighted as well as run by electricity. Other sourdoughs, who had struck it rich in excess of all their dreams, shook their heads gloomily, warned him that he would go broke, and declined to invest in so extravagant a venture. But Daylight smiled, and sold out the remainder of his town-site holdings. He sold at the right time, at the height of the placer boom. When he prophesied to his old cronies, in the Moosehorn Saloon, that within five years town lots in Dawson could not be given away, while the cabins would be chopped up for firewood, he was laughed at roundly, and assured that the mother-lode would be found ere that time. But he went ahead, when his need for lumber was finished, selling out his sawmills as well. Likewise, he began to get rid of his scattered holdings on the various creeks, and without thanks to any one he finished his conduit, built his dredges, imported his machinery, and made the gold of Ophir immediately accessible. And he, who five years before had crossed over the divide from Indian River and threaded the silent wilderness, his dogs packing Indian fashion, himself living Indian fashion on straight moose meat, now heard the hoarse whistles calling his hundreds of laborers to work, and watched them toil under the white glare of the arc-lamps.

But having done the thing, he was ready to depart. And when he let the word go out, the Guggenhammers vied with the English concerns and with a new French company in bidding for Ophir and all its plant. The Guggenhammers bid highest, and the price they paid netted Daylight a clean million. It was current rumor that he was worth anywhere from twenty to thirty millions. But he alone knew just how he stood, and that, with his last claim sold and the table swept clean of his winnings, he had ridden his hunch to the tune of just a trifle over eleven millions.

His departure was a thing that passed into the history of the Yukon along with his other deeds. All the Yukon was his guest, Dawson the seat of the festivity. On that one last night no man's dust save his own was good Drinks were not to be purchased. Every saloon ran open, with extra relays of exhausted bartenders, and the drinks were given away. A man who refused this hospitality, and persisted in paying, found a dozen fights on his hands. The veriest chechaquos rose up to defend the name of Daylight from such insult. And through it all, on moccasined feet, moved Daylight, hell-roaring Burning Daylight, overspilling with good nature and camaraderie, howling his he-wolf howl and claiming the night as his, bending men's arms down on the bars, performing feats of strength, his bronzed face flushed with drink, his black eyes flashing, clad in overalls and blanket coat, his ear-flaps dangling and his gauntleted mittens swinging from the cord across the shoulders. But this time it was neither an ante nor a stake that he threw away, but a mere marker in the game that he who held so many markers would not miss.

CHAPTER VII.

In no blaze of glory did Burning Daylight descend upon San Francisco. Not only had he been forgotten, but the Klondike along with him. The world was interested in other things, and the Alaskan adventure, like the Spanish War, was an old story. He settled down in St. Francis Hotel, was interviewed by the cub-reporters on the hotel-run, and received brief paragraphs of notice for twenty-four hours.

Several months passed in San Francisco, during which time he studied the game and its rules, and prepared himself to take a hand.

Tiring of being merely an onlooker, he ran up to Nevada, where the new gold-mining boom was fairly started—"just to try a flutter," as he phrased it to himself. The flutter on the Tonopah Stock Exchange lasted just ten days, during which time his smashing, wild-bull game played ducks and drakes with the more stereotyped gamblers, and at the end of which time, having gambled Floridel into his fist, he let go for a net profit of half a million. Whereupon, smacking his lips, he departed for San Francisco and the St. Francis Hotel. It tasted good, and his hunger for the game became more acute.

And once more the papers sensationalized him. BURNING DAYLIGHT was a big-letter headline again. Interviewers flocked about him. Old files of magazines and newspapers were searched through, and the romantic and historic Elam Harnish, Adventurer of the Frost, King of the Klondike, and Father of the Sourdoughs, strode upon the breakfast table of a million homes along with the toast and breakfast foods. Even before his elected time, he was forcibly launched into the game. Financiers and promoters, and all the flotsam and jetsam of the sea of speculation surged upon the shores of his eleven millions. In self-defence he was compelled to open offices. He dabbled in little things at first—"stalling for time," as he explained it to Holdsworthy, a friend he had made at the Alta-Pacific Club. Daylight himself was a member of the club, and Holdsworthy had proposed him. And it was well that Daylight played closely at first, for he was astounded by the multitudes of sharks—"ground-sharks," he called them—that flocked about him. He saw through their schemes readily enough, and even marveled that such numbers of them could find sufficient prey to keep them going. Their rascality and general dubiousness was so transparent that he could not understand how any one could be taken in by them.

So it was that he resolved to leave the little men, the Holdsworthys, alone; and, while he met them in good fellowship, he chummed with none, and formed no deep friendships. He did not dislike the little men, the men of the Alta-Pacific, for instance. He merely did not elect to choose them for partners in the big game in which he intended to play. What this big game was, even he did not know. He was waiting to find it. And in the meantime he played small hands, investing in several arid-lands reclamation projects and keeping his eyes open for the big chance when it should come along.

And then he met John Dowsett, the great John Dowsett. It was the first big magnate Daylight had met face to face, and he was pleased and charmed. There was such a kindly humanness about the man, such a genial democraticness, that Daylight found it hard to realize that this was the John Dowsett, president of a string of banks, insurance manipulator, reputed ally of the lieutenants of Standard Oil, and known ally of the Guggenhammers. Nor did his looks belie his reputation and his manner. Physically, he guaranteed all that Daylight knew of him. Despite his sixty years and snow-white hair, his hand-shake was firmly hearty, and he showed no signs of decrepitude, walking with a quick, snappy step, making all movements definitely and decisively.

It was not long afterward that Daylight came on to New York. A letter from John Dowsett had been the cause—a simple little typewritten letter of several lines. But Daylight had thrilled as he read it. The bald sentences seemed gorged with mystery. "Our Mr. Howison will call upon you at your hotel. He is to be trusted. We must not be seen together. You will understand after we have had our talk." Daylight conned the words over and over. That was it. The big game had arrived, and it looked as if he were being invited to sit in and take a hand. Surely, for no other reason would one man so peremptorily invite another man to make a journey across the continent.

They met—thanks to "our" Mr. Howison—up the Hudson, in a magnificent country home. Daylight, ac-

BURNING DAYLIGHT.

cording to instructions, arrived in a private motor car which had been furnished him. Dowsett was already there, and another man whom Daylight recognized before the introduction was begun. It was Nathaniel Letton, and none other. Daylight had seen his face a score of times in the magazines and newspapers, and read about his standing in the financial world and about his endowed University of

"I Must Say, Mr. Harnish, That You Whipped Us Roundly in That Affair."

Daratona. He, likewise, struck Daylight as a man of power, though he was puzzled in that he could find no likeness to Dowsett. Except in the matter of cleanness—a cleanness that seemed to go down to the deepest fibers of him—Nathaniel Letton was unlike the other in every particular Thin to emaciation, he seemed a cold flame of a man. Not more than fifty, thatched with a sparse growth of iron-gray hair, he looked several times the age of Dowsett.

They drank—that is, Nathaniel Letton took mineral water served by the smoothly operating machine of a lackey who inhabited the place, while Dowsett took Scotch and soda and Daylight a cocktail. Leon Guggenhammer arrived in the midst of the drink, and ordered Scotch. Daylight studied him curiously. This was one of the great Guggenhammer family; a younger one, but nevertheless one of the crowd with which he had locked grapples in the North. Nor did Leon Guggenhammer fail to mention cognizance of that old affair. He complimented Daylight on his prowess—"The echoes of Ophir came down to us, you know. And I must say, Mr. Daylight—er, Mr. Harnish, that you whipped us roundly in that affair."

Leon Guggenhammer was young and fat. Not a day more than thirty, his face, save for the adumbated puff sacks under the eyes, was as smooth and lineless as a boy's. The talk soon centered down to business. Dowsett broached the plan, aided by an occasional remark from the other two, while Daylight asked questions. Whatever the proposition was, he was going into it with his eyes open. And they filled his eyes with the practical vision of what he had in mind.

"They will never dream you are with us," Guggenhammer interjected, as the outlining of the matter drew to a close, his handsome Jewish eyes flashing enthusiastically. "They'll think you are raiding on your own in proper buccaneer style."

"Of course, you understand, Mr. Harnish, the absolute need for keeping our alliance in the dark," Nathaniel Letton warned, gravely.

Daylight nodded his head.

"And you also understand," Letton went on, "that the result can only be productive of good. The thing is legitimate and right, and the only ones who may be hurt are the stock gamblers themselves. It is not an attempt to smash the market. As you see yourself, you are to bull the market. The honest investor will be the gainer."

"Yes, that's the very thing," Dowsett said. "The commercial need for copper is continually increasing. Ward Valley Copper, and all that it stands for—practically one-quarter of the world's supply, as I have shown you—is a big thing, how big, even we can scarcely estimate. Our arrangements are made. We have plenty of capital ourselves, and yet we want more. Also, there is too much Ward Valley out to suit our present plans. Thus we kill both birds with one stone. Not only will you buil Ward Valley, but you will at the same time gather Ward Valley in. This will be of inestimable advantage to us, while you and all of us will profit by it as well. And as Mr. Letton has pointed out, the thing is legitimate and square. On the eighteenth the directors meet, and, instead of the customary dividend, a double dividend will be declared."

"There will be all sorts of rumors on the street," Dowsett warned Daylight, "but do not let them frighten you. These rumors may even originate with us. You can see how and why clearly. But rumors are to be no concern of yours. You are on the inside. All you have to do is buy, buy, buy, and keep on buying to the last stroke, when the directors declare the double dividend. Ward Valley will jump so that it won't be feasible to buy after that."

"And one other thing, Mr. Harnish," Guggenhammer said, "if you exceed your available cash, or the amount you care to invest in the venture, don't fail immediately to call on us. Remember, we are behind you."

"Yes, we are behind you," Dowsett repeated.

Nathaniel Letton nodded his head in affirmation.

CHAPTER VIII.

Back at his hotel, though nearly two in the morning, he found the reporters waiting to interview him. Next morning there were more. And thus, with blare of paper trumpet, was he received by New York. Once more, with beating of tom-toms and wild hullaballoo, his picturesque figure strode across the printed sheet. The King of the Klondike, the hero of the Arctic, the thirty-million-dollar millionaire of the North, had come to New York What had he come for? To trim the New Yorkers as he had trimmed the Tonopah crowd in Nevada?

They were prepared for him to play and, when heavy buying of Ward Valley began, it was quickly decided that he was the operator. Financial gossip buzzed and hummed. He was after the Guggenhammers once more. The story of Ophir was told over again and sensationalized until even Daylight scarcely recognized it. Still, it was all grist to his mill. The stock gamblers were clearly befooled. Each day he increased his buying, and so eager were the sellers that Ward Valley rose but slowly. A wildly exciting time was his during the week preceding Thursday the eighteenth. Not only was he gambling as he had never gambled before, but he was gambling at the biggest table in the world for stakes so large that even the case-hardened habitues of that table were compelled to sit up. In spite of the unlimited selling, his persistent buying compelled Ward Valley steadily to rise, and as Thursday approached, the situation became acute Something had to smash. How much Ward Valley was this Klondike gambler going to buy? How much could he buy? What was the Ward Valley crowd doing all this time? Daylight appreciated interviews with them that appeared—interviews delightfully placid and non-committal. Leon Guggenhammer even hazarded the opinion that this Northland Croesus might possibly be making a mistake. But not that they cared, John Dowsett explained. "It is purely gambling from beginning to end," were Nathaniel Letton's words; "and we refuse to have anything to do with it or to take notice of it in any way."

During this time Daylight had several secret meetings with his partners—one with Leon Guggenhammer, one with John Dowsett, and two with Mr Howison. Beyond congratulations, they really amounted to nothing; for, as he was informed, everything was going satisfactorily. But on Tuesday morning a rumor that was disconcerting came to Daylight's ears. It was also published in the Wall Street Journal, and it was to the effect, on apparently straight inside information, that on Thursday, when the directors of Ward Valley met, instead of the customary dividend being declared, an assessment would be levied. It was the first check Daylight had received. It came to him with a shock that if the thing were so he was a broken man. And it also came to him that all this colossal operating of his was being done on his own money. Dowsett, Guggenhammer and Letton were risking nothing. It was a panic, shortlived, it was true, but sharp enough while it lasted to make him remember Holdsworthy and the brick-yard, and to impel him to cancel all buying orders while he rushed to a telephone.

"Nothing in it—only a rumor," came Leon Guggenhammer's throaty voice in the receiver. "As you know," said Nathaniel Letton, "I am one of the directors, and I should certainly be aware of it were such action contemplated." And John Dowsett: "I warned you against just such rumors. There is not an iota of truth in it—certainly not. I tell you on my honor as a gentleman."

Heartily ashamed of himself for his temporary loss of nerve, Daylight returned to his task. The cessation of buying had turned the Stock Exchange into a bedlam, and down all the line of stocks the bears were smashing. Ward Valley, as the apex, received the brunt of the shock, and was already beginning to tumble. Daylight calmly doubled his buying orders. And all through Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday morning, he went on buying, while Ward Valley rose triumphantly higher. Still they sold, and still he bought, exceeding his power to buy many times over, when delivery was taken into account. What of that? On this day the double dividend would be declared, he assured himself. The pinch of delivery would be on the shorts. They would be making terms with him.

And then the thunderbolt struck. True to the rumor, Ward Valley levied the assessment. Daylight threw up his arms. He verified the report and quit. Not alone Ward Valley, but all securities were being hammered down by the triumphant bears. As for Ward Valley, Daylight did not even trouble to learn if it had fetched bottom or was still tumbling. Not stunned, not even bewildered, while Wall Street went mad, Daylight withdrew from the field to think it over. After a short conference with his brokers, he proceeded to his hotel, on the way picking up the evening papers and glancing at the head-lines. BURNING DAYLIGHT CLEANED OUT, he read; DAYLIGHT GETS HIS; ANOTHER WESTERNER FAILS TO FIND EASY MONEY.

He passed up to his rooms, ordered a Martini cocktail, took off his shoes, and sat down to think. After half an hour he roused himself to take the drink, and as he felt the liquor pass warmingly through his body, his features relaxed into a slow, deliberate, yet genuine grin. He was laughing at himself.

"Buncoed, by gosh!" he muttered.

Then the grin died away, and his face grew bleak and serious. Leaving out his interests in the several Western reclamation projects (which were still assessing heavily), he was a ruined man. But harder hit than this was his pride. He had been so easy. They had gold-bricked him, and he had nothing to show for it. The simplest farmer would have had documents, while he had nothing but a gentleman's agreement, and a verbal one at that. Gentleman's agreement! He snorted over it. John Dowsett's voice, just as he had heard it in the telephone receiver, sounded in his ears the words, "On my honor as a gentleman." They were sneak-thieves and swindlers, that was what they were, and they had given him the double-cross. The newspapers were right. He had come to New York to be trimmed, and Messrs. Dowsett, Letton and Guggenhammer had done it. He was a little fish, and they had played with him ten days—ample time in which to swallow him, along with his eleven millions. Of course, they had been unloading on him all the time, and now they were buying Ward Valley back for a song ere the market righted itself.

And Daylight sat and consumed cocktails and saw back in his life to Alaska, and lived over the grim years in which he had battled for his eleven millions. For awhile murder ate at his heart, and wild ideas and sketchy plans of killing his betrayers flashed through his wind. Daylight unlocked his grip and took out his automatic pistol—a big Colt's .44. He released the safety catch with his thumb, and, operating the sliding outer barrel, ran the contents of the clip through the mechanism. The eight cartridges slid out in a stream. He refilled the clip, threw a cartridge into the chamber, and with the trigger at ful cock, thrust up the safety ratchet. He shoved the weapon into the side pocket of his coat, ordered another Martini, and resumed his seat.

At ten o'clock he arose and pored over the city directory. Then he put on his shoes, took a cab, and departed into the night. Twice he changed cabs, and finally fetched up at the night office of a detective agency. He superintended the thing himself, laid down money in advance in profuse quantities, selected the six men he needed, and gave them their instructions Never, for so simple a task, had they been so well paid; for to each in addition to office charges, he gave a five-hundred-dollar bill, with the promise of another if he succeeded. Some time next day, he was convinced, if not sooner, his three silent partners would come together. To each one two of his detectives were to be attached. Time and place was all he wanted to learn.

"Stop at nothing, boys," were his final instructions. "I must have this information. Whatever you do whatever happens, I'll see you through."

Returning to his hotel, he changed cabs as before, went up to his room, and with one more cocktail for a night-cap, went to bed and to sleep. In the morning he dressed and shaved, ordered breakfast and the newspapers sent up, and waited. But he did not drink. By nine o'clock his telephone began to ring and the reports to come in. Nathaniel Letton was taking the train at Tarrytown. John Dowsett was coming down by the subway. Leon Guggenhammer had not stirred out yet, though he was assuredly within And in this fashion, with a map of the city spread out before him, Daylight followed the movements of his three men as they drew together. Nathaniel Letton was at his offices in the Mutual-Solander Building. Next arrived Guggenhammer. Dowsett was still in his own offices. But at eleven came the word that he also had arrived, and several minutes later Daylight was in a hired motor-car and speeding for the Mutual-Solander Building.

When Pugilism Was Underpaid.

Cribb received a public ovation when he returned to London, and Holborn is said to have been rendered impassable by the asembled crowds He gained only $2,000 by the fight—a contrast to the enormous amounts received—win or lose—by present day glove fighters.

Worms Blocked Traffic.

An odd incident caused no little dismay amongst Paris citizens the other morning. A van conveying about five hundredweight of worms, intended for baiting, was overturned on the Boulevard Sebastopol, Paris, and the worms swarmed over the tramway lines and rendered all vehicular traffic impossible until they had been cleared away.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 9, 1912.

NOMINATION papers have been as thick as "hair on a dog" this week, and the man who hasn't had an opportunity to sign a half dozen or so is a notable exception.

WHEN the Southern New England railroad to Providence is completed and the Boston and Albany's new line to Shelburne Falls, also the Hampden railroad between Bondsville and Springfield, Palmer will be considerable of a railroad town.

THE convention of the Progressives at Chicago this week nominated Roosevelt and Johnson of California, and closed with an abundance of enthusiasm. And now the three-cornered fight between the Republican elephant, the Democratic donkey and the Progressive bull moose is on for the finish.

FROM present appearances it is evident that the representative contest in the First Hampden district, both in the convention and at the polls, will be a sharp one. With two candidates from the same town in the field for the Republican nomination, and neither likely to yield to the other in the interests of "party harmony," there is already talk of a "dark horse" selection as a peaceful solution of the problem.

IS Sherman Stebbins of Monson, who is out for the Republican nomination for representative in the First Hampden district, the candidate of the Bull Moose party? The question has been asked numerous times of late. It was openly stated some time ago that the party planned to have a candidate in every contest in the state, and as Mr. Stebbins is known to be an ardent Roosevelt man the question is only natural under the circumstances.

ANNOUNCEMENT was made Wednesday of the Democratic state ticket as arranged by Gov. Foss (who wasn't going to run again) and others. Foss is the gubernatorial candidate, with David I. Walsh again in second place; secretary of state, Frank J. Donahue; state treasurer, Joseph L. P. St. Coeur of Cambridge; state auditor, James F. Carens of Newburyport; attorney general, George W. Anderson. The new names on the ticket are St. Coeur and Carens.

THAT the present sewer conditions are a menace to the health of the community there can be no gainsaying. With sewage backing up into basements and cellars there are great possibilities of sickness, to say the least. The experienee of property owners in other sections of the village impresses them with the belief that the trouble is not all on North Main street, and that if it takes a correspondingly long time to clear the sewers in other sections, winter will find them in the present obstructed condition, with all the attendant dangers. If, as reported in our news columns, there is a possibility of clearing the North Main street sewer in four days, nothing should be allowed to stand in the way of its being done. And then the rest of the system should be attended to before cold weather.

A team driven by R. J. Stevenson, driver for the Marcy Lumber Co., was run into from the rear by a large automobile on the ice house hill on Park street late yesterday afternoon. There was no damage to the team, but the front axle of the auto was sprung and the mud guard and lamp smashed; it proceeded on its way for repairs later.

The matter of hose for the use of the highway department in flushing sewers has been adjusted by Chief Summers turning over to Highway Surveyor McKelligott a quantity of old hose which he will keep in the town's tool building. He has turned over his key to the engine house, and if additional hose is needed at any time it will be supplied on request to the chief engineer.

The selectmen gave a hearing last evening on the petitions of the Central Massachusetts Electric Co. and the New England Telephone and Telegraph Co. for joint pole locations on South Main, Walnut and Park streets. There was no objection to the South Main street locations, and only minor objections to any of those on Walnut and Park streets. These will be adjusted and the petitions granted later. The new layout will put the wires of both companies on one set of poles and eliminate several poles now in these streets.

Electric Cars Lack Power.

Half Service Since Monday. Engine Trouble at Power Plant.

Travel on the cars of the Springfield and Eastern Street railway since Monday night has been a thing of fits and starts and general uncertainty. Cars have run on any old time and on no particular time, with long waits between and both sides.

The trouble has been with the power—or rather the lack of it. The street railway company last spring sold its power plant to the Central Massachusetts Electric company, which at once began extensive improvements. Among these was the reconstruction of the water wheel plant and the rebuilding of the dam at the power station at Blanchardville. The pond was drawn off a couple of weeks ago and the two engines in the plant relied on to furnish juice. Monday night, without any warning whatever, the packing in one of the main bearings on the big engine melted out, putting the machine out of commission. The entire systen was then dependent for power on the smaller engine, which reduced the power available about two-thirds. As a consequenee not more than two cars could be run at a time on the street railway. If more were started all stopped. Under these conditions Manager Atkins adopted the plan—Wednesday and yesterday—of running cars on two lines to the terminus, then stopping those and running two others to their destination; the first two were then returned to Palmer and followed by the others while the first two stood still. Just about half time was maintained on the Monson, Ware and village lines; on the Springfield line the half hour cars were cut out. Naturally there was much inconvenience and some grumbling, but when the nature of the trouble was explained the majority laughingly made the best of an accident which could not have been avoided. Yesterday morning a large number from Bondsville arrived too late for the excursion train to Boston, although it was held 15 minutes for them; they were taken down on the regular train at 8.29.

The Central Massachusetts Electric company did everything possible to get the engine into commission again at once, and had it ready to start up about midnight Wednesday, but after running about three hours the trouble again developed and the engine has been out of commission since. It is hoped to have it running again to-night or to-morrow forenoon. Because of the shortage of power there have been no street lights sinee Monday, though the company has managed to keep the commercial lights going.

There will be a bridge whist party at the golf club house at North Monson next Wednesday afternoon at 3 o'clock. The committee in eharge is Mrs. C. W. Jackson, Mrs. C. M. Gage, Mrs. Rufus Fay, Mrs. F. L. Bliss, Mrs. W. L. Ricketts. Mrs. L. Hutchinson.

Neumann—Dane.

The marriage of Miss Ernestine E. Neumann of North Grafton and George S. Dane of Palmer took place in New Haven, Ct., Wednesday, July 31st. The ceremony was performed by Rev. F. Saunders at the Congregational parsonage. The bride was attended by Miss Lulu Neumann of Mattapan and the best man was Charles Dane of Muncie, Ind. The bride was gowned in white messaline and wore a veil. The bridesmaid wore white serge. After a wedding trip to Boston and Providence, the couple returned to Palmer and are residing on Bowden street, where Mr. Dane reeently purchased a house.

Leg Broken Playing Ball.

Merrick W. Hellyar, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Hellyar of Squier street, is confined to his home as the result of a baseball aecident last Saturday, resulting in a broken leg. He was playing on the driving park and was attempting to steal a base, but turned back and in some way made a misstep and fell, breaking the small bone of his right leg between the knee and ankle. He was attended by Dr. H. C. Cheney.

Restaurant Sold.

L. A. Fontaine has sold his Central street restaurant to William Arecott and John Collett, who have taken possession and will continue the business.

Musical Comedy at the Lake.

"The Mikado" For the Rest of This Week. Big Bill For Sunday.

Musieal comedy has held the boards at Forest Lake this week, and the company has drawn good audiences in spite of the interrupted street railway serviee. Changes of program are made Mondays and Thursdays, and yesterday "The Mikado" was put on for the rest of this week. For the first three days next week the play will be "The Convent Girl." A big show is announced for Sunday, consisting of new vaudeville acts, assisted by members of the musical eomedy company.

In another column will be found an advertisement offering to buy old books. Lists mailed to the Journal office will reaeh the purchaser.

At the meeting of Quabong eouncil, Royal Areanum, Tuesday evening, E. B. Taylor was eleeted trustee to fill the vacancy caused by the death of G. A. Rice.

The Thorndike Grain Company of Thorndike start business on a cash basis beginning to-morrow. Attention is ealled to their adv. on the eighth page.

In the district court last Saturday Ffed H. M. Speight, Frank Sezebak and Powell Makuck, all of Wilbraham, paid fines of $5 each for keeping unlieensed dogs.

Nomination papers in favor of Sherman Stebbins of Monson as the Republican candidate for representative in the First Hampden district, have been circulated this week and generously signed.

It is expected that the construction of the short strip of state highway at Shearer's Corner, washed out by the storm of last spring, will begin soon. It will be done by the state highway commission.

The Eager block on Main street has been sold to Charles W. Robinson. The papers have not been passed yet, but the papers have been made out and Mr. Robinson expects to take possession soon. He plans to thoroughly renovate the building outside and in, making the ground floor into a store and the upper floor into offices if there is a demand for them.

My Rest Cure.

Commit it o memory or paste it up where your e will often rest upon it Apply it daily as often as practieable; make it a part of your daily thought, and, my word for it, that tired feeling will vanish and you will know it no more forever Your heart, your home, your life will be full of sunshine.

Relax mind and body.
Ease up on every nerve and muscle
Shut out all unpleasantness
Throw care to the winds

If you become tired when reading, writing or in the pursuance of anything requiring mental effort; if the mind seems to lose its activity for a time, its quickness of perception, its power of concentration, it, too, needs a rest or change of activity. The brain not being a muscular organ, must rely upon bodily activity to draw away the blood that has been used and make room for new.—Los Angeles Times.

The Test of a Man.

Giving evidence at an inquest at Yarmouth, a market stall carrier declared he could take ten pints of beer before breakfast and get home all right. The coroner told him he ought to be ashamed to say so and the witness replied that a man who could not take four or five pints was no man at all.—London Evening Standard.

PALMER NEWS.

Possibly Another Railroad.

Report That B. & A. Will Build From Palmer to Shelburne Falls.

The report that the Boston and Albany railroad is contemplating the construction of a line from Palmer to Shelburne Falls in order to eliminate the heavy grades over the Berkshire mountains and give it better facilities for handling through freight will be of especial interest. The story appeared in the Boston News Bureau Monday evening, and is as follows:

The management of the New York Central railroad is considering a plan for diverting its heavier traffic to Hoosac tunnel. The plan provides for utilization of the tracks of the Fitchburg railroad from its connection with the main line of New York Central in the Mohawk valley, New York, and thence to the Hoosac tunnel route with its easy grades to Shelburne Falls, Mass.

"It has been figured that building a new line from the latter place to Palmer by way of Amherst would afford a route at least 20 miles shorter than the Boston and Albany route through Albany, Pittsfield and Springfield, which involves some of the steepest railroad grades in the United States. It is the opinion of competent engineers that the advantage in grades would equal an additional 20 miles, representing a virtual short cut of fully 40 miles. This saving upon the present freight traffic of the Boston and Albany and its prospective increase would warrant a large construction expenditure, but the projected line between Shelburne Falls and Palmer is one that could be cheaply constructed.

"The Canadian government has decided so to enlarge its Welland canal as to enable the huge steamships, now conveying 400,000-odd bushels of grain from Chicago and Lake Superior ports to Buffalo, to reach Oswego. Under the proposed arrangement such traffic may thence be carried to Boston by way of the New York Central and Hoosac tunnel. The proposed route, which would comprise the most direct and best-graded one for the enormous wheat crops of the Northwest, may result in a notable growth in the business of this port as well as prove of great value to the New York Central.

"Hoosac tunnel, which cost the Commonwealth of Massachusetts upward of $20,000,000, has as yet never fulfilled the brilliant expectations entertained for it as a connection with western railroads. This has been primarily because Boston and Albany was able to prevent the tunnel line management from securing adequate freight from New York Central in the Mohawk valley. At the time of the lease of the Albany to the Central in 1900 it was disclosed that there was a hard-and-fast contract between those two roads that this condition should obtain and tunnel connections west of the Hudson be confined to the lines less desirable than the main line of the Central. With the better understanding between the Vanderbilt management and the New Haven people, now in control of the Hoosac tunnel, it is believed a new era in this respect may be at hand."

Among the Churches.

The pulpit of the Advent chapel will be supplied Sunday by Herbert L. Hunt of Springfield, subject, "The two ways." The service will be at 3 in the afternoon, and all are welcome.

Next Sunday the regular morning and evening service will be omitted at the Baptist church and union services will be held with the Congregational church. All other services will be held as usual in the Baptist church.

H. W. McGilp of South Main street has gone to Greeley, Col., where he will spend a month with his son, Henry McGilp. C. J. Shaw will take charge of his business during his absence.

About a Pair of "Pants."

A Detroit man who had contributed a bundle of his cast-off clothing for the relief of the victims of a fire, received from one of the sufferers the following note: 'The committy man giv me amungst other things wat ne called a pare of pants, and 'twould make me pant some to ware 'em I found your name and where you live on one of the pokits My wife laffed so when I shode 'em to her that I thot she wood have a conipshun fit She wants to no if there lives and brethes a man who has legs no bigger than that She sed if there was he orter be taken up for vagrancy for havin' no visible means of support. I couldent get 'em on my oldest boy, so I used 'em for gun cases If you hav another pare to spare, my wife would like to get t to hang up by the side of the fireplace to keep the tongs in." —Spofford's Library of Wit and Humor.

Protest.

"The boys seem discouraged about makin' garden," said Mrs. Corntossel.

"Yep," replied her husband "They turned up a few square feet of dirt an' then held a meetin' an' passed resolutions to the effect that it was a shame to spoil such a fine fishin'-worm pasture by plantin' it full o' potatoe an' sweet corn."

Wasted Effort

"And," Mrs. Bellfire added with a slightly acid touch, "you might be here on time, for a change."

Bellfire quailed, as a well trained husband should have done under the circumstances. For on the previous five evenings dinner had waited, cooled, collapsed into a sodden mess because of his nonarrival at the proper time.

"I will be home tonight," he assured his wife, "at 6 o'clock. I shall start in plenty of time to allow for distractions—and, anyhow, I don't think I should be blamed because an old friend sprung up out of the earth and talked a half hour, or for a slow watch or for a slow client! However, barring earthquakes and convulsions of nature, this evening will see me here when you expect me!"

"I certainly hope so," Mrs. Bellfire told him. "I am sure the cook will leave if it happens again!"

Bellfire started that evening for the suburban express train, which left at 5:25. He was going to make a good job of it and arrive home with fifteen minutes to spare. It was bitter cold and the train so crowded that the best he could do was to wedge himself to dodging the rain of cinders.

Ordinarily it took the express train fifteen minutes to make the run. It had been traveling five minutes when it stumbled and then stopped. It did not resume its progress. Men began to fold their newspapers and scowl. Then they began to investigate. It seemed that the locomotive was frozen up! A roar of indignation arose from the passengers. Somebody scratched the frost from a window and announced that they were nearly opposite an intermediate station. Then a local train puffed in at that platform.

In the exodus which ensued Bellfire found himself crushed off on the snow covered ground. He stood knee deep in a snowbank and blinked at the distant platform, the trainmen swinging warning lanterns and ordering their escaping trainload back. Then he, too, began hopping over intervening tracks. He might lose his life, but he had to be home at 6 o'clock.

He dodged a through train, knocked down a fat man and joined the shivering crowd clustering about the wrong end of the local platform. The ascending spirals of frosted breath that went up from every individual looked like dozens of little campfires. On the end of the platform the ever present busy person was giving orders.

"Now, we've got to get the ladies up here!" he said. "This man and I'll give 'em a hand—and you fellows down there get 'em started!"

A riot ensued, punctuated by shrieks of, "Oh, it's so terribly high!" "Take Willie first! Wil-l-ee! Stay away from the edge of that platform!" "Oh, I've dropped my bag!" "Why don't they have steps here? I should think there would be steps!"

Bellfire, being large, soon found that he was doing most of the heavy work. The process of boosting numberless women, each weighing twenty-five pounds of furs and other wraps above normal, is exhausting. When Bellfire at last clambered up he was disheveled, puffing, limp. He dragged himself to that level just in time to see the last of the crowd swing on the last platform of the local that had puffed in.

When he had become petrified to his knees another headlight loomed up—and dashed by without stopping. It was an express train temporarily out of its orbit because of Bellfire's frozen train. By the time another appeared Bellfire was ice to his neck. Stiffly he stumbled on board and dropped himself against a door. He did not dare sit down because he was firmly convinced that if he did so he would splinter into icicles. When he had thawed out enough to have human intelligence Bellfire observed that the train was making no stops whatever. Just as this fact dawned upon him the lights of his own station appeared, blinked, vanished. He grabbed the conductor and protested raucously.

"Nope," said the conductor. "This train is a special and doesn't stop again till it gets to Flowerdale at the end of the line."

Flowerdale is exactly twenty-one miles beyound Bellfire's station. A veil will be drawn over the communion that Bellfire had with himself during the trip out, the dismal wait and the trip back on a local. The very least and mildest thing that he could imagine Mrs. Bellfire doing was dismantling the flat and packing her trunk.

At ten minutes past 8 Bellfire slunk into his apartment. The worst was confirmed, for there were no lights.

"Emily," he began huskily, "listen while I explain, won't you?"

There was silence as he turned on a light. Then he saw a penciled scrawl in the mirror. She had left him, he knew! Finally he summoned enough courage to read his wife's message.

"Dear John," it ran, "mother phoned for us to come to dinner tonight. Come on over."

"Oh, pickles!" exclaimed Bellfire, thankfully. Then he went out to the pantry and made a ham sandwich.—Chicago Daily News.

AID THE KIDNEYS

Palmer Sufferers Should Take No Further Risk.

Why will people continue to suffer the agonies of kidney complaint, backache, urinary disorders, lameness, headaches, languor,—why allow themselves to become chronic invalids, when a tested remedy is offered them?

Doan's Kidney Pills have been used in kidney trouble over 50 years, have been tested in thousands of cases.

If you have any, even one, of the symptoms of kidney diseases, act now, for gravel, dropsy or Bright's disease may set in and make neglect dangerous. Can Palmer residents demand more convincing proof than the following?

Napoleon Billodeau, Monson, Mass., says: "I suffered for a long time, especially at night. When I arose in the morning I was tired and languid. Finally reading about Doan's Kidney Pills: I procured a box and found almost immediate relief through their use. I can recommend this remedy without the least doubt of its efficiency."

Telephone Talks
The ear of the business and social world is attuned to the sound of the "Bell."
If you would command the world's attention—RING!

Ever notice what queer pranks in transposing figures your mind will play?
Take three numbers—1468, 1546, 6428, for example. Now dismiss them from your mind for a minute and then try to recall them.
How easily you wonder whether it wasn't "1648" or "1456" or "6248"!
That's one reason why telephone subscribers are asked to consult the directory before giving a number—because this peculiar psychological trait is almost certain to lead to "wrong number" calls.
Such calls are not merely an annoyance but an economic waste. They abuse the patience of the person thus needlessly disturbed; they consume (instead of save) the time of the caller; and they burden the Telephone Company with a double operating expense.
Another reason why the directory should be consulted is found in the fact that telephone numbers occasionally are changed.
If you take pains to ascertain the correct number desired, and then pronounce it distinctly, in 999 instances out of 1000 you will get the correct connection.
The New England Telephone and Telegraph Company is one link in the chain of the great "Bell System," and in the states of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and Massachusetts is connected with 425,000 telephones.

BONDSVILLE.

TENTH ANNUAL REUNION.

Childs Family Hold Pleasant Gathering In Bondsville.

The tenth annual reunion of the Childs family was held Saturday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Collis. The weather was favorable and a larger crowd then usual was in attendance. For five times the reunion has been held here, three times at Sterling Junction, once at Leeds and once at Worcester. Dark blue badges were given to each person, with the place of holding the reunion, the date and the year it was organized. Guests began to arrive at 9.45 in the morning and continued to come until 2 o'clock.

In the morning the annual ball game was enjoyed by the men, and the ladies renewed old acquaintanees. Photographer Moon of Worcester took pictures of the group. At noon a dinner was served, which was much appreciated. The tables, which were set on the lawn in back of the house on a long covered platform, were prettily decorated with huge bunches of sweet peas. A party of 87 sat down to a bountiful dinner furnished by Mrs. Collis.

After dinner a business meeting was held and the following officers were elected for the coming year: President, Calvin Childs of Sterling Junction; vice president, William Childs of Worcester; secretary, Marion Fitch of Sterling Junction. Shortly after the meeting, an entertainment that was much enjoyed was furnished by Mrs. Clara Brewer of Worcester, which consisted of chorus singing with Miss Marion Fitch as leader. Mrs. Fred Collis rendered a solo, "Flight of Ages," and one was also given by Mrs. Minnie Frederick of Worcester. A very pleasing part of the entertainment was a song and dance by little Miss Brewer of Worcester and Helen Childs of Clinton. Recitations were given by several of the children and a poem composed by Herbert Childs of Portland, who was unable to be present, was read.

The oldest member present was Mrs. Calvin Childs of Sterling Junction, who is 77 years old. Mrs. Childs is an invalid and was brought here in an auto. The youngest child attending was little Gladys Church of Springfield, who is less than a year old. Guests were present from Leeds, Sterling Junction, Williamsburg, Clinton, Malden, Springfield, Boston, Easthampton, and Amherst, beside those from the surrounding villages. Next year the reunion will be held in Williamsburg.

Burned To Death.

Mrs. Charles Whitney Sets Fire To Clothing. Was Mentally Deranged.

Mrs. Charles Whitney of Main street died at her home Monday morning at 2 o'clock as the result of burns received Sunday afternoon, when she made a successful attempt at suicide by pouring gasoline on her clothing and igniting it.

Mrs. Whitney had been suffering from a nervous trouble for several months and was under the constant care of a trained nurse. She and the nurse had been in the kitchen of their apartment in the Norcross block, preparing the Sunday dinner. Unobserved by her companion, Mrs. Whitney slipped out of the back door, where she had previously hidden a pint bottle of gasoline. Taking this she went down the backstairs and on reaching the ground poured the gasoline on her clothing and was seen to bend over to strike a match and set her clothing on fire. They burst into flames immediately. Walter Robinson, who lives in a house a few feet from where she was, and who had seen her come down the stairs but did not realize what she was doing till her clothing was all ablaze, grabbed a rug and rushed toward her, attempting to wrap it around her. She fought so that he was unable to extinguish the flames until E. D. Rees and William Kennedy rushed to his assistance. With the aid of rugs and bed blankets they suceeeded in extinguishing the flames.

Dr. Capen and Dr. McQuaid were called and did all that was possible to aid her, but the upper part of her body was burned so badly that she died at 2 o'clock Monday morning.

The body was taken to West Upton Tuesday, where the funeral services were held at 2 p. m.; the burial was in that place.

Mrs. Whitney was born in Rochester, and lived there until she was 16 years of age. She had resided in Middlebury for about 20 years, and had lived in Monson the past two years. She is survived by her husband and one son, George E. Whitney of Detroit, Michigan; also her mother, Mrs. A. H. Ryder, and one brother, George M. Ryder, both of Onset.

Miss Edna M. Hulin of Upham's Corner, Dorchester, has been appointed teacher of science in the high school for the coming year. She will succeed Miss Ella L. Townsend, who has resigned.

Influence of College Men.

As educated men filter through the community, reforms are obtained that twenty years ago seemed millennial. The separation of local from state sources of revenue, the separation of local from national elections, the treatment of a franchise as valuable property, the discriminating between ordinary industry and natural monopoly, the practice of scientific charity and penology, the concentration of responsibility in government—these and a score of other good things which once seemed as far above popular comprehension as four-dimensional space, have come to pass, thanks chiefly to the radiations from the classrooms.—Century Magazine.

Tracing the "Barber Shop Chord."

Barbers in the old days might well charge heavily, for theirs must have been a nerve-racking existence. Zithers were provided instead of newspapers, and customers used to strum on these while waiting for a vacant chair. Dekker, writing, refers to "a barber's cittern for every man to play on." The term "barber's music," was a common one in the days of Pepys, who on June 5, 1660, records: "After supper my lord called for the lieutenant's cittern, and with two candlesticks with money in them for symballs, we made barber's music, with which my lord was very well pleased."

MORE OF ART THAN NATURE

Matron's Beautiful Figure, Admired by All, Suffered Sad Collapse at Inopportune Time.

At a dinner party given lately in Paris one lady was remarked above all others for the elegance of her figure and the perfection of her toilet. During the mauvais quart d'heure before dinner she was surrounded by a host of admirers, and one less bashful than the rest ventured to offer her the flower from his buttonhole. It was accepted, but as the "princess robe" worn by the graceful creature was laced behind, it was necessary to fasten the flower to the front of her dress with a pin. The operation was successfully performed, and the fair lady was led in to dinner, by the donor of the flower. They were hardly seated when he heard a curious sound like the [illegible]ing of the wind, and on turning toward his partner he saw with horror that the lovely figure was getting "small by degrees and beautifully less." The rounded form had disappeared before the soup was over, and long before the first entree the once creaseless garment hung in great folds about a scraggy framework! It seems that the newest dresses for "slight" ladies are made with air-tight linings and inflated when on till the required degree of embonpoint is attained. The unfortunate lady mentioned above had forgotten this little detail when she fastened the fatal flower to her bosom with a pin; hence the collapse!—Labouchere in Truth of March 8, 1877.

LONG USEFULNESS AT AN END

Some Would Have Thought Vase Had Done Good Service, but Not So Mrs. Spicer.

When Miss Ann Pickett dropped in on her neighbor, Mrs. Spicer, and found her moping over the fragments of a gilt vase, Miss Ann sympathized generously. "It must have been quite a costly vase," she said, looking admiringly at the pieces.

"No, it only cost six bits," Mrs. Spicer acknowledged. "'Tain't that I feel so bad about."

"Maybe it was a gift that you prized because of associations—"

Mrs. Spicer shook her head. "Jim and I bought it over in Tompkinsville a long time ago; I prized it because it was such a saving to the family. The first year we had it I kept it on the front shelf for a general ornament; then when Jim's birthday came and I hadn't anything else handy to give, I gave him the vase for his own. Next Christmas, instead of paying out good money to buy something new he gave it back to me for a Christmas present; then I gave it to Jim junior on his birthday, and he gave it to Sue Belle on hers.

"The next spring all the kinfolks got up a birthday party for old Aunt Sallie Spicer, and we took her the vase; after she'd kep' it a good bit, she gave it to Jim's sister Jane for a weddin' present, and afterwards Jane gave it to me and Jim when we had our china weddin' I was counting on giving it to Jim again on his next birthday, and now here it is smashed to flinders.

"I tell you, Miss Ann, it most makes me cry to think of losing such a useful family article—so near Jim's birthday, too!"—Youth's Companion.

Giving Man Credit.

"I don't believe any man is really good," she said. "When you find one who doesn't go wrong it is because he is afraid."

"Oh, it isn't always because they are afraid," replied her friend, who was married. "Very often it is because they haven't the price."

WANTED: 50 MEN AND WOMEN

To Take Advantage of Special Offer Made By J. P. Lynde.

J. P. Lynde, the enterprising druggist is advertising to-day for fifty men and women to take advantage of the special half-price offer he is making on Dr. Howard's celebrated specific for the cure of constipation and dyspepsia and get a fifty cent package at half-price 25 cents.

So positive is he of the remarkable power of this specific to cure these diseases as well as sick headaches and liver troubles, that he agrees to refund the money to any customer whom the medicine does not quickly relieve and cure.

With Dr. Howard's specific at hand, you can eat what you want and have no fear of ill consequences. It strengthens the stomach, gives perfect digestion, regulates the bowels, creates an appetite and makes life worth the living.

If you cannot call at J. P. Lynde's store to-day send him 25 cents by mail and he will send you a package promptly, charges paid. J. P. Lynde has been able to secure only a limited supply of the specific, so great is the demand, and you should not delay taking advantage of this liberal offer he is making this week.

WELL DEFIES SKILL OF MAN

Engineers Unable to Confine Marvelous Flow of Gas in Transylvania, Hungary.

There are wells of many kinds: those which gallons of petroleum, those which furnish water to surrounding populations, wells that are scarcely damp, and wells that periodically inundate the neighborhood in which they are found. But of all the wells in existence probably none compare in interest with a gas well in Hungary.

This well is situated in Transylvania, and the peculiarity of it is that it is not seen but heard. The gas escapes by means of an iron tube with such dreadful force as to produce a noise which makes it impossible to hear the human voice within a considerable radius.

Many and diverse attempts have been made to regulate and utilize the output of gas, but so far the only device which has succeeded has been to put an iron tube of 25 centimeters in diameter into the earth. Through this the gas has been escaping now for nearly three years. Engineers from various countries have been conducted to the spot and have thought out ingenious ways to make the gas available and to stop the dreadful noise caused by its escape. Every plan has failed. On one occasion the problem was believed to have been solved, but it was soon found that the gas had merely been turned aside in its course and was escaping in the same manner in adjacent territory after having followed a track for some distance below the surface.

The gas comes through the iron tube with the velocity of a cannon ball and it is estimated that there is a daily loss of a million of cubic meters, the value of which amounts to $6.000.—Harper's Weekly

Varieties of Honey.

A sore throat and a rasping cough led the writer to call in at the stores with a view to the purchase of honey Lemon and honey are extremely soothing, and the overplus of the latter can be used on the breakfast table. The assistant said they had plenty of honey, got it fresh every day "What honey is it?" asked the man with a sore throat huskily "Twenty-one cents a pound," replied the salesman, and it came out that he had no notion that there were varieties of honey His idea was that all honey was English, and he had never heard of Irish honey, let alone of that superb quality that the Connemara bees produce, or of the heather honey or that from the West Indies. Grocers and purchasers should be educated in the various excellences of honey.—London Chronicle.

Inexhaustible Supply of Iron.

One of the most wonderful sources of iron in the world is at Lac a la Tortue, Quebec, near to where iron has been smelted since 1733. Organic acids dissolve the iron rust in the sandy bottom of the rivers running into the lake, where the exposure of its surface to the air turns the composition into a persalt, forming in a film upon the surface This sinks in the lake forming "cake ore," which is smelted at the Radnor forges into the finest charcoal iron The supply is always being replenished, and the lake furnishes one of the few "iron mines" in the world which will probably never be exhausted by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

Leap Year by Proxy

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press)

"I'm never going to get married," said Kitty to her Aunt Katherine."

Aunt Katherine, who was very tall and beautiful, and who was always dressed in sweeping black gowns, looked at Kitty severely through her gold lorgnette.

"And you are 20?" she asked.

"Men aren't worth bothering over," said Kitty. "Now, there's Rodney Hodge. He's the only man who will be at the dance tonight who is really worth while, yet I wouldn't be afraid to say that he'll never propose."

Aunt Katherine lighted the candles over the fireplace. It was one of her fads to spend the evening by candlelight. Electricity was for the mob, she said.

"Why should you care?" she asked, "what Rodney Hodge does? You are not in love with him, are you?"

Kitty composed herself. Well, you see, I could be in love with him," she said sagely, if he were not such a clam. "He's so—so fine, Aunt Katherine."

"Yes, he is fine," said the older woman.

Kitty's little face was very grave now, and her little hand was laid in earnestness on Miss Severance's knee.

"And so," Aunt Katherine finished for her, as she took the little hand in her firm clasp, "and so, my little Kitty, if you were a man and Rodney Hodge were a girl, you would ask Rodney to marry you?"

"Yes," Kitty whispered.

"Then—why not ask him — anyhow?" said Aunt Katherine.

Kitty gave her a startled glance. "Why—Aunt Katherine—" she stammered, "you don't mean—"

"It's leap year."

"Oh, I knew you were joking." Kitty's voice had a note of relief in it.

She changed the subject after that, and Kitty went off to her leap year dance happily.

Miss Severance sat long by the fire, then she picked up the receiver of the telephone and gave a number. When the answer came, she said: "Is that you, Bronson? This is Katherine Severance. I want to ask you to come and see me. Yes, tonight. Yes—it's important. You will? It's very good of you. At nine, then?"

She paced the room restlessly, as she waited, and when her caller came, a gray-haired, stately man, she welcomed him with a laugh that was slightly nervous.

"It's about Kitty," she said. She was seated in a high-backed chair which gave her a queenly dignity. "I—I want to make a sort of leap year proposal by proxy, Bronson."

He looked at her keenly. "You mean Rodney?" he asked.

"Yes. Kitty likes him and I think he loves her. He did years ago. But—but he hasn't asked her to marry him."

"And he will not!" sternly.

"Why not?"

"He shall not suffer as I have suffered," was the quiet answer. "You know how I staked all my happiness, Katherine, on your answer years ago, and you know, too, that I lost. I will not have my boy hurt in a like fashion."

"Kitty—is sweeter than I," said Miss Severance, "and I think she cares."

"No one could be sweeter than you were," the old man turned on her fiercely, "until you learned to break men's hearts."

"And to break my own," said Katherine Severance.

Out of a deep silence he asked: "Then you, too, have suffered?"

"Yes. Do you remember a leap year dance and a girl all in white, with silver slippers and a rose in her hair?"

"You," he breathed.

"And she made up her mind that she would tell the man whom once she had spurned that she had changed—and—and—that he was the only man in the world—for her. But she was proud—and—she could not, for he gave her no opening—and, after all, she was a woman—and a woman cannot woo."

"Katherine," he said, and his voice broke; "dear girl, if you had spoken, how much of happiness life would have held for us."

And tonight when Kitty went to her leap year dance, all the past rolled back on me and I wanted her to be happy with a man like you. It is too late now for us—but surely they—"

He laughed like a boy. "Too late? Why, how old are you, Katherine?"

"Forty."

"And I am fifty-two. And we're young, dearest. And the world is before us. Do you think Kitty and Rodney are the only ones in the world who can live and love?"

He took her hands masterfully in his. "Look at me, Kate," he said, "and tell me if you want to leave all the happiness to Kitty?"

That night when Kitty came home she was radiant.

"Aunt Kate," she cried, as her aunt, wrapped in a white silk kimono, met her at the top of the stairway, "I'm the happiest woman in the world."

"No," said Aunt Kate, mysteriously, "you're not the happiest. Because there are others."

Doing Good

"I'm kind of uneasy about my health, doctor," said the major. "I have been suffering from shooting pains in my right side, where my heart is, and all my organs seem out of whack in one way or another, so I thought I'd ask you to examine me and tell me what's wrong and give me a prescription."

"I'll be glad to examine you and prescribe, Major Standoff," replied the doctor, "when you have settled that old account of yours, which has been running for three years. At the last meeting of our county medical association we passed drastic resolutions forbidding members to have dealings with certain people, who are notoriously bad pay, and your name was the first mentioned in this connection."

"Well, great guns!" cried the major. "That I should have to be insulted by a lanternjawed sawbones right here in this town, which owes its very existence to my heroism and self-sacrifice in the times that tried men's souls! This surely must be an evil dream from which I shall presently wake! It doesn't stand to reason that any man, much less a one horse doctor, would dare to hand such an insult to the pioneer who made the wilderness blossom as the rose!

"Why, sir, I have been the best friend you ever had since you hung out your shingle. I have boosted you in season and out of season. I took an interest in you from the first, and whenever a friend of mine fell sick I would say to him: 'Call on Doctor Condiment! He is the most divinely gifted physician in these parts.'

"When old John Bonehead fell sick he was going to send for one of the old established doctors, but I labored with him and exhausted all my eloquence to get him to send for you. Now, I ask you, as man to man, did he send for you on my recommendation or did he not?"

"He certainly did, and I've always felt that it was a low trick on your part. Here I was a stranger in a strange land, a young physician trying to establish a practice, and you unloaded that old deadbeat on me and nearly broke me up in business! I treated him for six months and as soon as he was able to move he jumped the town and I haven't had a cent from him to this day."

"That's your idea of gratitude, sir, is it? When I go forth to the hedges and highways to find patients for you, you think I should be responsible for the bills they run up! I suppose you have forgotten who called you up when old Mrs. Toplofty fell sick. Just as soon as I heard of her illness I nearly foundered myself rushing to a telephone to notify you, knowing that you needed patients. I suppose you have forgotten that kindness?"

"No, I have not forgotten, major, and if it hadn't been for your gray hairs I'd have shown my appreciation with a wet elm club. I was just getting a footing in some of the wealthy homes of the town then. There was a mild epidemic of measles, and I was quite busy and the outlook was encouraging. Then you sent me your confounded telephone message, and I rushed down to see Mrs. Toplofty, and found that she had the smallpox! When my wealthy patrons learned that I was treating a smallpox patient they closed their doors to me. That experience set me back two years, and now you have the nerve to come here reminding me of it!"

"Well, of all the shameless ingratitude that ever defaced the annals of our glorious country this is the worst! This is the reward a man gets for helping the poor and needy, for straining his hind legs rustling around trying to do good! A man may shed blood and sever his heart-strings trying to aid struggling young men, and after years they turn and rend him!

"Well, you can go to thunder with your medical association. I don't suppose you could tell an attack of glanders from a lunar eclipse, anyhow, and so your diagnosis wouldn't be worth a cent. If I had a sick cow I wouldn't let you prescribe for her. The undertaker was telling me only yesterday that he'll have to buy an extra hearse if you stay here. So I bid you good morning."

To Make Advertising Pay.

"Use good bait, fresh bait, and patience," is the advice Izaak Walton years ago gave to fishermen, and fishing after all is what men engage in—fishing for business. Have for bait good live copy; fresh, up-to-date "set up" and patiently fish in one pool. You never heard of a successful angler who rushes first to one pool and then to another. Get the best pool known by experience to contain the fish, and lure him on by offering the best bait in your kit. Fishing and advertising are alike.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Have Confidence in Fellow-Men.

He who is suspicious not only does injustice to others but injures himself. It is our duty to regard others as being good until they prove themselves to be the contrary. According to this principle I have always treated everybody with whom I have had to deal. Of course, one will have some unpleasant experiences, but one must not be discouraged. One must always approach life and humanity with renewed confidence.—Emperor William of Germany.

Old friends are best.

SEVEN YEARS OF MISERY

How Mrs. Bethune was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Sikeston, Mo. — "For seven years I suffered everything. I was in bed for four or five days at a time every month, and so weak I could hardly walk. I had cramps, backache and headache, and was so nervous and weak that I dreaded to see anyone or have anyone move in the room. The doctors gave me medicine to ease me at those times, and said that I ought to have an operation. I would not listen to that, and when a friend of my husband's told him about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it had done for his wife, I was willing to take it. Now I look the picture of health and feel like it, too. I can do all my own housework, work in the garden and entertain company and enjoy them, and can walk as far as any ordinary woman, any day in the week. I wish I could talk to every suffering woman and girl, and tell them what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."—Mrs. DEMA BETHUNE, Sikeston, Mo.

Remember, the remedy which did this was Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

It has helped thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing down feeling, indigestion, and nervous prostration, after all other means have failed. Why don't you try it?

NONOGENARIAN DEAD.

Rev. Nathaniel Merrill, Oldest Citizen of Wilbraham.

OLDEST MEMBER N. E. CONFERENCE.

Last of Distinguished Family, Well Known and Prominent in Work Of M. E. Church.

Rev. Nathaniel J. Merrill, the oldest citizen of Wilbraham and the oldest member of the New England Methodist conference, died Wednesday morning at his home in Wilbraham of old age at the advanced age of 95. Mr. Merrill's death was not expected; he had felt the summer heat somewhat but about the house and garden as usual only two days before his death. On Tuesday morning he was too weak to arise, and gradually lost strength until the end, which came about 5 o'clock.

Rev. Nathaniel J. Merrill was born in Lyman, N. H., August 25, 1817, the son of Joseph and Hannah Jewett Merrill. He was one of 10 children, six boys and four girls. His father, Rev. Joseph A. Merrill, was for 24 years presiding elder of the New England conference, and three of the sons took up their father's profession, two of the daughters marrying ministers also. Of the other sons, Annis Merrill, joined the "forty-niners" in the romantic dash across the continent for California gold, and was for many years a leader in the Pacific coast bar. Annis Merrill died only a few years ago, at the age of 95, retaining his physical and mental vigor to the last. Amos B. Merrill was another brother to take up the legal profession, and was a distinguished member of the Boston bar a generation ago. The ministers in the family, besides Nathaniel, were Rev. John Wesley Merrill, for many years dean of the Methodist theological seminary in Concord, N. H., now removed to Boston, and Rev. D. K. Merrill. Nathaniel Merrill was the last survivor of his distinguished family.

Rev. Mr. Merrill received his education at Wesleyan Academy, from which he was graduated in 1837, being at the time of his death the oldest living graduate of that institution. The autumn after his graduation he secured a position in the faculty of the Louisiana state college at Jackson, La. He remained in the South until 1841, having started and conducted for three years, in conjuction with his brother, Amos B. Merrill, the Merrill Academy in New Orleans. In 1839 he married his first wife, Miss Rose Phillips of New Orleans, who lived only a year. Shortly after her death, in 1841, he returned to New England and took up his divinity studies at the old Concord theological seminary.

Rev. Mr. Merrill was graduated from the theological seminary in 1843 and immediately joined the New England conference, of which he was a member until his death. The same year he married Miss Georgianna Pinkham of Lynn, who died only three years ago at the age of 85 years. The next 40 years were spent in active and continuous service in the Methodist ministry. Rev. Mr. Merrill held charges in Charlton, Dudley, Enfield, Feeding Hills, Waltham, Newburyport, Three Rivers, Westfield and Greenfield. His service also includes nearly a year's connection, from the time of the battle of Chickamauga, September, 1863, to the fall of Atlanta, July, 1864, with the army of the Cumberland as an assistant in the quartermaster's department under direct command of Capt. A. S. Flagg. His early experiences in the South had imbittered him against negro slavery, and, after years of service as secretary of the anti-slavery society of the New England conference, he was willing to put forth all the efforts of his frail body to help along the cause of the Union.

With health somewhat impaired by his camp experiences, Rev. Mr. Merrill returned from the war to settle for a time on a farm in Heath. Even then, however, he was generally to be found on Sundays supplying the pulpit in Charlemont, and, after a brief rest, he took up his pastoral work again, continuing in active service until 1882. At this time he removed to Wilbraham. During his 30-years' residence in that town he has held several positions on the faculty of Wesleyan academy, and had become one of the most popular supply preachers in the Methodist conference. He did not entirely give up his chosen occupation until a few years before his death.

Rev. Mr. Merrill is survived by three sons, Amos B., Nathaniel P. and Annis, all of Wilbraham, and two daughters, Mrs. F. H. Welch of Wilbraham and Mrs. Arthur P. Delabarre of Conway. The funeral was held in the Memorial Methodist church in Wilbraham this afternoon at 2 o'clock. Burial was in Woodland Dell cemetery in that town.

Bennett Family Reunion.

Large Number Hold 19th Gathering at Forest Lake Wednesday.

The Bennett family held its 19th annual reunion at Forest Lake Wednesday. A large number were present and the day was thoroughly enjoyed, in spite of the intense heat. Two deaths and one birth during the year were reported by Permanent Secretary L. G. Bennett of Springfield. The treasurer reported a balance in the treasury. A letter was read by George G. Bennett from Mrs. Mary Bennett Cooper of Kansas City, Mo., and it was voted to send the greetings of the members to Homer A. Bennett of Huntington, Ind., Mrs. Jennie Bennett Bond of Fort Wayne, Ind., and Mrs. Mary Bennett Cooper of Kansas City. At future reunions members not decorated with a badge will be fined 10 cents.

These officers were elected: President, Charles B. Bennett, Ludlow; vice president, G. H. B. Green, Belchertown; secretary and treasurer, Addie F. Bennett, Ludiow; executive committee, Mr. and Mrs. George G. Bennett, C. Ernest Bennett, Ludlow, Mr. and Mrs. Roy G. Shaw, Belchertown. It was voted that the second Wednesday in August be the date of the meeting each year.

The following were present: Mrs. Lora Hawley, Mrs. Anna S. Fuller, Misses Nellie Fuller, Mildred Fuller, Gertrude Atchinson, Helen Atchinson, North Wilbraham; Mrs. Nellie Merrill, New York; Fred Graves, Southampton; Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Shaw, G. H. B. Green, Mrs. Pearl Green, Bartlett Green, Mrs. D. K. Shumway, Mrs. Iva White, Belchertown; Mrs. Loretta Adams, Lybie Adams, Mrs. Esther Adams, Miss Fannie E. Adams, Worcester; Dr. and Mrs. A. L. Bennett, Mrs. Charles Bowles, Harlon Bowles, Mr. and Mrs. Archer C. Bennett, Miss Addie F. Bennett, C. Ernest Bennett, Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Bennett, Mr. and Mrs. George G. Bennett, Miss Alberta McCaig, Misses Mildred and Dorothy Bennett, Frederick Bennett, Mr. and Mrs. Merton R. Bennett, Ralph Bennett, Ludlow; Mr. and Mrs. Pearl Knight, Miss Dorothy Knight, Athol; Miss Lena M. Burfee, Easthampton; Albert Nichols, Chesterfield; Mrs. L. W. Dunbar, Holyoke; Mr. and Mrs. Lewis G. Bennett, Springfield; Mr. and Mrs. Richard F. Underwood, Mt. Tom; Mr. and Mrs. David M. Olds, Miss Emma Allen, Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Olds, Leslie M. Olds, Miss Gertrude E. Olds, Granby; Mr. and Mrs. M. D. Olds, Misses Ethel Olds, Myrtle Olds, Gladys Olds and Leland Olds, Ware; Misses Edith S. Morris, Mabel M. Morris, New York; Miss Luella May Doolittle, Belchertown.

Brown Family Reunion.

Descendants of Dea. Dauphin Brown Meet in Brimfield.

The descendants of Dea. Dauphin Brown of Brimfield held their annual reunion Wednesday at the home of his son, Edward B. Brown, in that town. Those present, who included family connections as well as direct descendants of Dea. Brown, were Mr. and Mrs. Edward B. Brown and Miss Emma Brown of Brimfield; Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Bliss and Charles J. Bliss of Warren; Miss Alice Brown of Palmer; Dauphin Brown, Miss Mildred and Howard Brown of Dalton; Mrs. Warren S. Whitcomb and Miss Myra Whitcomb of Amherst and Miss Eunice Best of Holyoke; Rev. and Mrs. Edward C. Winslow and Miss Ruby Winslow of Sunderland; Mrs. W. H. Hall and Miss Esther Hall of Providence, R. I.; Mr. and Mrs. Frederick R. Sistaire and Willard Donald, Roger and Reginald Sistaire of Springfield; Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Peirce and Ronald Pierce of Springfield; Miss S. J. Ruggles of Framingham.

Dea. Dauphin Brown was of the third generation in the line of descent from Jonathan Brown, who moved from Salem or Beverly to Brimfield about 1739, and who married Abigail Russell in 1741. He lived on Tower Hill, where now is the residence of Frank H. Coolbroth, and built the whole or a part of the house now standing. He was a pioneer "housewright and joiner" in Brimfield, and was also a leader in the events preceding the Revolution, as well as a Minute Man, responding to the Lexington alarm. He had been sergeant in the French and Indian war, his name appearing on the muster roll of the company in his majesty's service under the command of Capt. Daniel Burt, from March 30, 1775, to January 3, 1776. He was a member of the committee of correspondence in the preliminary movements of the struggle for independence, and though well advanced in years when the Revolution broke out held the commission of lieutenant. He had 11 children, and his descendants have been prominent in the affairs of Brimfield and leading citizens in various parts of the country.

WAITING ROOM CHANGE?

Rumor That It Will Go to Holbrook's New Block.

ON OPPOSITE SIDE OF MAIN STREET.

Opposition to Changes, Arguments in Favor. Contract For New Block Not Yet Let.

A. W. Holbrook is about ready to award the contract for the construction of his new block on Main street, and it is expected that work will be started early next week; the block is to be ready for occupancy October 15. The buildings now on the ground, the former office of the Palmer Journal and the Palmer garage, are to be removed.

The new building will contain four stores, two of which will be 19 feet wide, one 17 feet and one 11. It is persistently rumored that the street railway waiting room will be moved to the new block, but neither Mr. Holbrook nor Superintendent Atkins of the street railway will confirm the report. At the same time, such a move would not be surprising in view of all that has been said and done concerning it. Some time ago the matter of better facilities in and about the waiting room was taken up by the Palmer Business and Social club. A conference was held with the street railway officials, and after hearing statements as to the cramped quarters, poor ventilation and general uncleanliness, they replied that there was no other place available which was conveniently located. Mr. Holbrook, in discussing the earlier plan which he had to build a larger block on the property, but which fell through, has frequently stated that if he could secure the street railway as a tenant he would build. He is now building, and the natural inference is that he has made such arrangement. Mr. Holbrook says that he has had numerous applications for his stores, but that he is keeping all for future consideration.

There is naturally some objection to the removal of the waiting room to the opposite side of the street from its present location, principally from the merchants doing business near it, on the ground that it will take trade away from them. An effort was made Wednesday to start a petition of remonstrance, but so far it has not materialized. On the other hand, there are many who think the removal would do much toward relieving the congestion on the walk in front of the present room at all times of the day when electric cars are coming in, but particularly in the evening, when pedestrians find it hard work to get through the crowds gathered and waiting for the cars.

Carnegie Medal for Ware Man.

Risked His Life in Vain Attempt to Save Two Children From Drowning.

Cornelius Fitzgerald, engineer of the pumping station at Ware, received last Friday the Carnegie medal which was awarded him recently. Mr. Fitzgerald risked his life January 1 in a vain attempt to save children from drowning. The medal is about four inches in diameter, and of bronze. On one side is a bas relief likeness of Andrew Carnegie, the giver, and the inscription, "Carnegie hero fund, established April 15, 1904;" on the other is "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends," and in the center are the words, "Awarded to Cornelius Fitzgerald, who attempted to save Alfred Legault and Gladys Bouchard from drowning, Ware, Mass., January 1, 1912."

The two children, 12 and 14 years old, broke through the ice near the pumping station while skating. Mr. Fitzgerald went to their aid with a rope, but they were unable to grasp it. In an effort to get nearer them he ventured too far out on the thin ice and it broke under him, letting him into the water with the children. He attempted to throw them onto the ice but it kept breaking and they finally sank. When help reached Fitzgerald he was nearly exhausted and in a serious condition.

Cheap Excursion to Montreal.

The Central Vermont railroad announces a low-rate excursion to Montreal and return, the round-trip rate being only $8. Tickets will be for sale next Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, and will be good going only on those days. Returning they will be good until September 6. Through coaches and sleeping cars are run to Montreal, making the trip a desirable one.

HEAT CLAIMS VICTIM.

Man Driven Insane by Intense Heat Wednesday.

DIES ON WAY TO PHYSICIAN'S CARE.

Employed at Wire Mill; Attacked Suddenly In Middle of Afternoon While at Work.

Michael Zabek, 29, an employe of the Wright Wire company at the No. 2 mill, was made crazy by the excessive heat of Wednesday, and expired just as he reached medical assistance at the office of Dr. S. R. Carsley at 6 o'clock. He leaves a widow in Holyoke. The body was taken yesterday to Adams, where he has relatives, for burial.

Zabek has been living in Three Rivers, and went to work in the wire mill Wednesday. About 3.30 in the afternoon he suddenly ceased work, seized his coat and hat and left the mill on a run. Later he was noticed running back and forth on the railroad tracks between the mill and the Burleigh crossing. His actions were so peculiar that a telephone call for Officer Crimmins was sent from the home of Charles A. Burgess at the Burleigh crossing. The officer found Zabek lying unconscious on the railroad embankment and started with him for the village. Arriving at Dr. Carsley's on North Main street Zabek was laid on the grass on the lawn, expiring as this was done. The body was removed to Phillips' undertaking rooms, where it was viewed by Medical Examiner Jacob P. Schneider. He gave a verdict of death from heat prostration.

Four Accidents in Ware.

Kicked by Horse, Upset by Auto, Spike in Foot and Thumb in Trap.

Miss Fannie Michaelman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Morris Michaelman of Eddy street, was kicked by a horse while carriage riding near the Swift River hotel in Enfield Sunday night, and received a bad cut about two inches long on her right knee. The horse was frightened by an auto, it is said, and kicked through the dashboard. Miss Michaelman was taken to Ware and the injury dressed by Dr. F. A. Spencer.

H. E. Giles, foreman of the Boston and Albany's telegraph repair gang, received a painful hurt Monday morning near the Gibbs crossing by running a lineman's spike through his right foot. A motor handcar is used to carry the gang to work, and Mr. Giles received his hurt while running beside the machine to start it. At the passenger station he received temporary aid from Dr. W. W. Miner, after which he was taken to Dr. Miner's office and the wound dressed. Later in the day Mr. Giles went to his boarding place in Springfield.

An auto owned and operated by Walter B. Eddy of Eddy street collided with a carriage driven by J. E. Shea Sunday afternoon on the Palmer road. The occupants of the carriage were thrown out but were not seriously hurt; the carriage was badly smashed. Both vehicles were going toward Ware, when Mr. Eddy attempted to pass the carriage, the wheel of the auto catching in the front wheel of the carriage.

Stanislaus Wordekiz, 13 years old, while trapping woodchucks Monday morning, got his left thumb caught in the jaws of a steel trap. The lad was unable to open the trap and was obliged to travel a mile before he could get assistance; in the meantime the trap had cut through the flesh to the bone. Dr. L. E. Dionne attended him.

Addition to Electric Plant.

New Generator Being Installed by Central Mass. Electric Co.

The Central Massachusetts Electric company has arranged to install in its plant at Blanchardville a new 1300-horse power electric turbo-generator, which will make the station capable of producing about 4000-horse power, or nearly as much electrical energy as is required by the city of Lynn. The installation of the new machine will be completed and it will be put in operation within six weeks. When in working order it is expected to do away entirely with such interruptions in the power as have occurred in the past few weeks, for these have been due to the antiquated condition of the old machines, which are to be replaced by the new generator. This machine, together with the new water wheels now being installed, and the other improvements being made and to be made, will make the Palmer station one of the best in this part of the state.

Sporting News.

BONDSVILLE 4—INDIAN ORCHARD 3.

Fifteen Innings Required to Settle Exciting Contest.

Saturday being an open date in the Palmer Town League series, Bondsville put in the afternoon trying conclusions with the strong Indian Orchard team and came home victorious, 4-3, though it took 15 innings to do the trick. Bennett for Bondsville fanned 23 men, while Stratton for the Orchards foiled 18. It was a pitcher's game principally, but the Orchards contributed seven errors, which were the real cause of the game going against them.

There were no runs until the Orchards half of the fifth, when they got a man over the plate, the only run of the game which was unassisted by errors. Bondsville got two in the sixth and Indian Orchard one in the eighth, tying the score; both added one in the twelfth. Bondsville was first to bat in the fifteenth. Donovan and Fitzgerald were easily put away, and then Mousett drew a base on balls, the only one handed out by Stratton during the game. An easy grounder of Sullivan's to short was fumbled by Young, although he had plenty of time to get either man, and both men were safe. Belisle, the next man up, landed a double and Mousett came across with the run. Senior was out—a fly to Young—and the side was out. For Indian Orchard Bassilion, the first man up, got first on Fitzgerald's fumble of his grounder, and went to second on Grise's sacrifice. Stratton struck out, although he had made three hits earlier in the game, and M. Lynch followed his example. The score:

Thorndike S. M. T. A's. Win.

The Thorndike S. M. T. A. team "didn't do a thing" to the Gilbertville Juniors at Gilbertville Saturday; the score was 13 (who says that's an unlucky number?) to 8. The Thorndike pitcher, Fountaine, held his opponents down to nothing until the eighth, when they touched him up freely and took a lot of chances on bases, scoring five runs. The score:

In the Palmer Town League tomorrow, Palmer will play Thorndike on the Palmer grounds. Bondsville and Three Rivers will play at Three Rivers.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Raymond have returned from a visit in Providence, R. I., and Boston.

Mrs. John F. Baldwin, Miss Mary Baldwin and Miss Annie Madden have returned from a two-weeks' stay at Block Island.

Miss Effie Morgan has resigned her position as principal of the grammar school on account of the illness of her mother, Mrs. Frank Morgan.

Mrs. Charles Calkins has gone to visit her son, John Calkins, in Yonkers, N. Y., and her daughter, Mrs. Edith Lyman, in Syracuse, N. Y.

Mrs. Consigney was pleasantly surprised at her home one evening recently by a number of her neighbors and friends who called to celebrate her 52d birthday. She was presented with a handsome writing desk, Mr. Reed making the presentation speech. Refreshments were served.

DR. MOORE WITHDRAWS.

Not to be Democratic Candidate For Representative.

ANNOUNCEMENT MADE LAST EVENING.

No Reason Given. Nomination Will Now Go to Richard S. Hughes of Monson.

Announcement was made last evening that Dr. George A. Moore of Palmer, who had been announced as the candidate of the Democratic party for the representative nomination in the First Hampden district, had declined to allow the use of his name. Dr. Moore is on his vacation in Maine and could not be reached, so no reason is given for his decision, though the district committee is authority for the statement. The committee announced, when Dr. Moore's name was first mentioned, that it had his full consent and that he would surely make the running.

With the announcement of the withdrawal of Dr. Moore's name comes the statement that the candidate will be Richard S. Hughes of Monson. Mr. Hughes is a native of the town and has spent his entire life there. He has for a number of years conducted a successful shoe business and has very many friends, not only in his own town but throughout the district. He will make a strong candidate.

Local Peach Crop is Nil.

Wilbraham Growers Have Very Few. Big Crops Elsewhere.

The famous Wilbraham Mountain peaches will be conspicuous by their scarcity this year. The crop is said to be about one-tenth the usual yield. Instead of 30,000 baskets, which were picked last year, not more than 3000 will be secured this season. The trouble is not alone in Wilbraham, but all through the Connecticut valley. A winter of exceptional cold, a spring of drenching rains and the drought which followed, are the causes for the shortage. A few orchards on the top of the mountain are said to be in fairly good condition, but as a whole the crop will be small and poor.

In marked contrast to the condition here is that in almost every other peach-raising section of the country. There unusually large crops are reported. The South has taken up peach raising and quantities are coming in from Georgia, Virginia and Maryland; Delaware and New Jersey have big yields, and Arkansas and California fruit is very much in evidence. The prospect is that the fruit will be of unusually fine quality, plenty in quantity and low in price.

BELCHERTOWN.

Death of Arthur S. Bridgman.

Arthur Stanley Bridgman, 25, son of Mrs. Arthur Bridgman, died Tuesday at Fort Leavenworth, Kan. He was a member of Co. I, 7th U. S. infantry, having enlisted about a year ago, and died in the hospital. The body was brought to Belchertown yesterday for burial. He leaves a brother, Herbert, connected with the Union Trust company of Springfield, two sisters, Mrs. Edward Church of Connecticut, and Miss Marion and a younger brother at home.

The latest automobile owner is Herbert F. Starr, who is driving a Metz car.

The board of registrars will meet tomorrow from 3 to 5 in the office of the selectmen.

Tax Collector Charles S. Tarbell is sending out the tax bills. The rate is $11.25 on $1000.

An exhibit table has been placed in the "Blaze of Peace" tea rooms by the Arts and Crafts society.

Miss Marion S. Taylor of Springfield has been a guest of Mr. and Mrs. Gurdon Gordon this week.

Mrs. M. D. S. Longley has returned to her home on South Main street after an outing at Cliff Island, Me.

Charles L. Randall, superintendent of schools in Holden, has returned after a visit of two weeks with relatives here.

Rev. E. O. Hawley, a retired missionary from China, will occupy the pulpit of the Congregational church Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Brown of Chicago, former residents of Brimfield, have been guests this week of Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Booth.

W. M. Ayers of Turkey Hill attended the reunion of the 31st regiment last week, being the only survivor of that regiment in Belchertown.

Rev. H. H. Morrill of Springfield will officiate in the Episcopal mission Sunday. There will be baptism and communion. Sunday school will be at 10 and morning service at 10.45.

BURNING DAYLIGHT

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—Elam Harnish, known all through Alaska as "Burning Daylight," celebrates his 30th birthday with a friendly crowd of miners at the Circle City Tivoli. He is a general favorite, a hero and a pioneer in the new gold fields. The dance leads to heavy gambling in which over $100,000 is staked. Harnish loses his money and his mine but wins the mail contract of the district.

CHAPTER II.—Burning Daylight starts on his trip to deliver the mail with dogs and sledge. He tells his friends that the big Yukon gold strike will soon be on and he intends to be in it at the start. With Indian attendants and dogs he dips over the bank and down the frozen Yukon and in the gray light is gone.

CHAPTER III.—Harnish makes a sensationally rapid run across country with the mail, appears at the Tivoli and there is another characteristic celebration. He has made a record against cold and exhaustion and is now ready to join his friends in a dash to the new gold fields.

CHAPTER IV.—Harnish decides where the gold will be found in the up-river district and buys two tons of flour, which he declares will be worth its weight in gold before the season is over.

CHAPTER V.—When Daylight arrives with his heavy outfit of flour he finds the big flat desolate. A comrade discovers gold and Harnish reaps a rich harvest. He goes to Dawson, begins investing in corner lots and staking other miners and becomes the most prominent figure in the Klondike.

CHAPTER VI.—Harnish makes fortune after fortune. One lucky investment enables him to defeat a great combination of capitalists in a vast mining deal. He determines to return to civilization and gives a farewell celebration to his friends that is remembered as a kind of blaze of glory.

CHAPTER VII.—The papers are full of "The King of the Klondike," and Daylight is feted by the money magnates of the country. They take him into a big copper deal and the Alaskan pioneer finds himself amid the bewildering complications of high finance.

CHAPTER VIII.—Daylight is buncoed by the moneyed men and finds that he has been led to invest his eleven millions in a manipulated scheme. He goes to meet his disloyal business partners at their offices in New York City.

CHAPTER IX.

Nathaniel Letton was talking when the door opened; he ceased, and with his two companions gazed with controlled perturbation at Burning Daylight striding into the room. The free, swinging movements of the trail-traveler were unconsciously exaggerated in that stride of his. In truth, it seemed to him that he felt the trail beneath his feet.

"Howdy, gentlemen, howdy," he remarked, ignoring the unnatural calm with which they greeted his entrance. He shook hands with them in turn, striding from one to another and gripping their hands so heartily that Nathaniel Letton could not forbear to wince. Daylight flung himself into a massive chair and sprawled lazily, with an appearance of fatigue. The leather grip he had brought into the room he dropped carelessly beside him on the floor.

"I've sure been going some," he sighed. "We sure trimmed them beautifully. It was real slick. And the beauty of the play never dawned on me till the very end. It was pure and simple knock down and drag out. And the way they fell for it was amazin'."

Letton made a dry sound in his throat. Dowsett sat quietly and waited, while Leon Guggenhammer struggled into articulation.

"You certainly have raised Cain," he said.

Daylight's black eyes flashed in a pleasant way.

"Didn't I, though!" he proclaimed, jubilantly. "And didn't we fool 'em! I was teetotally surprised. I never dreamed they would be that easy.

"And now," he went on, not permitting the pause to grow awkward, "we-all might as well have an accounting. I'm pullin' West this afternoon on that blamed Twentieth Century." He tugged at his grip, got it open, and dipped into it with both his hands. "But don't forget, boys, when you-all want me to hornswoggle Wall Street another flutter, all you-all have to do is whisper the word. I'll sure be right there with the goods."

His hands emerged, clutching a great mass of stubs, check-books, and brokers' receipts. These he deposited in a heap on the big table, and dipping again, he fished out the stragglers and added them to the pile. He consulted a slip of paper, drawn from his coat pocket and read aloud:

"Ten million twenty-seven thousand and forty-two dollars and sixty-eight cents is my figurin' on my expense. Of course that-all's taken from the winnings before we-all get to figurin' on the whack-up. Where's your figures? It must a' been a mighty big clean-up."

The three men looked their bepuzzlement at one another. The man was a bigger fool than they had imagined, or else he was playing a game which they could not divine.

Nathaniel Letton moistened his lips and spoke up.

"It will take some hours yet, Mr. Harnish, before the full accounting can be made. Mr. Howison is at work upon it now. We—ah—as you say, it has been a gratifying clean-up. Suppose we have lunch together and talk it over. I'll have the clerks work through the noon hour so that you will have ample time to catch your train."

Dowsett and Guggenhammer manifested a relief that was almost obvious. The situation was clearing. It was disconcerting, under the circumstances, to be pent in the same room with this heavy-muscled, Indian-like man whom they had robbed. They remembered unpleasantly the many stories of his strength and recklessness. If Letton could only put him off long enough for them to escape into the policed world outside the office door, all would be well; and Daylight showed all the signs of being put off.

"I'm real glad to hear that," he said. "I don't want to miss that train, and you-all have done me proud, gentlemen, letting me in on this deal. I just do appreciate it without being able to express my feelings. But I am sure almighty curious, and I'd like terrible to know, Mr. Letton, what your figures of our winning is. Can you-all give me a rough estimate?"

Nathaniel Letton did not look appealingly at his two friends, but in the brief pause they felt that appeal pass out from him. Dowsett, of sterner mold than the others, began to divine that the Klondiker was playing. But the other two were still under the blandishment of his child-like innocence.

"It is extremely—er—difficult," Leon Guggenhammer began. "You see, Ward Valley has fluctuated so, er—"

"That no estimate can possibly be made in advance," Letton supplemented.

"Approximate it, approximate it," Daylight counselled, cheerfully. "It don't hurt if you-all are a million out one side or the other. The figures'll straighten that up. But I'm that curious I'm just itching all over. What d'ye say?"

"Why continue to play at cross purposes?" Dowsett demanded abruptly and coldly. "Let us have the explanation here and now. Mr. Harnish is laboring under a false impression, and he should be set straight.

By this time Letton was stiffened by the attitude Dowsett had taken, and his answer was prompt and definite.

"I fear you are under a misapprehension, Mr. Harnish. There are no winnings to be divided with you. Now don't get excited, I beg of you. I have but to press this button . . ."

Far from excited, Daylight had all the seeming of being stunned. He looked at Dowsett and murmured:

"It was your deal, all right, and you-all dole them right, too. Well, I ain't kicking I'm like the player in that poker game. It was your deal, and you-all had a right to do your best. And you done it—cleaned me out slicker'n a whistle."

He gazed at the heap on the table with an air of stupefaction.

"And that-all ain't worth the paper it's written on. Gol dast it, you-all can sure deal 'em 'round when you get a chance. Oh, no, I ain't a-kicking. It was your deal, and you-all certainly done me, and a man ain't half a man that squeals on another man's deal. And now the hand is played out, and the cards are on the table, and the deal's over, but . . ."

His hand, dipping swiftly into his inside breast pocket, appeared with the big Colt's automatic.

"As I was saying, the old deal's finished. Now it's my deal, and I'm a-going to see if I can hold them four aces—

"Take your hand away, you whited sepulchre!" he cried sharply.

Nathaniel Letton's hand, creeping toward the push-button on the desk, was abruptly arrested.

"Change cars," Daylight commanded. "Take that chair over there, you gangrene-livered skunk. Jump, or I'll make you leak till folks'll think your father was a water hydrant and your mother a sprinkling-cart. You-all move your chair alongside, Guggenhammer; and you-all Dowsett, sit right there, while I just irrelevantly explain the virtues of this here automatic. She's loaded for big game and she goes off eight times. She's a sure hummer when she gets started.

"Preliminary remarks being over, I now proceed to deal. Remember, I ain't making no remarks about your

"Now It's My Deal, and I'm Going to See if I Can Hold Them Four Aces."

deal. You done your darndest, and it was all right. But this is my deal, and it's up to me to do my darndest. In the first place, you-all know me. I'm Burning Daylight—savvee? Ain't afraid of God, devil, death, nor destruction. Them's my four aces, and they sure copper your bets. Look at that there living skeleton. Letton, you're sure afraid to die. Your bones is all rattling together you're that scared. And look at that fat Jew there. This little weapon's sure put the fear of God in his heart. He's yellow as a sick persimmon. Dowsett, you're a cool one. You-all ain't batted an eye nor turned a hair. That's because you're great on arithmetic. And that makes you-all dead easy in this deal of mine. You're sitting there and adding two and two together, and you-all know I sure got you skinned. You know me, and that I ain't afraid of nothing. And you-all adds up all your money and knows you ain't a-going to die if you can help it."

"I'll see you hanged," was Dowsett's retort.

"Not by a damned sight. When the fun starts, you're the first I plug. I'll hang all right, but you-all won't live to see it. You-all die here and now while I'll die subject to the law's delay—savvee? Being dead, with grass growing out of your carcasses, you won't know when I hang, but I'll sure have the pleasure a long time of knowing you-all beat me to it."

"You surely won't kill us?" Letton asked in a queer, thin voice.

Daylight shook his head.

"It's sure too expensive. You-all ain't worth it. I'd sooner have my chips back. And I guess you-all 'd sooner give my chips back than go to the dead-house."

A long silence followed.

"Well, I've done dealt. It's up to you-all to play. But while you're deliberating, I want to give you-all warning: if that door opens and any one of you cusses lets on there's anything unusual, right here and then I sure start plugging. They ain't a soul 'll get out of the room except feet first."

A long session of three hours followed. The deciding factor was not the big automatic pistol, but the certitude that Daylight would use it. Not alone were the three men convinced of this, but Daylight himself was convinced. He was firmly resolved to kill the men if his money was not forthcoming. It was not an easy matter, on the spur of the moment, to raise ten millions in paper currency, and there were vexatious delays. A dozen times Mr. Howison and the head clerk were summoned into the room. On these occasions the pistol lay on Daylight's lap covered carelessly by a newspaper, while he was usually engaged in rolling or lighting his brown-paper cigarette. But in the end, the thing was accomplished. A suit-case was brought up by one of the clerks from the waiting motor-car, and Daylight snapped it shut on the last package of bills. He paused at the door to make his final remarks.

"There's three several things I sure want to tell you-all. When I get outside this door, you-all'll be set free to act, and I just want to warn you-all about what to do. In the first place, no warrants for my arrest—savvee? This money's mine, and I ain't robbed you of it. If it gets out how you gave me the double cross and how I done you back again, the laugh 'll be on you, and it'll be sure an almighty big laugh. You-all can't afford that laugh. Besides, having got back my stake that you-all robbed me of, if you arrest me and try to rob me a second time I'll go gunning for you-all and I'll sure get you. No little fraid cat shrimps like you-all can skin Burning Daylight. If you win you lose, and there'll sure be some several unexpected funerals around this burg. Just look me in the eye, and you-all'll savvee I mean business. Them stubs and receipts on the table is all yourn Good day."

As the door shut behind him, Nathaniel Letton sprang for the telephone, and Dowsett intercepted him.

"What are you going to do?" Dowsett demanded.

"The police. It's downright robbery I won't stand it. I tell you I won't stand it."

Dowsett smiled grimly, but at the same time bore the slender financier back and down into his chair.

"We'll talk it over," he said; and in Leon Guggenhammer he found an anxious ally.

And nothing ever came of it. The thing remained a secret with the three men. Nor did Daylight ever give the secret away, though that afternoon, leaning back in his stateroom on the Twentieth Century, his shoes off, and feet on a chair, he chuckled long and heartily. New York remained forever puzzled over the affair; nor could it hit upon a rational explanation. By all rights, Burning Daylight should have gone broke, yet it was known that he immediately reappeared in San Francisco possessing an apparently unimpaired capital. This was evidenced by the magnitude of the enterprises he engaged in, such as, for instance, Panama Mail, by sheer weight of money and fighting power wrestling the control away from Shefftly and selling out in two months to the Harriman interests at a rumored enormous advance.

CHAPTER X.

Back in San Francisco, Daylight quickly added to his reputation. In ways it was not an enviable reputation. Men were afraid of him. He became known as a fighter, a fiend, a tiger. His play was a ripping and smashing one, and no one knew where or how his next blow would fall. The element of surprise was large. He balked on the unexpected, and, fresh from the wild North, his mind not operating in stereotyped channels, he was able in unusual degree to devise new tricks and stratagems. And once he won the advantage, he pressed it remorselessly. "As relentless as a Red Indian," was said of him, and it was said truly.

He was a free lance, and had no friendly business associations Such alliances as were formed from time to time were purely affairs of expediency, and he regarded his allies as men who would give him the double-cross or ruin him if a profitable chance presented. In spite of this point of view, he was faithful to his allies. But he was faithful just as long as they were and no longer The treason had to come from them, and then it was 'Ware Daylight.

The business men and financiers of the Pacific coast never forgot the lesson of Charles Klinkner and the California & Altamont Trust Company Klinkner was the president. In partnership with Daylight, the pair raided the San Jose Interurban. The powerful Lake Power & Electric Lighting corporation came to the rescue, and Klinkner, seeing what he thought was the opportunity, went over to the enemy in the thick of the pitched battle Daylight lost three millions before he was done with it, and before he was done with it he saw the California & Altamont Trust Company hopelessly wrecked, and Charles Klinkner a suiside in a felon's cell.

So it was that Daylight became a successful financier. He did not go in for swindling the workers. Not only did he not have the heart for it, but it did not strike him as a sporting proposition. The workers were so easy, so stupid. It was more like slaughtering fat, hand-reared pheasants on the English preserves he had read about. The sport, to him, was in waylaying the successful robbers and taking their spoils from them The grim Yukon life had failed to make Daylight hard. It required civilization to produce this result. In the fierce, savage game he now played, his habitual geniality imperceptibly slipped away from him, as did his lazy Western drawl.

He still had recrudescences of geniality, but they were largely periodical and forced, and they were usually due to the cocktails he took prior to mealtime. In the North he had drunk deeply and at irregular intervals; but now his drinking became systematic and disciplined. It was an unconscious development, but it was based upon physical and mental conditions. The cocktails served as an inhibition. Without reasoning or thinking about it, the strain of the office, which was essentially due to the daring and audacity of his ventures, required check or cessation; and he found, through the weeks and months, that the cocktails supplied this very thing. They constituted a stone wall. He never drank during the morning, nor in office hours; but the instant he left the office he proceeded to rear this wall of alcoholic inhibition athwart his consciousness. The office became immediately a closed affair. It ceased to exist. In the afternoon, after lunch, it lived again for one or two hours, when, leaving it, he rebuilt the wall of inhibition. Of course, there were exceptions to this; and, such was the rigor of his discipline, that if he had a dinner or a conference before him in which, in a business way, he encountered enemies or allies and planned or prosecuted campaigns, he abstained from drinking. But the instant the business was settled, his everlasting call went out for a Martini, and for a double-Martini at that, in a long glass so as not to ex[illegible] comment.

BURNING DAYLIGHT.

Into Daylight's life came Dede Mason. She came rather imperceptibly. He had accepted her impersonally along with the office furnishing, the office boy, Morrison, the chief, confidential, and only clerk, and all the rest of the accessories of a superman's gambling place of business. Had he been asked any time during the first months she was in his employ, he would have been unable to tell the color of her eyes. From the fact that she was a demi-blonde, there resided dimly in his subconsciousness a conception that she was a brunette Likewise he had an idea that she was not thin, while there was an absence in his mind of any idea that she was fat. And how she dressed, he had no idea at all. He had no trained eye in such matters, nor was he interested. He took it for granted, in the lack of any impression to the contrary, that she was dressed somehow. He knew her as "Miss Mason," and that was all, though he was aware that as a stenographer she was quick and accurate. He watched her leaving one afternoon, and was aware for the first time that she was well-formed, and that her manner of dress was satisfying. He knew none of the details of woman's dress, and he saw none of the details of her neat shirt waist and well-cut tailor suit. He saw only the effect in a general, sketchy way She looked right. This was in the absence of anything wrong or out of the way.

"She's a trim little good-looker," was his verdict, when the outer office door closed on her.

The next morning, dictating, he concluded that he liked the way she did her hair, though for the life of him he could have given no description of it. The impression was pleasing, that was all. She sat between him and the window, and he noted that her hair was light brown, with hints of golden bronze. A pale sun, shining in touched the golden bronze into smouldering fires that were very pleasing He discovered that in the intervals when she had nothing to do, she read books and magazines, or worked on some sort of feminine fancy work Passing her desk, once, he picked up a volume of Kipling's poems and glanced bepuzzled through the pages.

"You like reading, Miss Mason?" he said, laying the book down.

"Oh, yes," was the answer; "very much."

Another time it was a book of Wells', "The Wheels of Chance."

"What's it all about?" Daylight asked.

"Oh, it's just a novel, a love-story."

She stopped, but he still stood waiting, and she felt it incumbent to go on

"It's about a little Cockney draper's assistant, who takes a vacation on his bicycle, and falls in with a young girl very much above him. Her mother is a popular writer and all that And the situation is very curious, and sad, too, and tragic. Would you care to read it?"

"Does he get her?" Daylight demanded.

"No; that's the point of it. He wasn't—"

"And he doesn't get her, and you've read all them pages, hundreds of them to find that out?" Daylight muttered in amazement.

Miss Mason was nettled as well as amused.

"But you read the mining and financial news by the hour," she retorted.

"But I sure get something out of that. It's business, and it's differ

The Cocktails Served as an Inhibition

ent. I get money out of it. What do you get out of books?"

"Points of view, new ideas, life."

"Not worth a cent cash."

"But life's worth more than cash," she argued.

"Oh, well," he said, with easy masculine tolerance, "so long as you enjoy it. That's what counts, I suppose; and there's no accounting for taste."

Despite his own superior point of view, he had an idea that she knew a lot, and he experienced a fleeting feeling like that of a barbarian face to face with the evidence of some tremendous culture. To Daylight culture was a worthless thing, and yet somehow, he was vaguely troubled by a sense that there was more in culture than he imagined.

Again, on her desk, in passing, he noticed a book with which he was familiar. This time he did not stop, for he had recognized the cover. It was a magazine correspondent's book on the Klondike, and he knew that he and his photograph figured in it, and he knew, also, of a certain sensational chapter concerned with a woman's suicide, and with one "To Much Daylight." After that he did not talk with her again about books. He imagined what erroneous conclusions she had drawn from that particular chapter, and it stung him the more in that they were undeserved. He pumped Morrison, the clerk, who had first to vent his personal grievance against Miss Mason before he could tell what little he knew of her.

"She comes from Siskiyou County. She's very nice to work with in the office, of course, but she's rather stuck on herself—exclusive, you know."

"How do you make that out?" Daylight queried.

"Well, she thinks too much of herself to associate with those she works with, in the office here, for instance. She won't have anything to do with a fellow, you see. I've asked her out repeatedly, to the theater and the chutes and such things. But nothing doing. Says she likes plenty of sleep, and can't stay up late, and has to go all the way to Berkeley—that's where she lives. But that's all hot air. She's running with the University boys, that's what she's doing. She needs lots of sleep, and can't go to the theater with me, but she can dance all hours with them. I've heard it pretty straight that she goes to all their hops and such things. Rather stylish and high-toned for a stenographer, I'd say. And she keeps a horse, too. She rides astride all over those hills out there. I saw her one Sunday myself. Oh, she's a high-flyer, and I wonder how she does it Sixty-five a month don't go far. Then she has a sick brother, too."

"Live with her people?" Daylight asked.

"No; hasn't got any. They were well to do, I've heard. They must have been, or that brother or hers couldn't have gone to the University of California. Her father had a big cattle ranch, but he got to fooling with mines or something, and went broke before he died. Her mother died long before that. Her brother must cost a lot of money. He was a husky once, played football, was great on hunting and being out in the mountains and such things. He got his accident breaking horses, and then rheumatism or something got into him. One leg is shorter than the other, and withered up some. He has to walk on crutches I saw her out with him once—crossing the ferry. The doctors have been experimenting on him for years, and he's in the French Hospital now, I think."

All of which side-lights on Miss Mason went to increase Daylight's interest in her. Yet, much as he desired, he failed to get acquainted with her He had thoughts of asking her to luncheon, but his was the innate chivalry of the frontiersman, and the thoughts never came to anything. He knew a self-respecting, square-dealing man was not supposed to take his stenographer to luncheon. Such things did happen, he knew, for he heard the chaffing gossip of the club; but he did not think much of such men and felt sorry for the girls.

CHAPTER XI.

Daylight was in the thick of his spectacular and intensely bitter fight with the Coastwise Steam Navigation Company, and the Hawaiian, Nicaraguan, and Pacific-Mexican Steamship Company. He stirred up a bigger muss than he had anticipated and even he was astounded at the wide ramifications of the struggle and at the unexpected and incongruous interests that were drawn into it. Every newspaper in San Francisco turned upon him. It was true, one or two of them had first intimated that they were open to subsidization, but Daylight's judgment was that the situation did not warrant such expenditure Up to this time the press had been amusingly tolerant and good-naturedly sensational about him, but now he was to learn what virulent scurrilousness an antagonized press was capable of Every episode of his life was resurrected to serve as foundations for malicious fabrications. Daylight was frankly amazed at the new interpretation put upon all that he had accomplished and the deeds he had done. From an Alaskan hero he was metamorphosed into an Alaskan bully, liar, desperado, and all-around "bad man." The whole affair sank to the deeper deeps of rancor and savageness. The poor woman who had killed herself was dragged out of her grave and paraded on thousands of reams of paper as a martyr and a victim to Daylight's ferocious brutality.

He was like a big bear raiding a bee-hive, and, regardless of the stings he obstinately persisted in pawing for the honey. He gritted his teeth and struck back. Beginning with a raid or two steamship companies, it developed into a pitched battle with a city state and continental coast line. Allied with him, on a splendid salary, with princely pickings thrown in, was a lawyer, Larry Hegan, a young Irishman with a reputation to make, and whose peculiar genius had been unrecognized until Daylight had picked up with him. It was Hegan who guided Daylight through the intricacies of modern politics, labor organization, and commercial and corporation law It was Hegan, prolific of resource and suggestion, who opened Daylight's eyes to undreamed-of possibilities in twentieth-century warfare; and it was Daylight, rejecting, accepting, and elaborating, who planned the campaigns and prosecuted them. With the Pacific coast, from Puget Sound to Panama, buzzing and humming, and with San Francisco furiously about his ears, the two big steamship companies had all the appearance of winning. It looked as if Burning Daylight was being beaten slowly to his knees. And then he struck—at the steamship companies, at San Francisco, at the whole Pacific coast.

It was not much of a blow at first. A Christian Endeavor convention was being held in San Francisco, a row was started by Express Drivers' Union No. 927 over the handling of a small heap of baggage at Ferry Building. A few heads were broken, a score of arrests made, and the baggage was delivered. No one would have guessed that behind this petty wrangle was the fine Irish hand of Hegan, made potent by the Klondike gold of Burning Daylight. It was an insignificant affair at best—or so it seemed. But the Teamsters' Union took up the quarrel, backed by the whole Water Front Federation. Step by step, the strike became involved. A refusal of cooks and waiters to serve scab teamsters or teamsters' employers brought out the cooks and waiters. The butchers and meat cutters refused to handle meat destined for unfair restaurants. The combined Employers' Associations put up a solid front, and found facing them the 40,000 or*ganized laborers of San Francisco.* The restaurant bakers and the bakery wagon drivers struck, followed by the milkers, milk drivers and chicken pickers. The building trades asserted its position in unambiguous terms, and all San Francisco was in turmoil.

But still, it was only San Francisco. Hegan's intrigues were masterly, and Daylight's campaign steadily developed. The powerful fighting organization known as the Pacific Slope Seaman's Union refused to work vessels the cargoes of which were to be handled by scab longshoremen and freight handlers. The union presented its ultimatum, and then called a strike This had been Daylight's objective all the time. Every incoming coastwise vessel was boarded by the union officials and its crew sent ashore. And with the seamen went the firemen, the engineers and the sea cooks and waiters. Daily the number of idle steamers increased. It was impossible to get scab crews, for the men of the Seamen's Union were fighters trained in the hard school of the sea and when they went out it meant blood and death to scabs. This phase of the strike spread up and down the entire Pacific coast, until all the ports were filled with idle ships, and sea transportation was at a standstill. The days and weeks dragged out, and the strike held. The Coastwise Steam Navigation Company and the Hawaiian, Nicaraguan, and Pacific-Mexican Steamship Company were tied up completely. The expenses of combating the strike were tremendous, and they were earning nothing, while daily the situation went from bad to worse, until "peace at any price" became the cry. And still there was no peace until Daylight and his allies played out their hand, raked in the winnings, and allowed a goodly portion of a continent to resume business.

Daylight's coming to civilization had not improved him. True, he wore better clothes, had learned slightly better manners, and spoke better English. But he had hardened, and at the expense of his old-time, whole-souled geniality. Even his human affiliations were descending. Playing a lone hand contemptuous of most of the men with whom he played, lacking in sympathy or understanding of them, and certainly independent of them, he found little in common with those to be encountered, say at the Alta-Pacific. In point of fact, when the battle with the steamship companies was at its height and his raid was inflicting incalculable damage on all business interests he had been asked to resign from the Alta-Pacific. The idea had been rather to his liking, and he had found new quarters in clubs like the Riverside organized and practically maintained by the city bosses.

One week-end, feeling heavy and depressed and tired of the city and its ways, he obeyed the impulse of a whim that was later to play an important part in his life. The desire to get out of the city for a whiff of country air and for a change of scene was the cause. Yet, to himself, he made the excuse of going to Glen Ellen for the purpose of inspecting a brickyard which Holdsworthy had sold him. He spent the night in the little country hotel, and on Sunday morning, astride a saddle horse rented from the Glen Ellen butcher, rode out of the village The brickyard was close at hand on the flat beside the Sonoma Creek.

Resolving to have his fun first, and to look over the brickyard afterward, he rode up the hill, prospecting for a way cross country to get to the knolls. He left the country road at the first gate he came to and cantered through a hayfield. The grain was waist-high on either side the wagon-road, and he sniffed the warm aroma of it with delighted nostrils. At the base of the knolls he encountered a tumble-down stake-and-rider fence.

He tethered the horse and wandered on foot among the knolls. Their tops were crowned with century-old spruce trees, and their sides clothed with oaks and madronos and native holly. But to the perfect redwoods belonged the small but deep canyon that threaded its way among the knolls. Here he found no passage out for his horse, and leading the animal, he forced his way up the hillside. On the crest he came through an amazing thicket of velvet-trunked young madronos, and emerged on an open hillside that led down into a tiny valley. The sunshine was at first dazzling in its brightness, and he paused and rested, for he was panting from the exertion. Not of old had he known shortness of breath such as this, and muscles that so easily tired at a stiff climb. A tiny stream ran down the tiny valley through a tiny meadow that was carpeted knee-high with grass and blue and white nemophila.

Crossing the stream, Daylight followed a faint cattle trail over a low, rocky hill and through a wine-wooded forest of manzanita, and emerged upon another tiny valley, down which filtered another spring-fed, meadow-bordered streamlet.

"It sure beats country places and bungalows at Menlo Park," he communed aloud; "and if ever I get the hankering for country life, it's me for this every time."

An old wood-road led him to a clearing, where a dozen acres of grapes grew on wine-red soil. A cow-path, more trees and thickets, and he dropped down a hillside to the southeast exposure. Here, poised above a big forested canyon, and looking out upon Sonoma Valley, was a small farmhouse. With its barn and outhouses it snuggled into a nook in the hillside, which protected it from the west and north. It was the erosion from this hillside, he judged, that had formed the little level stretch of vegetable garden. The soil was fat and black, and there was water in plenty, for he saw several faucets running wide open. Forgotten was the brickyard. Nobody was at home, but Daylight dismounted and ranged the vegetable garden, eating strawberries and green peas, inspecting the old adobe barn and rusty plow and harrow, and rolling and smoking cigarettes while he watched the antics of several broods of young chicks and the mother hens.

Nothing could satisfy his holiday spirit now but the ascent of Sonoma Mountain. And here on the crest, three hours afterward, he emerged, tired and sweaty, garments torn and face and hands scratched, but with sparkling eyes and an unwonted zestfulness of expression. He felt the illicit pleasure of a schoolboy playing truant. The big gaming table of San Francisco seemed very far away. But there was more than illicit pleasure in his mood. It was as though he were going through a sort of cleansing bath. No room here for all the sordidness, meanness and viciousness that filled the dirty pool of city existence. He was loath to depart, and it was not for an hour that he was able to tear himself away and take the descent of the mountain. Working out a new route just for the fun of it, late afternoon was upon him when he arrived back at the wooded knolls.

Daylight cast about for a trail, and found one leading down the side opposite to his ascent. Circling the base of the knoll, he picked up with his horse and rode on to the farm house. Smoke was rising from the chimney, and he was quickly in conversation with a nervous, slender young man, who, he learned, was only a tenant on the ranch. How large was it? A matter of one hundred and eighty acres, though it seemed much larger. This was because it was so irregularly shaped. Yes, it included the clay-pit and all the knolls, and its boundary that ran along the big canyon was over a mile long. Oh, yes, he and his wife managed to scratch a living without working too hard. They didn't have to pay much rent. Hillard, the owner, depended on the income from the clay-pit. Hillard was well off and had big ranches and vineyards down on the flat of the valley. The brickyard paid ten cents a cubic yard for the clay. As for the rest of the ranch, the land was good in patches, where it was cleared, like the vegetable garden and the vineyard, but the rest of it was too much up-and-down.

"You're not a farmer," Daylight said.

The young man laughed and shook his head.

"No; I'm a telegraph operator. But the wife and I decided to take a two-years' vacation, and . . . here we are. But the time's about up. I'm going back into the office this fall after I get the grapes off."

As Daylight listened, there came to him a sudden envy of this young fellow living right in the midst of all this which Daylight had traveled through the last few hours.

"What in thunder are you going back to the telegraph office for?" he demanded.

The young man smiled with a certain wistfulness.

"Because we can't get ahead here. . . ." (he hesitated an instant), "and because there are added expenses coming. The rent, small as it is, counts; and besides, I'm not strong enough to effectually farm the place. If I owned it, or if I were a real husky like you, I'd ask nothing better. Nor would the wife." Again the wistful smile hovered on his face. "You see, we're country born, and after bucking with cities for a few years, we kind of feel we like the country best. We've planned to get ahead, though, and then some day we'll buy a patch of land and stay with it."

Daylight could not persuade himself to keep to the traveled roads that day, and another cut across country to Glen Ellen brought him upon a canyon that so blocked his way that he was glad to follow a friendly cow-path. This led him to a small frame cabin. The doors and windows were open, and a cat was nursing a litter of kittens in the doorway, but no one seemed at home. He descended the trail that evidently crossed the canyon. Part way down, he met an old man coming up through the sunset. In his hand he carried a pail of foamy milk. He wore no hat, and in his face, framed with snow-white hair and beard, was the ruddy glow and content of the passing summer day. Daylight thought that he had never seen so contented looking a being.

"How old are you, daddy?" he queried.

"Eighty-four," was the reply. "Yes, sirree, eighty-four, and spryer than most."

"You must a' taken good care of yourself," Daylight suggested.

"I don't know about that. I ain't loafed none. I walked across the plains with an ox team and fit Injuns in '51, and I was a family man with seven youngsters. I reckon I was as old then as you are now, or pretty nigh on to it."

"Don't you find it lonely here?"

The old man shifted the pail of milk and reflected.

"That all depends," he said oracularly. "I ain't never been lonely except when the old wife died. Some fellers are lonely in a crowd, and I'm one of them. That's the only time I'm lonely, is when I go to 'Frisco. But I don't go no more, thank you 'most to death. This is good enough for me. I've been right here in this valley since '54—one of the first settlers after the Spaniards."

The old man chuckled, and Daylight rode on, singularly at peace with himself and all the world. It seemed that the old contentment of trail and camp he had known on the Yukon had come back to him. He could not shake from his eyes the picture of the old pioneer coming up the trail through the sunset light. He was certainly going some for eighty-four. The thought of following his example entered Daylight's mind, but the big game of San Francisco vetoed the idea.

Continued Next Week.

Triumph of Positivism.

Mme. Ackermann thus expresses the perfect triumph of positivism: "Nature, the eternal stepmother, has but one desire. It is continually to bring forth, endlessly, unceasingly; greedy, mother! she has chosen eternity for herself, to you she leaves—death!"

PALMER NEWS.

Sewer Expert Coming.

Cleaning Work on North Main Street Suspended Meanwhile.

After a month of work on the Main street sewer between Walnut and Knox streets—it was four weeks ago yesterday that the first opening was made in the street—Highway Commissioner McKelligott has suspended cleaning operations until he secures expert advice as to what the trouble is and what to do for it. He has succeeded in getting an opening sufficiently large to take care of the ordinary flow of sewage, but the sewer is not wholly clear. He has sent to New York for an expert, who is coming expressly for this piece of sewer; he was expected yesterday, but for some reason did not arrive. Mr. McKelligott made the above statements to a Journal man this morning. Having partially remedied the trouble he is now building up to the street level the manhole near the foot of Knox street, where the sewers from Main and North Main streets unite and go to the river; this was made only about two feet deep when built, and was buried some six feet or more under ground, there being no record or remembrance of its existence.

Last of Musical Comedy.

"Prince of Mexico" To-night and To-morrow. Stock Company Next.

The performanee to-night and to-morrow at the Forest Lake theatre will be the last of the musical comedy company which has played so acceptably the last two weeks. The piece is "The Prince From Mexico," whieh was given yesterday for the first time. Next week another stock company will appear, the Elsie Gladys Co., and the first play will be "The Minister's Sweetheart." The company is said to be as good as the Perry Players, and if so will be sure to draw large crowds, as stoek plays seem to appeal to the patrons of the lake. There will be the usual Sunday concert, with other attractions.

Boys Get Into Trouble.

Nutmeg State Youngsters Gain Knowledge of Bay State Law.

Four boys, 15 and 16 years of age, hailing from the vicinity of Stafford in the state of Connecticut, were given a taste of Massachusetts justice Monday. They started out on their bicycles Sunday for a ride and journeyed up into Monson, where they found on an automobile some banners which they thought would look better on their machines and which they proceeded to appropriate unto their own use. They were seen and caught, and appeared in the district court in Palmer Monday. They were given some good advice and the cases were placed on file.

Business Club Joins Chamber of Commerce.

At the meeting of the Palmer Business and Social club Tuesday evening it was voted to join the recently-formed New England Chamber of Commerce, the committee which the club sent to the recent meeting of organizations interested having reported favorably. The organization is made up of clubs and boards of trades in cities and towns in Western Massachusetts, Northern Connecticut and Southern New Hampshire and Vermont, the object being mutual protection and assistance along numerous lines.

Postmaster Shaw and Wife Entertained.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter L. Shaw were given a pleasant surprise in honor of the twenty-fifth wedding anniversary by Palmer and Monson friends at their eottage at Pleasure Beach on Thursday evening of last week. Refreshments were served and a very pleasant evening was passed. Mr. and Mrs. Shaw were presented with a very handsome silver piece. One lady present, who was not married, invited Mr. and Mrs. Shaw to be present at her silver wedding.

The body of Mrs. William Boyce, who died in Springfield Wednesday, was brought to Palmer this morning for burial in St. Thomas's cemetery. She was a former resident of the town.

Suit Cases Were Mixed Up.

Couldn't Eat Neckwear Sample Found in Grip He Took.

A peculiar mixup of dress suit cases took plaee on Main street last evening. A salesman for a New York neckwear concern arrived from Ware on the 7.15 electric and set his case of samples on the sidewalk near the waiting room. He stepped a short distance away, but returned almost immediately and found a suit case where he had left his, but it was not the one he carried; the one left in its plaee was something like his but not exaetly. He made haste to find Officer Crimmins and tell his tale of woe. The grip which had been left was examined and found to contain a leg of lamb, loaf of bread and other eatables, a few small articles of gent's wearing apparel, etc. The offieer at onee reasoned that the exchange had been by mistake and that there'd be a disappointed householder somewhere before long. The most likely places were Monson, Bondsville and Three Rivers, as the cars for these places had departed about the time the grip disappeared. Sure enough, a little later eame word from Bondsville that the missing grip was there, and would the offieer have a look for a man who had stolen the grip with the eatables. An exchange was amicably arranged this morning, and both parties feel better now.

Another Circus Coming.

Howe's Great London Shows Will Be Here Friday, the 30th.

Palmer will have another circus on the 30th, when Howe's Great London shows will exhibit here.

While the trained wild beasts are a great feature, the regular line of circus acts is fully up to a high standard.

The wonderful Zanfretta Family are a surprise and have no equals in the circus world. The Riding Lowandes are among the big acts; the Bertik Troupe, Flying Jaunita Twins, the Bronze Troupe of acrobats have no peers. The Kentucky menage and High School Horses are seen only with this show. The clowns are funny, the gymnasts clever; the elephants numerous and the menagerie is large and the Glasgow Prize Team a great feature.

A free street parade will be given, which will leave the grounds at 10 o'clock on the day of the performance.

Broken Axle Causes Slight Delay.

Eleetric car No. 358, leaving Palmer for Springfield at 6.45 Tuesday morning, in charge of Motorman Stevens and Conductor Frappier, broke an axle on the curve just east of the Auto Inn at North Wilhraham, the breaksing on the forward wheels of the front truck. The passengers walked back to North Wilbraham and caught the steam train there for the eity, and passengers on other cars were transferred around the wreck for a couple of hours until new wheels could be installed and the car taken to a siding.

Drunks Were Numerous.

For some reason or other the crop of drunks on the streets Monday was remarkably large. In fact, they were so apparent that the situation was commented on by many. In the absence of a day officer the most of them finally drifted off to their homes or some place of seclusion, but in the evening a half dozen were gathered in and appeared in the district court Tuesday morning, where one paid a fine and the cases of the others were continued.

Tampering With Fire Alarm Boxes.

The superintendent of the fire alarm system has had a deal of trouble reeently with boys breaking the glass covering the keys on the fire alarm boxes, particularly in some sections of the town. There is a severe penalty for tampering with fire apparatus, and if the trouble is not remedied some of the youngsters may find themselves faeing the justiee of the distriet court some morning.

Animal Killed by Heat.

A Holstein bull, being driven from Fiskdale to slaughter, died from the effects of the heat on Park street Monday.

L. L. Merrick Woman's Relief Corps will hold a regular meeting this evening.

The cable of the telephone company on Thorndike street is being replaced by one of larger capacity.

The infant child of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Banks of School street died Wednesday after a long illness. The funeral was held this afternoon, with burial in St. Thomas' cemetery.

The seleetmen and overseers of the poor will hold a joint meeting on the evening of Monday, the 26th, to elect a member of the board of overseers to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Patrick Crowley.

Six young boys from North Wilbraham appeared in the district court yesterday morning on charges of tampering with the seals on freight cars. They were given a sharp talking to and let go on promises of eorrect behavior in the future.

The building of the Masonie Hall association on Central street is undergoing extensive repairs, externally and internally. The outside is to be painted and the blinds removed. The main hall will be frescoed, steel ceilings put up in the card and coat rooms, and the dining hall and card room will be sheathed part way up.

J. F. Lewis held an auction at his garage yesterday, to dispose of his stock, as he must move the building to make room for the new block to be built by A. W. Holbrook. The building was not sold, and Mr. Lewis will tear it down. The Journal bloek. on the other side of the lot, has been sold to G. E. Buck, who is taking it down.

A workman employed on the Southern New England railroad work near Blanchardville missed a pocketbook containing a sum of money yesterday morning and had one of his fellow-workmen arrested on a charge of lareeny. He appeared in the distriet eourt yesterday morning, but as there was not sufficient evidence to hold the man he was discharged.

Abel H. Calkins of East Longmeadow paid a visit Wednesday to his neice and nephew, Esther and Daniel Graves of Baptist Hill. Although 90 years of age, Mr. Calkins walked the mile from the trolley traek to his destination in the severe heat of the day without inconvenience. Mr. Graves formerly owned the farm which is now the property of J. H. Wesson.

People who stood on the walk in front of the post office Tuesday evening were given a thriller which they haven't got over yet—if they are at all nervously inclined. A horse attached to a covered carriage which was without light as the law directs, approached North Main street from Main and stopped just after erossing Thorndike street. Just at that time a big touring car made the turn from Thorndike street into North Main and only by quick work on the part of the driver and an almost impossible squeeze between the carriage and the sidewalk was a smashup averted. Those who looked on failed to appreciate how the auto got by in the exceedingly narrow space whieh it did.

The regular services of the Baptist church will be resumed Sunday. Men's prayer meeting at 10.15; morning worship at 10.45; evening service at 7. Rev. Charles W. Williams will preach at both services. The serviees are held in union with the Congregational ehureh, and a cordial welcome will be given to all who care to attend.

Formation of Icebergs.

The proportion of an iceberg which will be under ter is det mined by comparing the density of the ice with that of the surrounding sea water. The densities of ice and sea water are nearly .92 and 1.03, respectively, from which it can be calculated that only about one-ninth of the berg's bulk is visible above the surface. No iceberg could float with one-third of its actual bulk out of water, but if it were irregularly gormed, with peaks, it might seem to be much less than eight-ninths submerged.

WARE.

Ordered Horse Shot.

Joseph Brouillette appeared near the Commercial House Saturday night with a horse which he said he was planning to trade, but which was in such a pitiable condition that Chief of Police Buckley took it in charge and notified Dexter A. Atkins of Springfield, agent of the S. P. C. T. A. society. He looked the animal over Monday and ordered it shot, which was done by Dr. J. E. Kennedy in the stall where it lay in the Mansion House stable. Brouillette agreed to pay for the animal's keeping, the expense of shooting and burial, and the other expenses in the matter—the fulfillment of the promise being necessary to keep the matter out of the courts.

Has Its Share of the Proof That Kidney Sufferers Seek.

Backache? Kidneys weak?
Distressed with urinary ills?
Want a reliable kidney remedy?
Don't have to look far. Use what Palmer people recommend. Every street in Palmer has its cases.
Here's one Palmer woman's experience.
Let Mrs. Anna Smith of 212 Park St., tell it.
She says: "For quite a while I had attacks of backache and there were pains in my loins when I stooped or lifted, showing that my kidneys were at fault. This trouble was particularly bad in the morning and I was hardly able to get up. When I heard of Doan's Kidney Pills I began their use and it did not take them long to bring entire relief."

WANTED: 50 MEN AND WOMEN

To Take Advantage of Special Offer Made By J. P. Lynde.

J. P. Lynde, the enterprising druggist is advertising to-day for fifty men and women to take advantage of the special half-price offer he is making on Dr. Howard's celebrated specific for the cure of constipation and dyspepsia and get a fifty cent package at half-price 25 cents.

So positive is he of the remarkable power of this specific to cure these diseases as well as sick headaches and liver troubles, that he agrees to refund the money to any customer whom the medicine does not quickly relieve and cure.

With Dr. Howard's specific at hand, you can eat what you want and have no fear of ill consequences. It strengthens the stomach, gives perfect digestion, regulates the bowels, creates an appetite and makes life worth the living.

If you cannot call at J. P. Lynde's store to-day send him 25 cents by mail and he will send you a package promptly, charges paid. J. P. Lynde has been able to secure only a limited supply of the specific, so great is the demand, and you should not delay taking advantage of this liberal offer he is making this week.

Cold Weather

"Some good, old-fashioned winter, believe me," said Miss Connelly, gayly, as she bounced into the cloak room. "Anybody that's collectin' this kind of weather can have all that's comin' to me and no questions asked."

She threw her muff at Miss Hoffman and her fur collar at Miss Larson and laid two icy fingers on the back of Miss Frizkie's neck. Miss Frizkie squirmed out of reach.

"You're terribly nervous, Frizzie," said Miss Connelly. "You ought to take something for it."

"I'm more likely to hand out something," rejoined Miss Frizkie, with justifiable indignation.

Miss Connelly winked at Miss Hoffman, who promptly collapsed in an attack of the giggles. "Pretty smart for you, Frizzie," said Miss Connelly. "Look at what you done to little Hoffy. Some of them wheezes of hers is going to strike in some day.

"I wish you girls could see ma," she went on after a moment. "You never did see any person hate the cold the way ma does. The first night I breezed in out of that north wind ma was settin' just as close to the kitchen stove as she could set.

"'Forevermore, ma,' I says, puttin' my hand on the back of her neck, like I done to Frizzie just now, 'why don't you get into the stove?'

"'I would,' says ma, 'if the door was big enough.'

"Say, it always tickles me to death to see ma get peevish, so I went to the door and flung it open. 'Gee,' I says, 'but it's close in here!'

"'Nell Connelly,' yells ma, 'shut that door this minute, or I'll take my slipper to you.'

"I didn't move fast enough to suit her, so she jumped at the door and slammed it shut and I really thought she was going to hand me one on the side of my head, she was so mad."

"'Well,' she says, 'I never thought to live to be the mother of a goose,' she says, 'though it ain't a word that I care to use, me bein' a lady. It don't run in my family,' she says. 'I always did say you took after your pa's folks.'

"The next morning, when I came down to breakfast, ma was shaking so with the cold that she was makin' the dishes rattle on the shelves. I was doin' a shiverin' act myself, but I wasn't in the same class with ma.

"My teeth was chatterin' so I could hardly talk, but I says, as steady as I could: 'My, ain't it oppressive this mornin', ma? What do you say to havin' cold boiled ham, lemonade and ice cream for supper tonight?' I says.

"I couldn't get a word out of ma that night when I come home from work. I don't know's I ever seen her so sore before. After supper my kid brother and sister got to scrappin' and, bless Pete, if they didn't break the window! Ma give 'em just one look and then she beat into her bedroom and locked the door, and not one of us set eyes on her again that night.

"The next night when I blew in there was my kid sister gettin' supper.

"'Where's ma?' I says.

"'Gone to bed,' says the kid.

"It gave me an awful jolt. I'd never knowed ma to go to bed in the daytime since I'd been acquainted with her.

"She ain't sick, is she?' I says.

"'She's actin' awful funny,' the kid says. 'I can't tell whether she's sick or not. You better go in and talk to her.'

"Well, I went into ma's room and there she was in bed with a hot water bottle on each side of her, about seven blankets and three comforters on top of her and my kid sister's cap that she wears to school pulled over her face.

"'Why, ma,' I says, 'what's the matter? Are you sick?'

"'I s'pose you might call it bein' sick,' she barks. 'I know I'm sick and tired of this here weather and I ain't goin' to countenance it another minute.' Ma knows some swell words, believe me. She's got a grand education.

"'Well,' I says to ma, 'I guess stayin' in bed's the best thing you can do.' I says. 'I'll fetch you in some supper and some hot coffee and then maybe you'll feel better.'

"'You let me alone,' says ma. 'You needn't bring me nothin' to eat. Do you think I'm going to sit up and eat it? You bet your life I won't.'

"On the square, I begun to think she'd gone dippy. She didn't act no more like ma usually does than nothin'. 'Oh, come out of it, ma,' I says.

"'You bet I won't come out of it,' ma says. 'I'm going to stay right in it till spring. And, what's more,' she says, 'I ain't goin' to wash my face till the temperature gets above freezing, and before I come to bed I did my hair up to stay till the Fourth of July. Now, beat it,' says ma."

"My, I should think she'd get awful tired of it," said Miss Larson, anxiously. "Do you really think she will stay there in bed?"

"Sure she will," replied Miss Connelly, winking cheerfully at the other six. 'Ma takes after me and George Washington. She never told a lie."—Chicago Daily News.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Monson News.

Probable New Industry.

Local and Outside Capital Interested in New Woolen Mill.

It is with a large degree of satisfaction that Monson people learn that there is every prospect of the organization of a new woolen industry which will employ a considerable number of hands, and that some of the best known business men of the place are behind the project, as well as outside capital. Among the local men are Julius Heimann, of the firm of Heimann & Lichten, who recently purchased the Cushman mill for their hat business, who is willing to give the machinery from that mill; others are H. W. Lancey of the Somerset Woolen Co., and A. A. Langewald, both woolen manufacturers. It is because of the interest of these men that outside capital has been attracted. The plan suggested is the construction of large additions to the Somerset mill, and the removal of the Cushman mill machinery there, making a 9-set mill, which would employ 150 to 200 hands, a substantial addition to the industrial life of the town.

Macadam Road Work Stopped.

Pending Arrival of Specifications From State Highway Commission.

The construction of the new macadam road on the Palmer road has been suspended, pending the arrival of specifications from the state highway commissioners. All of the work so far has been done without the knowledge or consent of the highway commissioners, whose duty it is to furnish specifications regarding the grades, which will have to be changed in many places, and also the width. It is not known whether the work already done will come up to the specifications or not; if not, it will mean a heavy financial loss to the town.

New Dam Nearly Finished.

Will Give the Town More Water For Fire Protection.

The work on the dam on the Seneca Conant farm is very nearly completed, and the pond thus created will give the town a substantial reserve supply of water in case of fire. The pond will cover about two acres with an average depth of about 10 feet, and will contain 900,000 cubic feet of water. An intake has been constructed so that at any time at a short notice the water can be turned into the mains of the town water system.

Lawn Party Next Week.

At the meeting of Wiseman court, Catholic Order of Foresters, held Monday evening, arrangements were made and a committee was appointed for a lawn party to be held under the auspices of the society next Wednesday afternoon and evening on the lawn of the residence of Dr. J. S. MacQuaid on Main street. The following committee was appointed: Mrs. Mary Foley, Mrs. J. J. Burke, Miss Nellie Lynch, Miss Annie O'Connor, Miss J. V. Cantwell, Miss Mary O'Brien, Miss Jennie Hanson and Miss Lizzie Sullivan. In the afternoon there will be whist from 3.30 till 5.30, and in the evening there will be the usual popular attractions.

Sons of Veterans Invited.

A very important meeting of the local camp, Sons of Veterans, was held in Grand Army hall Tuesday evening. A communication from the Division Commander of Connecticut was read, asking the local camp to assist in the formation of a camp in Stafford Springs, Ct., on the evening of August 24, and it was especially requested that the degree team of the local camp do the initiatory work. Besides the members of the degree team, 20 members expressed their desire to go. The party will probably travel by automobile.

LYMAN BROWN, 68 Murray St., New York, N.Y.

I have invented and manufactured a lovely flower sprayer, for the purpose of reaching with a spraying insecticide underneath the leaves, both of the veranda plants and those in the flowerbed. It is the most indispensable helper to flower-loving people. I get fifty cents apiece for them, and they sell very readily. I would like some intelligent lady, who is florally inclined, to help me sell them to her friends who keep plants. I would make it quite an object. I generally give a small cake of tobacco soap with each sprayer. It is lovely for the house and window plants to spray the suds on them. I had one lady who sold over one hundred a day right in the flower tent at the Mineola Fair. She had a pail of water and a fern to demonstrate upon, and I tell you she did the business; it seemed as if everybody needed one. I have some circulars of it, with pictures of its work, to which anybody will be welcome.

A Chain and Its Links

In telephoning there are three links in the chain that constitutes "good service": 1. The person calling. 2. The operator. 3. The person called.

No matter how much any one or any two of these links do to develop good service the result is determined by the measure of co-operation of the third. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link.

If the person calling fails to consult the directory and gives a wrong number, the operator inevitably repeats the error. If the person called fails to answer promptly and the caller leaves the telephone, naturally "there is no one on the line."

Being human, the operator—the other link—is liable to err occasionally, but a careful analysis demonstrates that she is not fairly chargeable with many of the difficulties frequently ascribed to her.

If Link No. 1 gives the right number and calls distinctly, and Link No. 3 answers promptly, the Telephone Company will be responsible for its part of the chain. If no higher motive actuated it, the motive of economy, or self-interest, would suffice.

From any Pay Station you can speak to any one of 425,000 telephones in the territory of the New England Telephone and Telegraph Company was introduced to the public in 1848, since which time thousands of bottles have been sold each year to an appreciative public, which is a good evidence of its merits. It is adapted to so many ailments it should be in every household, for it cures all kinds of pains both internal and external. For Bronchial affections it is unrivaled by any article in the market. It is a sure cure for Cholera Morbus and Dysentery, if taken in season, also for Coughs. It is an effective remedy for rheumatic affections, stiff joints, swelled limbs, sprains, cramps, toothache and many other ills to which the flesh is heir. Try it and it will do you good. It is sold at 25c, 50c and $1.00 per bottle by the Bay State Drug Co., Lynde & Gould, The Kinsley Pharmacy and the proprietor.

The Antalgica
Or Vegetable Pain Restorer

"What's the matter, sir?" queried the old "trusty" who was sweeping out the warden's private office.

He asked the question of a young man who had come in from the corridor. The latter, like the trusty, wore a gray shirt—gray in Menlo prison is the badge of good behavior—though of slightly different cut. He was a personable chap, lithe, vigorous and erect, on this side of thirty. Now he breathed heavily, as if from recent exertion, his hair was rumpled, and from a cut beneath his right eye blood was flowing.

"The deputy warden hit me and I fell against the corner of the window ledge," he panted.

Neither noticed a young girl who had come to the door of the public office, and had heard the young man's answer.

Now her little hands were clenched; her expressive face wore a mingled look of pity and indignation. She came swiftly into the room.

"Pardon me, but did I hear you say the deputy warden struck you?"

"Yes, ma'am," answered the young man, as he applied a handkerchief to his injury.

"And they say this is a model prison!" was her spirited comment.

"I'd like your name and—number—please, and a full description of the deputy's attack upon you."

"Why, ma'am?" queried the young man.

"I am my mother's private secretary. She is Mrs. Campbell Bannerman, chairman of the prison committee of the State Federation of Woman's Clubs."

The young man's quiet humility changed to lively concern. "You mustn't, you know!" he cried. "That wouldn't do at all. Please don't mention a word of what I told you!"

"Why?" queried the girl.

"Oh, because I—" began the young man, and checked himself. He became the model prisoner again. "It—might be better for me, ma'am," he said quietly.

"I understand. They would seek to revenge themselves if they knew you—told. But I want you to promise one thing, please."

"I'll promise you anything!" assured the young man.

"It's only this," she replied hastily, confused a bit by the look in his eyes. "If they ill-treat you again, write me at Eyredale—Ethel Bannerman."

She opened her bag, fumbled in a tiny pocketbook and produced a silver dollar.

"It's all the money I have here," timidly. "Mamma has enough for both of us. Please take it."

With a sudden impulse she offered her hand. He took it, gently, his warm palm met her own. She smiled faintly in farewell, but there were tears in her eyes.

"It was all wrong to deceive her that way," said the young man, to his own reflection in the mirror, when she had gone. "But I couldn't let her go and forget me. I had to get her interested. Now, I wonder if she'll forgive me when she finds out?"

"She's a good little girl, and a mighty sweet one, too. Why, she wanted to cry over my troubles." He paused for a moment, in glowing, boyish awe. "By Jove, I must see her again. Now to waylay Mrs. Bannerman." He plunged into the making of a speedy toilet.

Two hours later the visit of the officers and prominent committee members of the state federation was over. The president, Mrs. Lucretia Lorne Hammond, rode back to the city in the same automobile with Mrs. Bannerman and her daughter.

"A visit to a prison is a saddening experience," remarked Mrs. Hammond, with the enunciation of the public speaker; "so many hopeless faces, so many broken hearts.

"I noticed one queer thing in there—and it's supposed to be a model institution. I met a young prisoner in the corridor with a bad cut on his face. He looked as if he'd been fighting. Do you suppose they still have corporal punishment here in spite of their denials?"

Ethel Bannerman leaned forward with eager, wide open eyes, her lips parted. Mrs. Bannerman smiled.

"Was he a tall young man with a gray shirt?"

"I believe he was," replied Mrs. Hammond.

"Handsome; brown-eyed?"

"I couldn't tell about his eyes; I suppose he might be called handsome," admitted Mrs. Hammond, austerely.

"That isn't a prisoner. That's Gerald Primrose, a member of the prison board. He's here because there's a meeting of the board today. The governor appointed him because he's wealthy and can give his time and thought to prison problems. Warden Stone speaks very highly of him."

"He seems rather peculiar," commented Mrs. Hammond. "I think I saw him again, just as we were leaving. He had changed to his ordinary attire. He was holding a silver dollar in his hand, and looking at it like a miser. Why, he acted as though he wanted to eat it!"

"Ethel, you look as happy as a bride," she observed presently.

"I am happy," Ethel replied, with a sigh of content. "And this has been a delightful day!"

TWO WAYS TO ATTAIN FAME

One Along the Bloody Lane of Warfare, the Other in Garret With Hunger.

His way was in a bloody lane where clanking caissons splashed along; his goal, the line where blazing guns laughed out their song of death. On, on he went. His ears were filled with sounds of quick commands, bugle blasts, discordant drums. No fluttering fear was in his heart, no thought of home, no specter of the dread despair that waited at the hearth if he never came again. To him there was no warning in the bullet's deadly hiss. Youth trod all reason under foot; ambition saw all glory overhead. On, on he went to woo his bride, the priceless jewel, Fame.

Another, in a garret, sighed for Fame. Crusts were his portion and his raiment only rags. Hermit like, he toiled alone; nor cold nor hunger even daunted him. He marshaled all his hosts, and visions came and went On, on he toiled. In the snowflakes that drifted in and touched his hands he read a message from the world without; all white, all cheerless. As a chrysalis, his fancy wove and spun and made its garments wondrous, then burst in splendor on a waiting world.

Both fought the fight; each in his way. One for an heroic shape of bronze, one for a speechless marble face. Each for an epitaph—that all the ages in the dust of time might know he did and died.—Philadelphia Press.

A Woman's Way.

"My dear," said the bacteriologist's wife, "did you remember to order the coal?"

"Doggone it!" growled the bacteriologist, "every time I count up to nine hundred and eighty-eight thousand three hundred and forty-five germs in this spoonful of milk she comes in and interrupts me and makes me lose the count!"

Closing the door with a slam, he begins again. "One, two three," etc.—Judge's Library

Good Work of Engineers.

The Butte of Montmartre, Paris, the "sacred" Mount of Martyrs, "the pimple of the world," has been pierced by engineers working for the Nord-Sud railway. Two and a half years have been occupied in the operation. The pleasant fact, connected with the tunneling, that will put the famous Place Pigalle in direct communication with the Place Constantin Pecquur—an important link in the chain of underground Paris—is the absence of all accidents. And yet this Mount of Martyrs, upon which is perched the great Church of Sacre Coeur, is dangerous soil to work in.

Trifle Disconcerting.

Mr. Newlyrich (who has at last maneuvered his ruby ring under the eyes of the great foreign banker)—Ah, Baron, I see you've at last noticed my beautiful rubies!

The Baron (sadly)—Ach, yes! Dey make me think of home—I haf a mantelpieth of dem dere.—Bystander.

Conversational Strategy.

"I observe that you never contradict any theory that Mr. Heftybrane advances."

"Yes," replied Miss Cayenne; "he's likely to get through talking much sooner if you don't break in and suggest new topics."

Where He Burns It.

Mrs. Hoyle—I understand your husband has money to burn.

Mrs. Doyle—Yes; and I can show you the crematory.

WHERE DOCTORS FAILED TO HELP

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Mrs. Green's Health—Her Own Statement.

Covington, Mo.—"Your medicine has done me more good than all the doctor's medicines. At every monthly period I had to stay in bed four days because of hemorrhages, and my back was so weak I could hardly walk. I have been taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and now I can stay up and do my work. I think it is the best medicine on earth for women."—Mrs. JENNIE GREEN, Covington, Mo.

How Mrs. Cline Avoided Operation.

Brownsville, Ind.—"I can say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done me more good than anything else. One doctor said I must be operated upon for a serious female trouble and that nothing could help me but an operation.

"I had hemorrhages and at times could not get any medicine to stop them. I got in such a weak condition that I would have died if I had not got relief soon.

"Several women who had taken your Compound, told me to try it and I did and found it to be the right medicine to build up the system and overcome female troubles.

"I am now in great deal better health than I ever expected to be, so I think I ought to thank you for it."—Mrs. O. M. CLINE, S. Main St., Brownsville, Ind.

ELECTRIC CARS BUMP.

Two Collide on Thorndike Street Friday Evening.

STALLED AUTOMOBILE THE CAUSE

Rear End Collision. Several Passengers Shaken Up, But No One Very Much Hurt.

Two electric cars collided on Thorndike street just before 6 o'clock Friday night with a bump which jarred most of the passengers on both more or less, and resulted in the injury of five, though none were seriously hurt. The unfortunates were: Alexander Smith of Three Rivers, wrist bruised; Tony North of North Wilbraham, right knee bruised; Julia Viatle of North Wilbraham, right leg slightly cut; Josie Gagnon, 43 Union street, Holyoke, left leg bruised; Mrs. John Curran, Cottage avenue, North Wilbraham, chest bruised. No bones were broke. All were cared for by Dr. Jacob P. Schneider, and all were taken to their homes in automobiles with the exception of Smith, who went home on a car.

The regular 5.45 car for Ware—a double truck car—was followed as usual by the single-truck car for Three Rivers. An automobile was stalled on the track at Park street and the Ware car, in charge of Motorman Kelly and Conductor O'Connor, was stopped to avoid smashing into it. The Three Rivers car was in charge of Motorman Myers and Conductor Hancock, and was following too closely to be stopped in time to avoid the collision. Spectators who saw the smash say that both cars reared at the impact, then settled down on the rails again.

Out of the Ordinary.

Is the Great London Shows, to Be Here Next Week.

"Something out of the ordinary" is a remark that can properly be made of Howe's London Shows Consolidated which will exhibit at Palmer next Friday.

The big circus has a reputation for producing remarkable surprises in its arena until the public has learned that it can attend an exhibition of the Great London Circus expecting to see something new and different.

There is an unusual number of features with this show this season. It is difficult to pick the best. Some will like the trained wild beasts' exhibition or horse wonders. Others will prefer the Zanfretta family, Meredith Troupe, the Riding Lowandes, the Glasgow Royal Horses, the Elite Troupe, while some will spend most of their time laughing at the host of clowns, listening to the Julius Winslow famous band, enjoying the races, admiring the animals or petting the beautiful Dublin Prize Horses. No matter which way one looks while under any one of the Howe tents, he is sure to see something out of the ordinary.

Auto In Street Opening.

No Lights to Guard Sewer Excavation on North Main Street.

An automobile east bound crashed through the guards set about the sewer opening in front of the residence of L. E. Chandler on North Main street about 6.45 Wednesday evening and dropped the right forward wheel into the opening. The wheel was crushed over and ruined, but the car was able to proceed slowly to the garage later. Fortunately no one was hurt.

The car was a 1912 Buick, Massachusetts registry number 20166, owned by R. W. McMillan of Boston, who was driving; with him was W. A. Kyle, also of Boston. They were on their way from Springfield to Boston. As they came into the village they slowed down to about 15 miles per hour and kept well to the right hand side of the street. It was getting dark at that time, and the spot where the accident occurred is shaded by large trees. Neither man noticed the obstruction until close upon it, when the driver turned his car sharply to the left. He managed to get the left forward wheel clear of the opening, but the other dropped in. Only the fact that they were proceeding slowly saved them from serious injury. There was an iron railing about the excavation and two red flags up, but no lights.

A. W. Holbrook has awarded the contract for new block of monitor stores on Main street to T. M. Lynch of Monson.

EARLY MORNING FIRE.

Smudge in Barn Gets Department Out 12.30 a. m.

HAD BEEN GOING SEVERAL HOURS.

Spontaneous Combustion Probably the Cause. Qnickly Put Out By Few Chemicals.

An alarm was rung in about 12.30 Saturday morning for a smudge in the basement of a barn owned by Mrs. Mina Morgan, in the rear of her residence on North Main street, next to the post office. Smoke was issuing from the cellar and it seemed as though there must be serious trouble there. The firemen found a slight blaze in the manure pit, and easily put it out.

The barn is occupied by Joe Green, who holds one of the junk colleeting licenses. He stables his horse there, and also at times certain kinds of junk and a portion of the stock used on his cart. He beds his horse with shavings, and these had apparently become so heated that they had started to blaze. A peculiar fact is that the residents of that section, particularly to the west, had smelled a peculiar odor all the evening; in some cases it had so irritated the throat and eyes that windows had to be closed. The loss by fire was small.

The fire department made a record run to the scene. Box 68, at the foot of Walnut street, was pulled, and the auto truck was at the box before the alarm had done ringing.

Sewer Expert At Work.

Finds Sewer on North Main Street Badly Clogged With Sand.

The sewer experts engaged by Highway Commissioner McKelligott arrived in town last Saturday and inspected the North Main street sewer which has been giving trouble for several weeks. Monday morning a quantity of special apparatus arrived by express and the men went to work. The process is comparatively a simple one. From the bottom of a manhole rods about four feet in length are coupled together and shoved through the sewer to the next manhole. A rope is then attached and pulled through. At the lower end of the section to be cleaned an instrument which much resembles a grocer's sugar scoop is drawn into the sewer backward by a windlass over the manhole at the upper end. After being drawn in as far as is desired the process is reversed and it is drawn out again, the point following the bottom of the sewer and scooping up and carrying along whatever is in its way. The proeess is repeated as many times as is necessary to clear the sewer the entire length, after which it is thoroughly flushed with water.

The section between Knox street and the residence of H. W. Holbrook was completed Wednesday afternoon; that is, it was left for the time being. There is still some trouble, and the sewage does not yet flow as it should. What the trouble is does not appear to be plain; whether it is an obstruction of some kind or whether there is a low place in the pipe cannot be determined. Wednesday afternoon work was begun on the section between H. W. Holbrook's and Thorndike street. The sewer is 15 inches in diameter, and in it was found about 11 inches of sand. The work of clearing it is still in progress. Mr. McKelligott states that he intends to continue the work on the present lines until all the main sewers at least have been given attention.

Auto Smashes Into Team.

Then Skips Out Without Any Inquiries As to Damages.

Two young men—Parker Freeman, son of Benjamin Freeman, warden at the Palmer town farm, and Thomas Beveridge—were run into by an auto bearing the Massachusetts 1912 registry tag No. 35220, Saturday evening while driving on the Warren road. The buggy was smashed, but the boys retained control of the horse and escaped injury.

The young men were driving a horse belonging to Mr. Freeman, hitched to a new buggy. They had been to Warren and were on their way home. Near the station at West Brimfield they heard an automobile behind them and drew out to the right hand side of the road. Instead of going to the left the auto kept to the right and ran into the rear of the buggy. No assistance was offered by the occupants of the car, nor did they stop to ask if anyone had been hurt, and it is presumable that they would not have stopped at all except that it was necessary in order to back out and clear the wreck in order to proceed. As the young men were driving with a light on their buggy there seems no reasonable excuse for the smashup.

ANDREW HOLT DEAD.

End Came at Home of Son in Worcester Monday.

HAD REACHED ADVANCED AGE OF 90.

Noted Horseman and Old-time Stage Driver. Well Known in Palmer And Vicinity.

Andrew L. Holt, well known as a former resident of Palmer, died Monday evening at the home of his son in Worcester at the advanced age of 90 years. His death occurred 18 hours after that of a little 18-months-old boy—Thomas Callahan—of whom Mr. Holt was very fond, and it is believed that the death of both was due to ptomaine poisoning from eating watermelon last week Thursday at the Holt home. Mr. Holt was enjoying part of a melon when the little fellow teased for some and was given a portion; both were later taken sick and the boy died Monday morning, Mr. Holt in the evening. Mr. Holt's body was brought to Palmer Tuesday for burial in the Four Corners cemetery.

Mr. Holt was born in Hampton, Ct., May 19, 1823, the second son of Samuel and Clarissa Jennings Holt, one of a family of seven children. In 1837 he went to Ware to drive the stage coach from there to Barre, the beginning of an occupation which he followed for 50 years. The coach started from Barre at 6 in the morning and did not leave Ware until 4 in the afternoon, and the first year Mr. Holt managed to get some schooling in the daytime, doing much of his studying on the road; he had four horses on the coach, but said that all he had to do was to drive. When 21 years of age he married Mary L. Marble, a daughter of John and Nancy Lathe Marble of Sutton. Four children were born to them, three sons and one daughter, of whom two sons, Fred J. Holt of Springfield and John S. Holt of Worcester, with whom Mr. Holt lived, and the daughter, Mrs. Ida L. Platt of Milford, Ct., survive him. Mrs. Holt died at Middletown, Ct., in 1860.

Mr. Holt was a noted horseman, having followed horses from the earliest time that he was able to get around one. He had much experience in horse racing, and in addition to being the oldest stage driver in Massachusetts, was known as the longest user of the old high-wheeled sulky. He drove many fast horses, associating in his early racing days with such drivers as Dan Mace, Hiram Woodruff, George Wesson and Ard Carpenter, but he was always at his best when handling his reins and cracking his whip over double teams, tandems or four-in-hands. He was one of the most skilful drivers in the state. His last public appearance as a stage driver was on Labor Day last year in Ware, when he and his life-long friend and partner, Joe Weeks, drove a six-horse old-fashioned 12-passenger stage coach at the celebration of the 250th anniversary of the town.

Mr. Holt was also a famous fisherman, and some of the fishing tales with which he interspersed his birthday racing stories were of rare quality. When a man is obsessed with a desire to go a-fishing, he would say, "Only rheumatism and the law can restrain him, and then only under certain conditions." Of his racing stories, one of the most pleasant to him was that of his marking of Pocahontas, a pacing mare known to fame six decades ago. She could do a mile in 2.16 to a sulky any time, it was said, but it was to a wagon that she made her records. At a fair in Springfield about 60 years ago Mr. Holt drove her an exhibition mile against the watch. Pacing in perfect form, she made the distance in 2.17, a performance then considered little short of a marvel. It was only a short time before that the great Dexter had made a mark of 2.17 to a sulky, and Mr. Holt was never loth to tell of this triumph of his favorite mare.

Mr. Holt was once proprietor of the Tourtellotte House in Millbury, Ct., and later managed the Worcester Hotel in Worcester. He returned to Palmer 25 years ago to live on his farm. In 1906 his house on the farm burned and in it he lost many valuable and interesting records of his travels and the history of the horses that were famous in the early racing days. Mr. Holt was full of such stories himself, and it was his custom to delight his friends with yarns of his experiences on his birthdays.

The selectmen and overseers of the poor will hold a joint meeting next Monday evening to fill the vacancy in the board of overseers caused by the death of Patrick Crowley.

Morse Family Reunion.

Thirty-second Annual Gathering Held in Bondsville Wednesday.

The 32d annual reunion of the Morse family was held Wednesday on the lawn of O. A. Parent in Bondsville and was atttended by over fifty descendants of Samuel Morse. There were present also several friends of the family. Owing to illness in the families of several who usually attend the gathering was smaller than usual. Dinner took the form of a basket picnic and was served at 1 o'clock, with ice cream and hot coffee. A shower came up while dinner was being served and the guests sojourned to the house where the business meeting was held.

The president, Merrick A. Morse of Belchertown, called the meeting to order. The secretary's report was read and accepted, as was also the treasurer's report. Regrets and greetings were received and read from Mrs. Irene Bassett of Barre, Mrs. Dwight Buffington of Ware and Mrs. Della Mann of Randolph, who were unable to be present. It was voted to adopt the card system instead of loose leaf system, as voted last year, for keeping genealogies; the committee to serve in collecting the same is Merrick A. Morse, A. W. Morse, Mrs. Angie Buffington, Leon Aldrich and Mrs. Merton D. Olds. These officers were chosen: Honorary president, Jesse Buffington of Ware; president, Merrick A. Morse of Belchertown; 1st vice president, O. A. Parent of Bondsville; 2d vice president, Perley Davis of Granby; treasurer, Mrs. Francenna Towne of Ludlow; secretary, Allen Buffington of Ware; entertainment committee, Miss Ora Parent and Mrs. W. H. Morse of Bondsville, and A. J. Buffington of Ware.

The origin of the name Morse is believed to be Norman, and of great antiquity. The name Morse first occurs in 1658 in the reign of Edward III. As a journey was about to be undertaken into France during a truce with that country and the captivity of her king, Edward addressed his order to Hugh de Morse. From the nature of the commission and the prevalence of chivalry at that time it is inferred that Hugh was a knight. In Berry's "Heraldry" occurs the following coat of arms: Morse—a battle ax in pale blue between three pellets, crest, two battle axes branded with a chaplet of roses, and the motto in Latin, which translated reads, "I trust in God not in arms." This has been in the family, according to Prof. Samuel F. B. Morse, in the south of England nearly 500 years, going back to the date of the order of Edward. So at least for that number of years the Morses are from English stock.

Following the business meeting the following entertainment was given: Song by Misses Florence Whitington and Fannie Scott of Belchertown; reading, Mrs. W. H. Morse of Bondsville; duett, Miss Florence Morse and Raymond Jay of Belchertown; song, Misses Withington and Scott; short speech, by M. A. Morse. Remarks were made by Mrs. M. A. Morse, O. A. Parent, Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Buffington and Arthur Barnes of West Ware. The oldest member present was Mrs. Jessie Buffington of Ware, and the youngest, little Harriet Smith, four and one-half months, of Ware. The following were present: Mr. and Mrs. O. A. Parent and daughter Miss Ora, Mrs. W. H. Morse and daughter Gladys, Mrs. Amelia Culver of Bondsville; Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Morse and daughter Mildred, Miss Florence G. Morse, M. E. Williams, Mrs. E. E. Gay and two sons, Raymond and Edward, and three daughters, Merle, Gladys and Eleanor, Misses Fannie Scott and Florence Withington of Belchertown; Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Buffington, Mrs. M. F. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Barnes, daughter Florence and son Albert Jr., Mr. and Mrs. M. D. Olds, Mrs. Arthur Smith and two daughters, Clara F. and Harriet E. W. Smith, Mrs. O. B. Buffington, Mrs. J. M. Buffington and Miss Ruth G. Brown of Ware; Mrs. F. A. Towne, Miss Augusta Dunakin, A. W. Morse and Gordon Parent of Ludlow; H. A. Buffington, Mrs. Esther Smith and Mrs. E. J. Johnson of Springfield; Mrs. C. E. Shumway and Mrs. H. S. Hobson of Palmer; Mrs. C. R. Buffington, Mrs. William Smith and Mrs. Ida Bills of Monson; Miss Madeline V. Davis, Master Newman Davis and Miss Ruth E. Taylor of Granby; Miss Mildred Mann of Randolph and Mrs. A. S. Bowen of Indian Orchard.

The next reunion will be held on the lawn of O. A. Parent the third Wednesday in August, 1913.

The members of Revere chaper of the Eastern Star have been invited to attend the annual field day at Riverside park, Springfield, the 28th, in honor of the birthday of Robert Morris. A basket lunch will be served.

TWO MEN FALL 40 FEET.

Fatal Accident at Three Rivers Yesterday Morning.

JOSEPH PALIN DIES IN HOSPITAL.

George Camerlin Seriously Hurt. Staging On Which The Two Men Were Painting Fell.

Joseph Palin, 29, of Pleasant street, Three Rivers, died last night in the Springfield hospital from injuries received yesterday morning by the fall of a staging on which he was at work in Three Rivers. George Camerlin, 30, of Main street in the same village, is in the hospital badly hurt.

Palin was unmarried. He is survived by his father and mother, three brothers, George, Arthur, and Theophile, at home, and two sisters, Mrs. D. Abare, and Rosanna, at home. Camerlin has a wife, but no children. At an early hour this morning he had not recovered consciousness, but it was said he had a chance for recovery.

The accident occurred about 9 o'clock yesterday morning. The men, with Henry Lavillette, were painting the new building of the Cercle Canadien, working on a staging swung from the roof. Suddenly, without any warning, the end on which Palin and Camerlin were working gave way and fell to the ground. Palin's injuries consisted of a fractured arm and shoulder—the right—and a lacerated brain. Camerlin received a broken nose, broken upper jaw and a fracture at the base of the skull. The injured men were attended by Dr. S. O. Miller, and were taken to the Springfield hospital. Laviellete, who was at the other end of the staging, seized a rope as the structure fell, and clung to it until he was taken down, some little time later.

Peculiar Bigamy Case.

Ware Man Complained of by Alleged Austrian Wife of 18 Years.

Frank Bednasz, a prominent Polish resident of Ware, was brought into the district court in Ware last Saturday on a charge of bigamy. A large crowd of his countrymen attended and watched the proceedings with great interest. Attorney J. H. Schoonmaker, counsel for the defense, asked for a continuance, which was granted until to-day.

Bednasz was arrested Friday night on complaint of Kataryna Chszaszcz, who charges that she was married to Bednasz in Austria 18 years ago, saying that at that time he went by the name of Jan Chszaszcz. She tells a story of searching for her missing husband for many years. Bednasz now has a wife living in Ware and one wife of Bednasz died in Ware.

According to the woman's story, about a year after her marriage her husband left Austria for America, promising to send her passage money to join him. A year passed by and she says she wrote to him. The only reply she received was a bundle of newspapers and a message telling her she could not come to this country as there was war here. Since then she claims to have heard nothing from her husband.

A son had been born to her soon after her husband's departure, whom she named Jan. About 12 years ago, with her son, she eame to this country and has since lived in the vicinity of New York and Jersey City. She says that after her arrival in this country and ever since she has done all she could to find her husband, having spent $95 in newspaper advertising. It was not until reeently that she received any news of him. That was when Michael Kewalik of Warren, who was a friend of hers in Austra and who had served in the Austrian army with her husband, saw Bednasz in Ware and recognized him as the missing husband. Newalik's wife told a mutual friend in New York and in this way Mrs. Chszaszcz learned of the man's presenee in Ware. She came on to Ware Friday and gave a good description of her husband, saying that the third finger on his right hand was bent, having been broken. It was found that Bednasz's finger answered this description.

Bednasz claims he does not know the woman and claims positively that she is not his wife. Bail for Bednasz was fixed at $500.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—Elam Harnish, known all through Alaska as "Burning Daylight," celebrates his 30th birthday with a friendly crowd of miners at the Circle City Tivoli. He is a general favorite, a hero and a pioneer in the new gold fields. The dance leads to heavy gambling in which over $100,000 is staked. Harnish loses his money and his mine but wins the mail contract of the district.

CHAPTER II.—Burning Daylight starts on his trip to deliver the mail with dogs and sledge. He tells his friends that the big Yukon gold strike will soon be on and he intends to be in it at the start. With Indian attendants and dogs he dips over the bank and down the frozen Yukon and in the gray light is gone.

CHAPTER III.—Harnish makes a sensationally rapid run across country with the mail, appears at the Tivoli and there is another characteristic celebration. He has made a record against cold and exhaustion and is now ready to join his friends in a dash to the new gold fields.

CHAPTER IV.—Harnish decides where the gold will be found in the up-river district and buys two tons of flour, which he declares will be worth its weight in gold before the season is over.

CHAPTER V.—When Daylight arrives with his heavy outfit of flour he finds the big flat desolate. A comrade discovers gold and Harnish reaps a rich harvest. He goes to Dawson, begins investing in corner lots and staking other miners and becomes the most prominent figure in the Klondike.

CHAPTER VI.—Harnish makes fortune after fortune. One lucky investment enables him to defeat a great combination of capitalists in a vast mining deal. He determines to return to civilization and gives a farewell celebration to his friends that is remembered as a kind of blaze of glory.

CHAPTER VII.—The papers are full of "The King of the Klondike," and Daylight is feted by the money magnates of the country. They take him into a big copper deal and the Alaskan pioneer finds himself amid the bewildering complications of high finance.

CHAPTER VIII.—Daylight is buncoed by the moneyed men and finds that he has been led to invest his eleven millions in a manipulated scheme. He goes to meet his disloyal business partners at their offices in New York City.

CHAPTER IX.—Confronting his partners with a revolver in characteristic frontier style, he threatens to kill them if his money is not returned. They are cowed into submission, return their stealings and Harnish goes back to San Francisco with his unimpaired fortune.

CHAPTER X.—Daylight meets his fate in Dede Mason, a pretty stenographer with a crippled brother, whom she cares for. Harnish is much attracted towards her and interested in her family affairs.

CHAPTER XI.—He becomes an element in large investments on the Pacific coast and gets into the political ring. For a rest he goes to inspect one of his properties in the country and momentarily is attracted back to the old life on the lonesome trail.

CHAPTER XII.

Instead of returning to the city on Monday, Daylight rented the butcher's horse for another day and crossed the bed of the valley to its eastern hills. As on the previous day, just for the joy of it, he followed cattle-trails at haphazard and worked his way up toward the summits. Coming out upon a wagon road that led upward, he followed it for several miles, emerging in a small, mountain-encircled valley, where half a dozen poor ranchers farmed the wine-grapes on the steep slopes. Beyond, the road pitched upward. Dense chaparral covered the exposed hillsides, but in the creases of the canyons huge spruce trees grew, and wild oats and flowers.

Late in the afternoon he broke through, and followed a well-defined trail down a dry canyon. The dry canyon gave place to one with a slender ribbon of running water. The trail ran into a wood-road, and the wood-road emerged across a small flat upon a slightly traveled country road. There were no farms in this immediate section, and no houses. The soil was meager, the bed-rock either close to the surface or constituting the surface itself. Manzanita and scrub-oak, however, flourished and walled the road on either side with a jungle growth. And cut a runway through this growth a man suddenly scuttled in a way that reminded Daylight of a rabbit.

He was a little man, in patched overalls; bareheaded, with a cotton shirt open at the throat and down the chest. The sun was ruddy-brown in his face, and by it his sandy hair was bleached on the ends to peroxide blonde. He signed to Daylight to halt, and held up a letter.

"If you're going to town, I'd be obliged if you mail this," he said.

"I sure will." Daylight put it into his coat pocket. "Do you live hereabouts, stranger?"

But the little man did not answer. He was gazing at Daylight in a surprised and steadfast fashion.

"I know you," the little man announced. "You're Elam Harnish—Burning Daylight, the papers call you. Am I right?"

Daylight nodded.

"Well, I'm glad I wrote that letter this afternoon," the little man went on, "or else I'd have missed seeing you. I've seen your photo in the papers many a time, and I've a good memory for faces. I recognized you at once. My name's Ferguson."

"Do you live hereabouts?" Daylight repeated his query.

"Oh, yes. I've got a little shack back here in the bush a hundred yards and a pretty spring, and a few fruit trees and berry bushes. Come in and take a look. And that spring is a dandy. You never tasted water like it. Come in and try it."

Walking and leading his horse, Daylight followed the quick-stepping, eager little man through the green tunnel and emerged abruptly upon the clearing, if clearing it might be called, where wild nature and man's earth-scratching were inextricably blended. It was a tiny nook in the hills, protected by the steep walls of a canyon mouth. Here were several large oaks, evidencing a richer soil. The erosion of ages from the hillside had slowly formed this deposit of fat earth. Under the oaks, almost buried in them,

"What Do You Think of It, Eh?"

stood a rough, unpainted cabin, the wide veranda of which, with chairs and hammocks, advertised an out-of-doors bedchamber. Daylight's keen eyes took in everything. The clearing was irregular, following the patches of the best soil, and every fruit tree and berry bush, and even each vegetable plant, had the water personally conducted to it. The tiny irrigation channels were everywhere, and along some of them the water was running.

Ferguson looked eagerly into his visitor's face for signs of approbation.

"What do you think of it, eh?"

"Hand-reared and manicured, every blessed tree," Daylight laughed, but the joy and satisfaction that shone in his eyes contented the little man.

"Why, d'ye know, I know every one of those trees as if they were sons of mine. I planted them, nursed them, fed them, and brought them up. Come on and peep at the spring."

"It's sure a hummer," was Daylight's verdict, after due inspection and sampling, as they turned back for the house.

The interior was a surprise. The cooking being done in the small, lean-to kitchen, the whole cabin formed a large living-room. A great table in the middle was comfortably littered with books and magazines. All the available wall space, from wall to ceiling, was occupied by filled bookshelves. It seemed to Daylight that he had never seen so many books assembled in one place. Skins of wildcat, 'coon and deer lay about on the pine-board floor.

Daylight found himself charmed and made curious by the little man. Why was he hiding away here in the chaparral, he and his books? So it was, when between them they had washed and wiped the dishes and put them away, and had settled down to a comfortable smoke, that Daylight put his question.

"Look here, Ferguson. Every since we got together, I've been casting about to find out what's wrong with you, to locate a screw loose somewhere, but I'll be danged if I've succeeded. What are you doing here, anyway?"

Ferguson frankly showed his pleasure at the questions.

"First of all," he began, "the doctors wound up by losing all hope for me. Gave me a few months at best, and that, after a course in sanitariums and a trip to Europe and another to Hawaii. They tried electricity and forced feeding and fasting. I was a graduate of about everything in the curriculum. They kept me poor with their bills, while I went from bad to worse. The trouble with me was twofold; first I was a born weakling; and next, I was living unnaturally—too much work, and responsibility and strain. I was managing editor of the Times-Tribune in San Francisco, and I wasn't strong enough for the strain. Of course my body went back on me, and my mind, too, for that matter. It had to be bolstered up with whisky, which wasn't good for it any more than was the living in clubs and hotels good for my stomach and the rest of me. So I quit, quit everything, absolutely, and came to live in the Valley of the Moon—that's the Indian name, you know, for Sonoma Valley. I lived in the lean-to the first year; then I built the cabin and sent for my books. I never knew what happiness was before, nor health. Look at me now and dare to tell me that I look forty-seven."

"I wouldn't give a day over forty," Daylight confessed.

"Yet the day I came here I looked nearer sixty, and that was fifteen years ago."

They talked along, and Daylight looked at the world from new angles. Here was a man, neither bitter nor cynical, who laughed at the city-dwellers and called them lunatics; a man who did not care for money, and in whom the lust for power had long since died.

It was not until ten o'clock that Daylight parted from Ferguson. As he rode along through the starlight, the idea came to him of buying the ranch on the other side of the valley. There was no thought in his mind of ever intending to live on it. His game was in San Francisco. But he liked the ranch, and as soon as he got back to the office he would open up negotiations with Hillard.

The time passed, and he played on at the game. San Francisco's attitude toward Daylight had undergone a change. While he, with his slashing buccaneer methods, was a distinct menace to the more orthodox financial gamblers, he was nevertheless so grave a menace that they were glad enough to let him alone. He had already taught them the excellence of letting a sleeping dog lie.

Dede Mason was still in the office. He had made no more overtures, discussed no more books. He had no active interest in her, and she was to him a pleasant memory of what had never happened, a joy, which, by his essential nature, he was barred from ever knowing. Yet, while his interest had gone to sleep and his energy was consumed in the endless battles he waged, he knew every trick of the light on her hair, every quick definite mannerism of movement, every line of her figure as expounded by her tailor-made gowns. Several times, six months or so apart, he had increased her salary, until now she was receiving ninety dollars a month. Beyond this he dared not go, though he got around it by making the work easier. This he had accomplished after her return from a vacation, by retaining her substitute as an assistant. Also, he had changed his office suite, so that now the two girls had a room by themselves. The more he saw of her, and the more he thought he knew of her, the more unapproachable did she seem to him. But since he had no intention of approaching her, this was anything but an unsatisfactory fact. He was glad he had her in his office, and hoped she'd stay, and that was about all.

Daylight did not improve with the passing years. The life was not good for him. He was growing stout and soft, and there was unwonted flabbiness in his muscles. The more he drank cocktails, the more he was compelled to drink in order to get the desired result, the inhibitions that eased him down from the concert pitch of his operations. And with this went wine, too, at meals, and the long drinks after dinner of Scotch and soda at the Riverside. Then, too, his body suffered from lack of exercise; and, from lack of decent human associations, his moral fibers were weakening. Never a man to hide anything, some of his escapades became public, such as speeding, and of joy-rides in his big red motor car down to San Jose with companions distinctly sporty—incidents that were narrated as good fun and comically in the newspapers.

CHAPTER XIII.

One Sunday, late in the afternoon, found Daylight across the bay in the Piedmont hills of Oakland. As usual, he was in a big motor car, though not his own, the guest of Swiftwater Bill, Luck's own darling, who had come down to spend the clean-up of the seventh fortune wrung from the frozen Arctic gravel. It was a merry party, and they had made a merry day of it, circling the bay from San Francisco around by San Jose and up to Oakland, having been thrice arrested for speeding, the third time, however, on the Haywards stretch, running away with their captor. Fearing that a telephone message to arrest them had been flashed ahead, they had turned into the back-road through the hills, and now, rushing in upon Oakland by a new route, were boisterously discussing what disposition they should make of the constable.

"We'll come out at Blair Park in ten minutes," one of the men announced. "Look here, Swiftwater, there's a cross-road right ahead, with lots of gates, but it'll take us back-country into Berkeley. Then we can come back into Oakland from the other side, sneak across on the ferry, and send the machine back around tonight with the chauffeur."

But Swiftwater Bill failed to see why he should not go into Oakland by way of Blair Park, and so decided.

The next moment, flying around a bend, the back-road they were not going to take appeared. Inside the gate, leaning out from her saddle and just closing it, was a young woman on a chestnut sorrel. With his first glimpse, Daylight felt there was something strangely familiar about her. The next moment, straightening up in the saddle with a movement he could not fail to identify, she put the horse into a gallop, riding away with her back toward them. It was Dede Mason—he remembered what Morrison had told him about her keeping a riding horse, and he was glad she had not seen him in this riotous company. Intervening trees at that moment shut her from view, and Swiftwater Bill plunged into the problem of disposing of their constable, while Daylight, leaning back with closed eyes, was still seeing Dede Mason gallop off down the country road.

On Monday morning, coming in for dictation, he looked at her with new interest, though he gave no sign of it; and the stereotyped business passed off in the stereotyped way. But the following Sunday found him on a horse himself, across the bay and riding through the Piedmont hills. He made a long day of it, but no glimpse did he catch of Dede Mason, though he even took the back-road of many gates and rode on into Berkeley. It had been a fruitless day, so far as she was concerned; and yet not entirely fruitless, for he had enjoyed the open air and the horse under him to such purpose that, on Monday, his instructions were out to the dealers to look for the best chestnut sorrel that money could buy. At odd times during the week he examined numbers of chestnut sorrels, tried several and was unsatisfied. It was not till Saturday that he came upon Bob. Daylight knew him for what he wanted the moment he laid eyes on him. A large horse for a riding animal, he was none too large for a big man like Daylight. In splendid condition, Bob's coat in the sunlight was a flame of fire, his arched neck a jewelled conflagration.

Daylight examined the mane and found it finer than any horse's hair he had ever seen. Also, its color was unusual in that it was almost auburn. While he ran his fingers through it, Bob turned his head and playfully nuzzled Daylight's shoulder.

"Saddle him up, and I'll try him," he told the dealer. "I wonder if he's used to spurs. No English saddle, mind. Give me a good Mexican and a curb bit—not too severe, seeing as he likes to rear."

Daylight superintended the preparations, adjusting the curb strap and the stirrup length, and doing the cinching. He shook his head at the martingale, but yielded to the dealer's advice to allow it to go on. And Bob, beyond spirited restlessness and a few playful attempts, gave no trouble. Nor in the hour's riding that followed, save for some permissible curveting and prancing, did he misbehave. Daylight was delighted; the purchase was immediately made; and Bob, with riding gear and personal equipment, was dispatched across the bay forthwith to take up his quarters in the stables of the Oakland Riding Academy.

The next day being Sunday, Daylight was away early, crossing on the ferry and taking with him Wolf, the leader of his sled team, the one dog which he had selected to bring with him when he left Alaska. Quest as he would through the Piedmont hills and along the many-gated back-road to Berkeley, Daylight saw nothing of Dede Mason and her chestnut sorrel. But he had little time for disappointment, for his own chestnut kept him busy. At the end of half an hour of goodness Daylight, lured into confidence, was riding along at a walk and rolling a cigarette, with slack knees and relaxed seat, the reins lying on the animal's neck. Bob whirled abruptly and with lightning swiftness pivoting on his hind legs, his fore legs just lifted clear of the ground. Daylight kept his seat, but, beyond a futile rein across the neck, did nothing to prevent the evolution.

"Well, Bob," he addressed the animal, at the same time wiping the sweat from his own eyes, "I'm free to confess that you're sure the blamedest all-fired quickest creature I ever saw. I guess the way to fix you is to keep the spur just a-touching—ah! you brute!"

For, the moment the spur touched him, his left hind leg had reached forward in a kick that struck the stirrup a smart blow. Several times, out of curiosity, Daylight attempted the spur, and each time Bob's hoof landed the stirrup. Then Daylight, following the horse's example of the unexpected, suddenly drove both spurs into him and reached him underneath with the quirt.

"You ain't never had a real licking before," he muttered, as Bob, thus rudely jerked out of the circle of his own impish mental processes, shot ahead.

BURNING DAYLIGHT.

Half a dozen times spurs and quirt bit into him, and then Daylight settled down to enjoy the magnificent gallop No longer punished, at the end of a half mile Bob eased down into a fast canter. Wolf, toiling the rear, was catching up, and everything was going nicely. And when, at last, Daylight decided that the horse had had enough, he turned him around abruptly and put him into a gentle canter on the forward track. After a time, he reined in to a stop to see if he were breathing painfully. Standing for a minute, Bob turned his head and nuzzled his rider's stirrup in a roguish, impatient way, as much as to intimate that it was time they were going on.

"Well, I'll be plumb gosh darned!" was Daylight's comment. "No ill-will, no grudge, no nothing—and after that lambasting! You're sure a hummer, Bob."

He had taken a liking to the animal, and repented not of his bargain. He realized that Bob was not vicious nor mean, the trouble being that he was bursting with high spirits and was endowed with more than the average horse's intelligence. It was the spirits and the intelligence, combined with inordinate roguishness, that made him what he was. What was required to control him was a strong hand, with tempered sternness and yet with the requisite touch of brutal dominance.

Throughout the week Daylight found himself almost as much interested in Bob as in Dede; and, not being in the thick of any big deals, he was probably more interested in both of them than in the business game. Bob's trick of whirling was of special moment to him. How to overcome it—that was the thing. Suppose he did meet with Dede out in the hills; and suppose by some lucky stroke of fate, he should manage to be riding alongside of her; then that whirl of Bob's would be most disconcerting and embarrassing. He was not particularly anxious for her to see him thrown forward on Bob's neck. On the other hand, suddenly to leave her and go dashing down the back-track, plying quirt and spurs, wouldn't do, either. What was wanted was a method wherewith to prevent that lightning whirl. He must stop the animal before it got around. The reins would not do this. Neither would the spurs. Remained the quirt. But how to accomplish it? Bob always whirled to the right. Very well. He would double the quirt in his hand, and, the instant of the whirl, that double quirt would rap Bob on the nose. The horse didn't live, after it once learned the lesson, that would whirl in the face of the doubled quirt.

More keenly than ever, during that week in the office, did Daylight realize that he had no social, nor even human contacts with Dede. The situation was such that he could not ask her the simple question whether or not she was going riding next Sunday. Thus he found another card in the hand the mad god had dealt him. How important that card was to become he did not dream, yet he decided that it was a pretty good card.

Sunday came, and Bob, out in the Piedmont hills, behaved like an angel. His goodness at times was of the spirited, prancing order, but otherwise he was a lamb. But no Dede did Daylight encounter. He vainly circled about among the hill roads, and in the afternoon took the steep grade over the divide of the second range and dropped into Maraga Valley. Just after passing the foot of the descent, he heard the hoof beats of a cantering horse. It was from ahead and coming toward him. What if it were Dede? He turned Bob around and started to return at a walk. The canter came nearer, but he faced straight ahead until he heard the horse behind check to a walk. Then he glanced over his shoulder. It was Dede. The recognition was quick, and, with her, accompanied by surprise. What more natural thing than that, partly turning his horse, he should wait till she caught up with him; and that, when abreast, they should continue abreast on up the grade? He could have sighed with relief. The thing was accomplished, and so easily. Greetings had been exchanged; here they were side by side and going in the same direction with miles and miles ahead of them.

He noted that her eye was first for the horse and next for him.

"Oh, what a beauty!" she had cried at sight of Bob. From the shining light in her eyes, and the face filled with delight, he would scarcely have believed that it belonged to the young woman he had known in the office, the young woman with the controlled, subdued office face.

"I didn't know you rode," was one of her first remarks. "I imagined you were wedded to get-there-quick machines."

Thus, and to his great relief, they launched on a topic of mutual interest. He told her about Bob's tricks, and of the whirl and his scheme to overcome it; and she agreed that horses had to be handled with a certain rational severity, no matter how much one loved them. There was Mab, which she had had for eight years, and which she had had to break of stall-kicking. The process had been painful for Mab, but it had cured her.

"You've ridden a lot," Daylight said.

"I really can't remember the first time I was on a horse," she told him. "I was born on a ranch, you know, and they couldn't keep me away from the horses."

And thereat she told him more of her ranch life in the days before her father died. And Daylight was hugely pleased with himself. They were getting acquainted. The conversation had not lagged in the full half hour they had been together. When she talked, he listened and followed her, and yet all the while he was following his own thoughts and impressions as well. It was a nervy thing for her to do, this riding astride, and he didn't know, after all, whether he liked it or not. His ideas of women were prone to be old-fashioned; they were the ones he had imbibed in the early day, frontier life of his youth, when no woman was seen on anything but a side-saddle. He had grown up to the tacit fiction that women on horseback were not bipeds. It came to him with a shock, this sight of her so manlike in her saddle. But he had to confess that the sight looked good to him just the same.

CHAPTER XIV.

Another Sunday man and horse and dog roved the Piedmont hills. And again Daylight and Dede rode together. But this time her surprise at meeting him was tinctured with suspicion; or rather, her surprise was of another order. The previous Sunday had been quite accidental, but his appearing the second time among her favorite haunts hinted of more than the fortuitous. Daylight was made to feel that she suspected him, and he, remembering that he had seen a big rock quarry near Blair Park, stated offhand that he was thinking of buying it. His one-time investment in a brickyard had put the idea into his head—an idea that he decided was a good one, for it enabled him to suggest that she ride along with him to inspect the quarry.

So several hours he spent in her company, in which she was much the same girl as before, natural, unaffected, light-hearted, smiling and laughing, a good fellow, talking horses with unflagging enthusiasm, making friends with the crusty-tempered Wolf, and expressing a desire to ride Bob, whom she declared she was more in love with than ever. Against his better judgment, Daylight gave in, and, on an unfrequented stretch of road, changed saddles and bridles.

"Remember, he's greased lightning," he warned, as he helped her to mount.

She nodded, while Bob pricked up his ears to the knowledge that he had a strange rider on his back. The fun came quickly enough—too quickly for Dede, who found herself against Bob's neck as he pivoted around and bolted the other way. Daylight followed on her horse and watched. He saw her check the animal quickly to a standstill, and immediately, with rein across neck and a decisive prod of the left spur, whirl him back the way he had come and almost as swiftly.

"Get ready to give him the quirt on the nose," Daylight called.

He hung almost gleefully upon her actions in anticipation of what the fractious Bob was going to get. And Bob got it, on his next whirl, or attempt, rather, for he was no more than half-way around when the quirt met him smack on his tender nose. There and then, in his bewilderment, surprise and pain, his fore feet, just skimming the road, dropped down.

"Great!" Daylight applauded. "A couple more will fix him. "He's too smart not to know when he's beaten."

Again Bob tried. But this time he was barely quarter around when the doubled quirt on his nose compelled him to drop his fore feet to the road. Then, with neither rein nor spur, but by the mere threat of the quirt, she straightened him out.

"I Could Ride With One of the Clerks Without Remark, but With You—No."

Dede looked triumphantly at Daylight.

"Let me give him a run?" she asked.

Daylight nodded, and she shot down the road. He watched her out of sight around the bend, and watched till she came into sight returning. She certainly could sit her horse, was his thought, and she was a sure enough hummer. God, she was the wife for a man! Made most of them look pretty slim. And to think of her hammering all week at a typewriter. That was no place for her. She should be a man's wife, taking it easy, with silks and satins and diamonds (his frontier notion of what befitted a wife beloved), and dogs and horses, and such things.

But the quarry was doomed to pass out of his plans for a time, for on the following Sunday he rode alone. No Dede on a chestnut sorrel came across the back-road from Berkeley that day, nor the day a week later. As the third week drew to a close and another desolate Sunday confronted him, Daylight resolved to speak, office or no office. And as was his nature, he went simply and directly to the point. She had finished her work with him, and was gathering her note pad and pencils together to depart, when he said:

"Oh, one more thing, Miss Mason, and I hope you won't mind my being frank and straight out. You've struck me right along as a sensible-minded girl, and I don't think you'll take offense at what I'm going to say. You know how long you've been in the office—it's years, now, several of them, anyway; and you know I've always been straight and aboveboard with you. I've never what you call—presumed. Because you were in my office I've tried to be more careful than if—if you wasn't in my office—you understand. But just the same, it don't make me any the less human. I'm a lonely sort of a fellow—don't take that as a bid for kindness. What I mean by it is to try and tell you just how much those two rides with you have meant. And now I hope you won't mind my just asking why you haven't been out riding the last two Sundays?"

She played nervously with a pencil for a time, as if debating her reply, while he waited patiently.

"This riding," she began; "it's not what they call the right thing. I leave it to you. You know the world. That's the trouble. It's what the world would have to say about me and my employer meeting regularly and riding in the hills on Sundays. It's funny, but it's so. I could ride with one of the clerks without remark, but with you—no."

"Look here, Miss Mason," said Daylight. "I know you don't like this talking over of things in the office. Neither do I. It's part of the whole thing, I guess; a man ain't supposed to talk anything but business with his stenographer. Will you ride with me next Sunday, and we can talk it over thoroughly then and reach some sort of a conclusion. Out in the hills is the place where you can talk something besides business. I guess you've seen enough of me to know I'm pretty square. I—I do honor and respect you, and. . . and all that, and I . . . " He was beginning to flounder, and the hand that rested on the desk blotter was visibly trembling. He strove to pull himself together. "I just want to harder than anything ever in my life before. I—I—I can't explain myself, but I do, that's all. Will you—Just next Sunday? Tomorrow?"

Nor did he dream that her low acquiescence was due, as much as anything else, to the beads of sweat on his forehead, his trembling hand and his all too-evident general distress.

"Of course, there's no way of telling what anybody wants from what they say." Daylight rubbed Bob's rebellious ear with his quirt and pondered with dissatisfaction the words he had just uttered. They did not say what he had meant them to say. "What I'm driving at is that you say flatfooted that you won't meet me again, and give your reasons, but how am I to know they are your real reasons? Mebbe you just don't want to get acquainted with me, and won't say so for fear of hurting my feelings. Don't you see? I'm the last man in the world to shove in where I'm not wanted. And if I thought you didn't care a whoop to see anything more of me, why I'd clear out so blamed quick you couldn't see me for smoke."

It had been a happy day. Daylight had met her on the back-road from Berkeley, and they had had hours together. It was only now, with the day drawing to a close and with them approaching the gate of the road to Berkeley, that he had broached the important subject.

She began her answer to his last contention, and he listened gratefully.

"But suppose, just suppose, that the reasons I have given are the only ones?—that there is no question of my not wanting to know you?"

"Then I'd go on urging like Sam Scratch," he said quickly. "Because, you see, I've always noticed that folks that incline to anything are much more open to hearing the case stated. But if you did have that other season up your sleeve, if you didn't want to know me, if—if, well, if you thought my feelings oughtn't to be hurt just because you had a good job with me. . . ." Here, his calm consideration of a possibility was swamped by the fear that it was an actuality, and he lost the thread of his reasoning. "Well, anyway, all you have to do is to say the word and I'll clear out. And with no hard feelings; it would be just a case of bad luck for me. So be honest, Miss Mason, please, and tell me if that's the reason—I almost got a hunch that it is."

"Oh, but that isn't fair," she cried. "You give me the choice of lying to you and hurting you in order to protect myself by getting rid of you, or of throwing away my protection by telling you the truth, for then you, as you said yourself, would stay and urge."

Daylight smiled grimly with satisfaction.

"I'm real glad, Miss Mason, real glad for those words."

"But they won't serve you," she went on hastily. "They can't serve you. I refuse to let them. This is our last ride, and . . . here is the gate."

Ranging her mare alongside, she bent, slid the catch, and followed the opening gate.

"No; please, no," she said, as Daylight started to follow.

Humbly acquiescent, he pulled Bob back, and the gate swung shut between them. But there was more to say, and she did not ride on.

"Listen, Miss Mason," he said, in a low voice that shook with sincerity; "I want to assure you of one thing. I'm not just trying to fool around with you. I like you, I want you, and I was never more earnest in my life. There's nothing wrong in my intentions or anything like that. What I mean is strictly honorable—"

But the expression of her face made

Drew the Crowd.

It was the ambition of the proprietor of the moving picture show to get a record house that week. The first two nights he failed to get it. On the third night his unparalleled attractions were advertised thus through a megaphone at the hall door:

"Ladies and gentlemen: Every picture I shall show you tonight has cost the life of a film actor. In the bridge wrecking scene two men were drowned, in the railroad collision one man was crushed to death, and the jungle scene three men were fearfully mangled by wild beasts.

"Reprehensible tactics to mention those harrowing details," said the proprietors of other shows; nevertheless they achieved the manager's purpose, for the next day the house was packed at every performance

Remarkable Work.

"What do you regard as the most remarkable work in the English language?" "Well," replied Miss Cayenne, "the most remarkable work in the English language that I know of is the way some Englishmen pronounce it."

Texas.

The area of Europe is about 3,700,000 square miles, while that of Texas is 265,000 square miles. But the Lone Star State is not to be "sneezed" at as an empire It is bigger than France, bigger than the whole German Empire, bigger than Austro-Hungary, bigger twice over than the United Kingdom It is rich in natural resources, and if settled as thickly as little Belgium it would have a population of 265,000,000, or nearly three times the present population of the entire United States

A Precious Rosary.

A miner forwarded from Alaska to Sister Mary Claire of St. John, N. B., a rosary made of linked gold nuggets, which is to be presented to Cardinal Gibbons on the occasion of his golden jubilee in October. The only other rosary of the kind is said to be in the possession of Pope Pius X.

PALMER NEWS.

Large Number of Tramps.

Residents Near Tenneyville Complain of Their Depredations.

The change in the place at which the tanks of the Boston and Albany freight locomotives are filled from the tank house west of the passenger station to the new tank house near Tenneyville is not appreciated by the people of that section, when the tramp question is taken into consideration. When the trains stop west of the station the "Glen" made an ideal rendezvous for hoboes. The spot was secluded and neither they nor the citizens were in much danger of molestation. But at Tenneyville it is different. Barred from dropping off or jumping the trains at the Glen because they do not stop there, the natural place for the gentry of the road is the tank house stop at Tenneyville, and residents in that vicinity complain much of the depredations suffered by them. Gardens are raided and other property interfered with, and the number of itinerants who hang about is too numerous to afford a large degree of comfort. The police have been complained to, but as the offenders do not usually stop long, taking the next freight out of town, it is hard to apprehend them. Yesterday afternoon however, two who had robbed a potato patch and were cooking their spoils with a fire built under the Breckenridge bridge, were gathered in by Officer Crimmins and in the district court this morning were fined $6 each and being unable to pay were sent up.

Vaudeville at Forest Lake.

Two Shows Weekly. Free Balloon Ascensions For Next Week.

Vaudeville has been on the boards at Forest Lake this week, with change of program yesterday. The program is a good one, composed of the following acts: Delmar and Delmar, in a riot of laughs; Pryor and Addison, singers, dancers and musical specialties; Colide and Melrose, knockabout acrobats; and Marille, contortionist. Added to these is a free act, Bonetti's slide for life across the lake on a slender wire. There will be a complete change of program next Monday, and the free feature will be Gowdy's balloon ascensions, every afternoon and evening, with single, double and triple parachute drops. A new orchestra—Mellon's singing of Worcester—will play for dancing to-night, and Plant & Wedge's of Spencer will play to-morrow.

Was Former Railroad Freight House.

The building which for about 40 years was the home of the Journal on Main street, was torn down this week to make room for a new business block. The building was originally a freight house of the Boston and Albany railroad, one of two small structures which stood on the south side of the tracks about opposite the present water tank just east of the station. The business of the road having outgrown the quarters there a new freight yard was established on the present site and the buildings sold. One was bought by Gordon M. Fiske, the founder and then proprietor of the Journal, and it was moved to the Main street location on Sunday, when it could be taken across the tracks without delaying trains.

Rain Does Much Good.

Rain fell nearly all day Sunday much to the gratification of garden owners and producers of "garden sass" of all kinds. Vegetation was suffering badly for need of moisture, and it got 1.42 inches during the day, an unusual amount of rainfall. More fell Tuesday night, and crop prospects are consequently very much brighter.

Warned Against Woman With Bad Checks.

Officer T. J. Crimmins received word from Chief Buckley of Ware Wednesday to be on the lookout for a woman who was supposed to be attempting to pass bogus checks in that town. No trace of the woman was found here. It was found later that she had victimized two Ware merchants.

H. L. Nason of Boston has taken a position in the insurance office of George Ezekiel.

Heenehan---Donovan.

Palmer School Teacher Bride of New York Man.

A pretty wedding took place in St. Thomas' church Wednesday morning at 9 o'clock, when Miss Florence M. Heenehan, daughter of Mrs. Elizabeth Heenehan of Central street, became the bride of John T. Donovan of New York. The marriage ceremony was performed by Rev. M. J. O'Connell, who officiated at the nuptial high mass which followed. Mrs. D. E. O'Connor presided at the organ. There was a large attendance of relatives and friends of the bride and groom at the church.

The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Elizabeth I. Heenehan, and Daniel J. Sweeney of Brooklyn, N. Y., acted as best man. The bride's gown was white crepe meteor over messaline, cut en traine, and caught with pearls. She wore a veil trimmed with princess lace and caught with lilies of the valley and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. The bridesmaid wore a gown of white lace over yellow messaline, with hat to match, and she carried a bouquet of sweet peas. The groom's gift to the bride was a set of diamond earrings, to the bridesmaid a diamond brooch and to the best man an Elk button set with diamonds and rubies.

After the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride on Central street, O. Patrell of Springfield catering.

The bride is one of Palmer's popular young women. She is a graduate of Palmer high school, class of 1907, and of Bridgewater normal school, class of 1909. For the past three years she has been a teacher in the Palmer grammar school. The bridegroom is superintendent of the John Hancock insurance company of New York city. The couple received many beautiful and valuable gifts.

After an extended wedding trip through Canada, Mr. and Mrs. Donovan will reside in New York.

New Sign is Plainly Seen.

Illuminated Sign Advertising Palmer is Working Finely.

The large electric-lighted sign which has been erected at Blanchardville advertising the advantages of Palmer as a place of business is in working order, and already travelers on the main line of the Boston and Albany railroad between Springfield and Boston are remarking on its attractiveness. It will not be long before the same can be said of the supplementary sign that is being erected on the factory site offered as an inducement to prospective settlers, as this sign is to be built and illuminated in the same manner as the one at Blanchardville.

Much credit is due Mr. Marcy, who has generously offered to present this lot to any desirable manufacturer, and the Central Massachusetts Electric company, for the erection of these electrical signs. They express the progressive spirit of Palmer and should surely result in bringing the attention of manufacturers to the fact that Palmer is a progressive, wide-awake town, endowed with all natural as well as artificial advantages. Palmer enjoys the distinction of being the only town in this section to have two signs.

An Unlisted Palmer Veteran.

Man Who Served in Civil War Never Credited to the Town.

Recent discovery has been made of a Palmer man who served through the Civil war but who has never been included in Palmer's list of veterans.

Thomas Ashton was born in Hindley, Lancashire, England, August 8, 1841, and came to Three Rivers with his parents when he was six years old. He received his education in the Palmer schools and remained here until 1861, when he enlisted, October 31, 1861, at the Charlestown navy yard in the U. S. marine corps. He was honorably discharged November 1, 1865. His parents having removed from Palmer during his service he did not come back here to reside, but went elsewhere. He has lived in Willimantic, Ct., from 1872 to date. When Mr. E. B. Gates compiled the list of Palmer veterans Mr. Ashton's name did not appear because of a lack of knowledge of the above facts, which are now published to give him the proper credit.

O. P. ALLEN.

Has Acquired New Territory.

The Central Massachusetts Electric company has bought out the Belchertown Electric Light company and is building a distribution line in that town.

The Wright Wire company finds itself short of houses for its employes, and in another column announces that it will lease for a term of years any houses which may be built in the wire mill district. Further information may be obtained of the superintendent, Mr. Oakes.

Eighteen members of the Breckenridge family met in Palmer Saturday. Those from out of town were Charles H. Breckenridge, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Breckenridge, Miss Belle Breckenridge and Robert D. Breckenridge of Fitchburg, John A. Breckenridge of Woodbridge, N. J., Mr. and Mrs. William E. Breckenridge and Harvey K. Breckenridge of Mount Vernon, N. Y.

Poor Electric Car Service.

Bad For Several Days. Complete Shutdown This Morning.

The electric car service has been somewhat of an uncertainty the past week or more, due, Superintendent Atkins says, to a lack of power. The cars have run anywhere up to an hour late on the Springfield line, and to a somewhat lesser extent on the shorter runs. The trouble is said to be at the power plant, where extensive repairs are being made. Yesterday afternoon trouble developed about 2 o'clock in one of the engines, and the running time of the cars was problematical for the rest of the day. This morning there was no power from 8 until 9.15, through trouble with two of the engines, this being occasioned by the acts of workmen employed on the repairs, it is said. Since the machines were started up again they have run all right.

Tax Collector Hawkes has been sending out the tax bills this week.

Mrs. F. C. Rayne, formerly of Palmer, died at her home Monday morning in Somerville.

A large number of persons in this vicinity took advantage of the cheap excursion rates offered by the Central Vermont railroad to visit Montreal Wednesday.

The license of Thomas J. Collins of Palmer to operate an automobile has been revoked by the state highway commission. Collins was recently fined in the district court for reckless driving of a machine.

T. F. Edmonds, who has for several years conducted a dining room, bakery and ice cream manufactory in the Lynde block on Main street, is to go into other business and offers his present business for sale.

The Woman's Relief Corps will entertain the Hampden and Hampshire county association September 19. The gathering will be held in Memorial Hall at 10.30 in the forenoon, dinner being served after the meeting.

The funeral of the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Banks of School street was held last Friday afternoon, with burial in St. Thomas' cemetery. There were a large number of floral tributes from neighbors and friends.

Palmer lodge of Odd Fellows are planning to attend the big celebration in Springfield September 6, when there is to be a monster parade in the evening, followed by a banquet; grand and supreme officers are expected to be present.

There will be a whist party at the Country club house next Wednesday evening. The committee in charge is Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Bradway, Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Flynt, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Fenton and Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Kendall.

Principal Gray of the high school will be in his office in the high school building next Monday and Tuesday evening, from 7 to 9, to confer with parents of high school pupils, particularly those just entering, in regard to the selection of studies.

It is expected that bids for the construction of the macadam road which the town is to build will be called for about September 1. The work o' the engineer is finished, and every foot of the proposed improvement is now on paper in the shape of working plans.

Among the Churches.

Preaching in the Advent chapel next Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock by Rev. Albert C. Johnson of Westfield. All are invited.

Services in the Baptist church Sunday as follows: 10.15, men's prayer meeting; 10.45, morning worship and sermon; subject, "Prepared way;" 12, Bible school; 7, evening service of praise with address on the subject "First things first." The pastor, Rev. J. H. Palmer will preach.

Next Tuesday evening at 7.30 a meeting of the young people of the Baptist church will be held to complete the organization of the proposed society for the development of the social life in the church. All the young people and those interested in this movement are urged to be present at this meeting for at this time the report of the committee on constitution will be given and the form of organization adopted.

Bondsville 3—Three Rivers 2.

Bondsville defeated Three Rivers, 3 to 2, Saturday. Bennett pitched a fine game, allowing four hits and striking out 17 men. Harrington of the New England league pitched for Three Rivers and did well, though not well enough to win. Bondsville won in the ninth after two were out on Bennett's double and a single by Keyes. The latter's batting featured the contest, as the grand old man of the league got four hits out of five times at bat. The score:

WARE.

Found Dead in Bed.

Mrs. James Sullivan was found dead in bed at her home on Church street Friday morning by her grandnephew, Louis Morris, who went to call on her. Her husband went out to pick berries about 7.30, and left his wife supposedly asleep, not wishing to disturb her. He did not learn of her death until his return about 1 o'clock, and it was a terrible shock to him. Medical Examiner W. W. Miner pronounced death due to heart failure. Mrs. Sullivan had lived in Ware for a number of years, her maiden name being Ellen Brosnahan. She leaves besides her husband one sister, Mrs. Maurice O'Connor of Maple street and one brother, Thomas Brosnahan of Pleasant street. The funeral was held in All Saints' church Sunday afternoon and burial was in St. William's cemetery.

Was Painfully Injured.

Amie Paul, 19, son of Peter Paul, formerly of Ware, but now living just over the Palmer line in the direction of West Warren, was badly injured yesterday afternoon. He is employed on the Palmer highways and soon after noon he was told by Foreman D. A. Mahoney to get a pair of horses ready for the afternoon's work. He walked out on the pole between the horses, when they suddenly took fright and ran. They plunged into a wire fence and threw Paul between the wagon and a tree. He was taken to the office of Dr. W. W. Miner, where it was found he had sustained a fractured right wrist and two broken ribs on the right side, besides various bruises. He was removed to the Ware hospital.

Sheehan officiating. After a trip to New York the couple will be at home in Hartford after September 15, where the groom is employed.

Boy Sent to Lyman School.

Earl Beaubien, aged 14, was before Judge Davis in a juvenile session Friday morning. He was committed to the Lyman school at Westboro. The boy admitted having taken $272 from the pocket of Alfred Provost's clothes while the latter was in swimming in Flat brook Tuesday.

Misses Elizabeth Potts and Nellie Higgins are enjoying an outing at Far Rockaway Beach.

Mrs. M. G. Womack and son, Burnett of Spartanburg, S. C., and Mrs. William Bloomer of Walden, N. Y., are visiting at the home of Senator John H. Schoonmaker.

The committee in charge of purchasing a piece of motor-driven apparatus last Saturday night voted to buy a combination pump and chemical of the Webb Manufacturing Company of St. Louis, Mo., for $7650.

Principal Henry F. Cutler of Mount Hermon school was recently presented a residence by nearly 1000 graduates in recognition of his 20-years' work at the school. The house is valued at $22,000, and is known as Ford hall. Principal Cutler is well known in Ware, being a cousin of George B. Cutler of Pleasant street and having married Miss Carrie B. Cutler of Ware.

BELCHERTOWN.

Young Men In Court.

Ten young men, Omer Contre of Granby, Roy Bardwell of Belchertown, Michael Garvey, Henry Hoag Jr., Ralph Dodge of Granby, Clarence Shaw, Charles McCane of Granby, Jerry Riley, Joseph Giroux and John Wood were brought before the district court in Northampton yesterday morning on a charge of disturbing the peace at Belchertown on Sunday, the 11th. Deputy Sheriff Barton of Belchertown brought them into court. Besides being charged with disturbing the peace, three of the young men were charged with drunkenness. The seven against whom the charge was disturbing the peace were released, but the three charged with drunkenness. Michael Garvey, Henry Hoag Jr. and Jerry Riley were fined $10 apiece. The prosecution of the "gang" was instituted by the selectmen of Belchertown.

There was a small forest fire Saturday afternoon on land of James W. Carmody. The blaze started from burning brush. Deputy Forest Warden Harold Ryder was in charge and called out nine men. No serious damage was done.

A regular meeting of the Grange was held Friday evening. Mrs. Susan S. Burleigh was elected a member of the executive committee in place of W. H. Pease, who resigned. The executive committee organized with W. J. Sessions as chairman. Committees were appointed by the worthy master to prepare for the Pomona grange meetings in September.

STEADFAST CONFIDENCE

The Following Statement Should Form Conclusive Proof of Merit to Every Journal Reader.

Could stronger proof of the merit of any remedy be desired than the statements of grateful endorsers who say their confidence has been undiminished by lapse of time? These are the kind of statements that are appearing constantly in your local papers for Doan's Kidney Pills. They are twice-told and confirmed with new enthusiasm. Can any reader doubt the following? It's from a resident of this locality.

Mrs. G. H. Taylor 23 C. Church St., Thorndyke, Mass., says: "I willingly confirm all I said in praise of Doan's Kidney Pills when I publicly endorsed them some years ago. I was in misery from kidney complaint and I was unable to turn in bed without grasping something for support. I was rarely free from pain and I knew that something must be done. Being advised to try Doan's Kidney Pills I obtained a box and the first few doses had a beneficial effect. I continued taking this remedy and before long I was free from pain and enjoying good health."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

THORNDIKE.

IS NOW NEW YORK LAWYER.

James M. Sullivan, Former Thorndike Boy, Prominent in Murder Case.

James M. Sullivan, a former Thorndike boy but now a lawyer in New York, is very much in the limelight at the present time in connection with the arrest of the gunmen who are alleged to have been responsible for the recent murder of Herman Rosenthal, the gambler. Mr. Sullivan is well known in the home of his boyhood, and much interest has been manifested here in the murder case because of his connection with the men who have been indicted. The New York Journal of Finance of the 10th of August had the following:

"Amid all the sordid circumstances surrounding the murder of Rosenthal and the revelations that have been made concerning the relations said to exist between the gamblers and certain members of the police force, the action of Mr. James M. Sullivan, the well-known attorney of this city, stands out in striking relief. Readers of the daily press are aware that it was mainly through the efforts of Mr. Sullivan that the confessions of Rose and others of the prisoners were obtained, and the services which, without any sacrifice of his client's interests he has rendered the cause of justice, cannot be over-estimated. Mr. Sullivan occupies a prominent position at the New York bar and is recognized as a lawyer of ability and experience. He has frequently been connected with important cases, which he has conducted in a manner to justify his high reputation and the confidence reposed in him. His practice, which is an important one, embraces all courts."

William Mongeau is passing a vacation in New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Carter are out of town for a vacation.

Alphonse Dimo left on Tuesday for Montreal for a short stay.

Mr. and Mrs. H. E. W. Clark spent part of the week in the eastern part of the state, making the trip in their automobile.

Mr. Clifford of Worcester has returned home after passing a few days in town as guest of his son, Timothy J. Clifford.

Misses Lillian and Cecelia Tray of Bosford, Ct., have been visiting here for a few days as guests of their brother John.

Mr. and Mrs. Arcine Bechard and daughter left Wednesday for a visit in Canada. They will visit Montreal, St. Caesar, and St. John before their return.

Clarence Gebo, who was injured some time ago by being caught in the elevator at No. 2 mill dye house, is able to be about again after being confined to his home for weeks.

The banns of marriage were announced at St. Mary's church Sunday between Miss Annie Brosnan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Brosnan, and Mr. Sheehan of Panama.

The six-months-old son of Mr. and Mrs. John Gola died Sunday. The funeral was held Wednesday from St. Peter's church, with burial in St. Anne's cemetery, Three Rivers.

There will be a meeting of the Congregational church society in the vestry next Monday evening at 7.30, and on Thursday evening, after the regular prayer meeting, there will be a special business meeting.

THREE RIVERS.

CO-OPERATIVE STORE.

One Will Be Opened in This Village Soon. Officers Elected.

For several weeks there has been considerable discussion over the matter of establishing a co-operative store in this village.

An association has been formed to operate such a store, and the subscribers have organized, elected officers and have applied for a charter. The store in Shaw's block on Main street, recently occupied by N. A. Senton, has been engaged and will be stocked and opened to the public as soon as the company receives its charter. The subscribers held their first meeting in Recreation Hall and elected the following officers: Directors, A. S. Geer, T. D. Frame, J. H. Trickett, C. S. Ruggles, P. C. Daly, C. E. Bamford, A. F. Calkins, J. J. Mills, Walter Ritchie; clerk, Alphonse C. Abare; treasurer, C. E. Tannebring. The directors, following their election, met and organized with C. S. Ruggles as president, P. C. Daly, vice president, and Edward Forte, general manager.

Material For Water Mains Here.

Three Rivers is finally sure of fire protection of its own. The material has been procured for the fire district's new water mains and hydrants, and advertisements are out for bids for building the line. The work will undoubtedly be completed in a short time after the contract is awarded and hose and other paraphernalia has been bought, so that fire protection will become a reality before cold weather sets in.

BONDSVILLE.

SULLIVAN—BELISLE.

Marriage of Two Well Known and Popular Young People.

The marriage of Miss Bridget Sullivan, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Sullivan, and Phileas Belisle, son of the late Xavier Belisle, was solemnized Tuesday morning at 7.30 in St. Bartholomew's church. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Thomas Kennedy. Both young people have lived all their lives in Bondsville and are popular in Catholic society. The attendants were Miss Kitty Sears of Chicopee, cousin of the bride, who was bridesmaid, and the best man was Michael Sullivan, brother of the bride. The single ring service was used. The bride was gowned in cream satin, with cream lace yoke and pearl trimmings; she wore a white hat and carried a white ivory prayer book. The traveling suit was brown tailor made. The bride's gift to the bridesmaid was a ruby ring, while the groom presented his best man with a watch fob. Immediately following the ceremony a wedding breakfast for the immediate relatives was served at the bride's home on High street. Mr. and Mrs. Belisle left on the 9.18 train for a short wedding trip to some of the beaches. After their return they will reside for the present with Mrs. Belisle's parents. The wedding gifts consisted of linen, cut glass and silverware. Mr. Belisle has for a number of years been a barber, and occupies the shop of his late father.

Substitute for Rubber.

One of the many proposed substitutes for rubber is obtainedd from the soya or Manchurian bean, which resembles the kidney bean, and has been introduced from Japan and the east Indies into the southern United States. A rubber-like product that can be vulcanized is obtained by treating the bean with nitric acid, alkalies and great heat.

SEEMINGLY NO THRILL LEFT

Tales of Travelers Altogether Devoid of Attraction in These Days of the Telegraph.

It is a pity in some ways that travel, even to the uttermost parts of the earth, has become in this age so much a matter of course Not so long ago a first sight of London or Paris would bring a thrill to an American, and as he entered into old world culture and felt its settled traditions, he was apt to be lifted out of himself by constant surprises But now, with hundreds of periodicals recounting and actually picturing the march of events with the sighs of Persia and the outcries of China heard here almost as soon as they are uttered travel and foreign acquaintance have lost much of their romance and refreshment Set an intelligent young American down in front of the Taj Mahal and its contour will seem about as familiar to him as the Metropolitan tower Nor do we care to have returning travelers unburdening their experiences to us or showering us with kodak pictures We read of and look at the rest of the world in the same way in which we get a reckoning of our country's doings at our morning or evening coffee. After all it takes less than half an hour to send a message around the world, and why should the man who has been to Shanghai foist his stale news upon us? If he has anything worth saying, let him write a book and we will see whether we care to read it. Youths just out of college who have a craving for real adventure no longer think of gratifying it in travel; they seek employment in a coal mine or become cowboys

Good Water Pan for Pets

A good water pan for pets or poultry is a round, tin cake-pan, with a cone in the center, commonly known as a "Turk's-head." A stick driven through the cone into the ground makes it impossible for an animal to overturn the pan.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Curious.

A curious thing about automobiles is that whenever one of them turns turtle a chorus girl or two are likely to be found under it.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Sullivan—Hall.

A pretty wedding took place in St. Patrick's church Saturday morning at 10 o'clock, when Miss Marion H. Sullivan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Timothy J. Sullivan of North Main street, was united in marriage to George H. Hall of Brattleboro. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Thomas O'Keefe. The bridesmaid was Mary V. Sullivan, a sister of the bride, and the best man was Frank Ryan of Brattleboro. The wedding march was played by Miss Pearl Leahy. The bride's gown was of white lace over messaline and she carried an arm bouquet of white roses. The bridesmaid's gown was blue chiffon over messaline, and she carried an arm bouquet of pink asters. Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride. The bride's traveling dress was of brown diagonal cheviot and she wore a white felt hat. The bridegroom's gift to the bride was a gold pendant set with pearls. His gift to the best man was gold cuff links. The bride's gift to the bridesmaid was a chain and pendant set with diamond chips. The bride is a very popular young woman in Monson and a graduate of Monson Academy in the class of 1911. The groom is a graduate of Brattleboro high school and Albany business school, and is employed as baggagemaster on the Central Vermont railroad. After a short wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Hall will reside in Brattleboro.

Making Repairs on Dam.

The large granite dam at the No. 3 Ellis mill, which was constructed but six years ago, is being repaired under the direction of S. M. Stebbins. Last winter it leaked to such an extent that a cofferdam was constructed to protect the main one. At the time the dam was constructed it was thought advisable to leave the former one, which was three feet back of the present dam, and this is thought to be the cause of the trouble. It is being torn out and the space filled in with gravel. A three-foot iron waste pipe to draw off the pond is also being put in.

Arrested For Stealing Motorcycle.

Word has been received from Rochester, N. Y., that Charles May, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. R. May of this town, is in the Monroe, N. Y., county jail, where he is held on the charge of stealing a motorcycle. The family live on a farm on East Hill, and the boy, who is 15 years of age, left home in June without telling where he was going. He later wrote home for his clothes, which were sent to him, and no further message had been received until this week.

Woolen Mill Project Falls Through.

From present indications and from any information that can be received it would seem that the so-called new woolen industry project has fallen through. Several local business men were interested and it was thought that such a corporation would be formed, but for some unknown reason the scheme has fallen through. The machinery in the Cushman mill has been sold to the Briarly Supply company of Worcester and will be shipped to that place at once.

Forest Fire On East Hill.

Chemical Co. No. 1 was called out last Friday afternoon to a forest fire on East Hill on land owned by J. G. Carew. Recent "Finds" in Egypt.

Among the lesser finds recorded are several portrait statuettes, some in limestone and wood, and others in gold alloyed with silver. The last are of great beauty, as are the many necklaces, rings, and toilet sets here figured A razor of copper was found, still sharp, and with a double edge, one side being made concave, as Mr Howard Carter suggests for shaving the head and face, and the other convex, for the armpits and other hollows of the body There is also a board for playing the game of hounds and jackals, which Mr. Carter has reconstructed in the most ingenious way, and which seems to have been a kind of backgammon, the different moves being determined by throws of dice. These all came from the earlier tombs.

Live Litterateur Resented.

WORLD'S MOST NOTED ECHOES

Some Reproduce Sound in Melodious Manner, Others With an Effect That Is Terrifying.

Probably the finest echo which the world knows is in the cathedral at Pisa, where the Leaning Tower is. Sing two notes and there is no reverberation; sing three and they are at once taken up by the walls of the edifice swelled, prolonged and varied, till they seem as a divine harmony from some majestic organ.

There is a cavern in Finland in which, if you test your lungs to the top of their capacity, there will answer you such horrible roarings, moanings and mutterings that you will be glad to rush out in absolute terror.

The cutting down of trees in a certain ocality on the Hudson river spoilt a splendid echo. A word shouted there was repeated 42 times

Undoubtedly the most extraordinary natural echo in the world is to be heard by the side of a small lake in Bavaria On one hand rises a perpendicular cliff several thousand feet high while on the other side is a dense forest If a pistol is fired on the lake the woods send back a faint echo that gradually dies away, but presently it is heard from the cliff, continually increasing in power, till it bursts over one's head like a deafening peal of thunder.

"Papa" and "Mamma."

The use of "papa" in this country illustrates the flow and ebb of fashion in words, as in costumes, pretty clearly.

All authorities agree that "papa" and "mamma" arrived here from France in the seventh century, says the London Chronicle At first they were courtly expressions, and were used by "persons of fashion," adults as well as children, in the eighteenth century. But with the nineteenth the middle classes took them up, originally regarding them as genteel; in our own time one of the faults of the hero of "E dunno w'ere e' are," after coming into "a little bit o' sposh," was that he "ad the cheek and impidence to call is mother 'is ma" The usual result followed Everybody's words adopted as genteel became vulgar, and now "papa" and "mamma" are dying out, even among children.

Worse Than English Sparrow.

Rabbits were originally introduced into Australia by a squatter, near Melbourne, who thought that the sight of them would remind him of home. They did, but they cost him $250,000 before they were done with him, and that little reminiscence is costing the colonies $3,500,000 per annum. A pair of rabbits in five years are capable of producing a progeny of 20,000,000, and in Australia they seem to have acted up to their ity

Forced to It.

"Did you ask father if you might have me?"

"Yes, darling."

"What did he say?"

"He said he would rather see you borne to your grave."

"Oh, pshaw, then we'll have to take it up with mother personally."—Chicago Record-Herald

Justifies Nursery Rhyme.

The school children of Germany are taught to swim without the use of water and thus does an old nursery rhyme secure justification.

The Strongest Force.

Peace is the strongest force there is, but only a few have made the discovery.

Telephone Talks

Household business before pleasure. Party line "telephone visits" need not be curtailed, but your service would be improved if they were made in conventional visiting hours.

"Rush Hours"

No other public service is called upon to meet such extraordinary fluctuations of demand as is the telephone. The "rush hours" of trolley and steam roads represent, by comparison, a demand that is steady and moderate.

Moreover, during the transportation "rush hour" crush some people must stand, or, if they insist upon having a seat, must wait for less crowded cars.

In telephoning, however, the simile would be applied by stating that each "passenger" must have, not a seat, but a "special car," and that this car must have a "special motorman and conductor," and the absolute right of way over a "special pair of rails" from the point where its journey begins to the point where it ends.

In telephone exchanges the "rush hours" usually are those between 8.30 and 11 a. m. It is during this period that party line subscribers are apt to be most troubled by "busy" reports.

It would materially help the service of subscribers on such lines if calls that are not imperative—social calls, for example—were deferred to the afternoon, leaving the morning hours free for domestic business calls.

It would be well if party line users would keep in mind this fact—that while any one subscriber on it is talking, it is closed to every other person connected therewith, and also to every person desirous of communicating with him or with any other person on that line.

The Antalgica
Or Vegetable Pain Reliever
was introduced to the public in 1848, since which time thousands of bottles have been sold each year to an appreciative public, which is a good evidence of its merits. It is adapted to so many ailments it should be in every household, for it cures all kinds of pains both internal and external. For Bronchial affections it is unrivaled by any article in the market. It is a sure cure for Cholera Morbus and Dysentery, if taken in season, also for Coughs. It is an effective remedy for rheumatic affections, stiff joints, swelled limbs, sprains, cramps, toothache and many other ills to which the flesh is heir. Try it and it will do you good. It is sold at 25c, 50c and $1.00 per bottle by the Bay State Drug Co., Lynde & Gould, The Kinsley Pharmacy and the proprietor.

him stop. She was angry, and she was laughing at the same time.

Dede Mason had quick, birdlike ways, almost flitting from mood to mood; and she was all contrition on the instant.

"Forgive me for laughing," she said across the gate. "It wasn't really laughter. I was surprised off my guard, and hurt, too. You see, Mr. Harnish, I've not been . . ."

She paused, in sudden fear of completing the thought into which her birdlike precipitancy had betrayed her.

"What you mean is that you've not been used to such sort of proposing,"

"I Like You, I Want You and I Never Was More Earnest in My Life."

Daylight said; "a sort of on-the-run, 'Howdy, glad-to-make-your-acquaintance, won't-you-be-mine' proposition."

She nodded and broke into laughter, in which he joined, and which served to pass the awkwardness away. He gathered heart at this, and went on in greater confidence, with cooler head and tongue.

"There, you see, you prove my case. You've had experience in such matters. I don't doubt you've had slathers of proposals. Well, I haven't, and I'm like a fish out of water. Besides, this ain't a proposal. It's a peculiar situation, that's all, and I'm in a corner. I've got enough plain horse-sense to know a man ain't supposed to argue marriage with a girl as a reason for getting acquainted with her. And right there was where I was in the hole. Number one, I can't get acquainted with you in the office. Number two, you say you won't see me out of the office to give me a chance. Number three, your reason is that folks will talk because you work for me. Number four, I just got to get acquainted with you, and I just got to get you to see that I mean fair and all right. Number five, there you are on one side the gate getting ready to go, and me here on the other side the gate pretty desperate and bound to say something to make you reconsider. Number six, I said it. And now and finally, I just do want you to reconsider."

He was such a boy, this big giant of a millionaire who had half the rich men of San Francisco afraid of him. Such a boy! She had never imagined this side of his nature.

"How do folks get married?" he was saying. "Why, number one, they meet; number two, like each other's looks; number three, get acquainted; and number four, get married or not, according to how they like each other after getting acquainted. But how in thunder we're to have a chance to find out whether we like each other enough is beyond my savvee, unless we make that chance ourselves. I'd come to see you, call on you, only I know you're just rooming or boarding, and that won't do."

"It's getting late now, anyway," Daylight hurried on, "and we've settled nothing at all. Just one more Sunday, anyway—that's not asking much—to settle it in."

She gathered the reins into her hand preliminary to starting.

"Good night," she said, "and—"

"Yes," he whispered, with just the faintest touch of imperativeness.

"Yes," she said, her voice low but distinct.

At the same moment she put the mare into a canter and went down the road without a backward glance, intent on an analysis of her own feelings.

Continued Next Week.

Four Years of Real Joy.

Germany has added another to its list of distinctions. It has produced the perfect truant. A boy of Dortmund was transferred from one school to another; he found out that his name was not entered on the register. That was four years ago. Since then he has gone from home every morning with his bag of school books, and each evening at the appointed hour he has returned. It has now been discovered that the new school has never seen him, and that he has had four years of vagabondage.

The Fishing Frog.

The fishing frog buries himself in e mud and lies barely concealed in eeds, where, with his huge mouth en, he fishes for his dinner. On the ack of his head there are three ines, the longest of which he bends orward in front of his mouth, gently aying it in the water. At last it ttracts a young fish, which makes a pring for the supposed worm, when—nap—the mouth is closed, and Mr. ishing Frog has had his dinner.

HOW EXPERTS FORM OPINIONS

Distinguishing Marks May Be Forged, but the Man Who Knows Cannot Be Deceived.

A dealer in antiques was talking about art experts. "Take, for instance," he said, "an expert in old pewter. You think, perhaps, he distinguishes old pewter by the marks—the Tudor roses, the maker's name, and so forth? Bless your heart, those marks are continually forged. No, he distinguishes old pewter by the feel.

"It is like the china expert. He, with his eyes closed, will distinguish hard and soft paste china. It's the feel again—his fingers trained by years and years of study till each one has a brain in it.

"Oriental rug experts have a very subtle sense of rug differences. Sometimes they distinguish a rug by its smell—the smell of the wool and the dyes. This seems incredible till you think of the Harris tweed, that imported cloth that you yourself can distinguish by its smell—the smell, which never leaves it, of the peat smoke of the cottage wherein it was woven on a hand loom.

"Wool sorters, a less highly paid class of experts, can take up a handful of wool, and by its color tell you whether it came from Texas, from the territories, from England or from Canada. The soil, you see, gives its own color to the wool."

Queer Beehives.

In the prettily situated mountain village of Hoefel, in Silicia, there are a number of curious beehives in the shape of life size figures cleverly carved in wood and painted in colors. The figures were carved over a century ago by monks in the Naumburg monastery, who were at that time in possession of a large farm in the district. There are 20 of these strange beehives, and they represent different characters, ranging from Moses to a military officer, a country girl, and a night watchman with a spear. The figures are hollow with the exception of the heads, which are solid, the opening for the bees being in front, in the middle of the figures. — Wide World Magazine.

Didn't Surprise Willie.

"Willie, mamma has a great surprise for you." "I know what it is—big bruvver is back from his vacation." "How did you know?" "My bank won't rattle any more."—Youngstown Telegram.

Before Allowing an Operation

Please Read These Two Letters.

The following letter from Mrs. Orville Rock will prove how unwise it is for women to submit to the dangers of a surgical operation when it may be avoided by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She was four weeks in the hospital and came home suffering worse than before. Then after all that suffering Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound restored her health.

HERE IS HER OWN STATEMENT.

Paw Paw, Mich.—"Two years ago I suffered very severely with a displacement—I could not be on my feet for a long time. My physician treated me for several months without much relief, and at last sent me to Ann Arbor for an operation. I was there four weeks and came home suffering worse than before. My mother advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I did. To-day I am well and strong and do all my own housework. I owe my health to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and advise every woman who is afflicted with any female complaint to try it."—Mrs. ORVILLE ROCK, R. R. No. 5, Paw Paw, Mich.

"THERE NEVER WAS A WORSE CASE."

Rockport, Ind.—"There never was a worse case of women's ills than mine, and I cannot begin to tell you what I suffered. For over two years I was not able to do anything. I was in bed for a month and the doctor said nothing but an operation would cure me. My father suggested Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; so to please him I took it, and I improved wonderfully, so I am able to travel, ride horseback, take long rides and never feel any ill effects from it. I can only ask other suffering women to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial before submitting to an operation."—Mrs. MARGARET MEREDITH, R. F. D. No. 3, Rockport, Ind.

We will pay a handsome reward to any person who will prove to us that these letters are not genuine and truthful—or that either of these women were paid in any way for their testimonials, or that the original letter from each did not come to us entirely unsolicited.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No one sick with woman's ailments does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine, made from roots and herbs, it has restored so many suffering women to health.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM

All these testimonials are guaranteed genuine and truthful. The original of each came to us entirely unsolicited. They are sincere expressions of gratitude for actual benefits received from the medicine.

Most Big Fires Spread Because of Wooden Roofs

The cheapest fire insurance is to roof your buildings with Penco Metal Shingles. They will keep your house safe if there is a fire nearby.

Penco TRADE MARK 1869 METAL SHINGLES

cost no more than good wooden shingles, they last as long, look better and do not "spring aleak" nearly as often. Our clamp joint keeps out all moisture. Nails are not exposed and can't pull out. The warm, red brown of these shingles is the most attractive color for a roof. They afford almost perfect protection from lightning. Because they are light in weight, they put only one-third to one-fourth as much strain on rafters as wood or slate.

Any tinsmith, carpenter or dealer in hardware and building material can supply and lay a Penco roof for you that will give you the best satisfaction. They are just the thing for siding. The larger size Penco Shingles are splendidly adapted to laying over old wooden shingles. Penco Shingles are galvanized or painted.

Original of Sam Weller.

The original of Sam Weller was Sam or Samuel Vale, who was well known as a London comedian who acted in the farce called "The Boarding House" and subsequently at Covent Garden theater. Sam Vale was noted everywhere for the Wellerisms such as "Come on, as the man said to his tight boot." "I'm down on you as the extinguisher said to the candle." "Where shall we fly, as the bullet said to the trigger," and "Let everyone take care of themselves, as the donkey observed when dancing among the chickens." Sam Vale died in 1848.

Hobbies.

Hobbies are among the things that make a man seem human and picturesque. One likes Lowell rather the better for his insisting year in and year out that the English have no sense of humor; and the austerity of President Eliot is softened by his certainty that there is no sport comparable to rowing.

The Rose for Nerves.

It has been discovered that the rose will cure a headache. Its perfume acts as a medicine upon the nerves. Its color—particularly if deep red—soothes the senses through the eyes, and its cleanliness and medical properties generally act upon the system not only as a curative, but as a tonic.

Affectation Rebuked.

When Alice Jones was 18, she became Miss Alysse Jones. When she went to enter a normal school she was asked her name by the dean. She replied: "Miss E. Alysse Jones—A-l-y-s-s-e." "Yes," said the dean, "and how are you spelling 'Jones' now?"

Nature.

Not from nature up to nature's God, but down from nature's God look nature through.—Robert Montgomery.

Be Sure You Are Right.

When in doubt as to what to say or do, say and do nothing until you see the right way.

Preserving a Calmness.

The much annoyed customer departed and the saleswoman approached another customer and began to tell how disagreeable the first had been, and then, assuming an air of superiority, remarked: "But I kept perfectly calm, remembering that self-possession was nine points of the law."

Chinese to Make History.

For the first time in the history of athletes the Chinese are to compete with other nations at the Olympic games of 1912. In the track and field sports the students of the University of Shanghai for three years have been coached by an Englishman.

Rat Climbs a Tree.

Uncle Bob Partin has some peculiar rats out at his house. A few days ago the dog ran a rodent about the premises for some time and finally it was lost to sight. Some one accidentally gazed into a maple tree, and there sat the rat on the highest limb he could find.—Bardwell News.

HOLLAND HAS LIBRARY

Fine New Building Dedicated Last Saturday.

350 AT OLD HOME WEEK GATHERING

Structure Built by Townspeople, With Assistance of Friends in Other Places.

The town of Holland celebrated Old Home Day Saturday, about 350 people assembling to attend the exercises of the day. The crowning event of the occasion was the dedication of the new library.

The morning program was chiefly for the young people, there being various sporting events. At noon an excellent dinner was provided and soon after the literary program of the day was carried out. Rev. Martin Lovering, chairman of the celebration committee, presided. Architect J. R. Coolidge of Boston, who drew the plans for the library, was first introduced and he was followed by Miss M. Anna Tarbell of Brimfield, who read an excellent paper, bringing the congratulations of the people of Brimfield to the people of Holland. She was followed by Dr. Edward Hitchcock, a summer resident of Holland, and Miss Zaidee Brown, agent of the Massachusetts free library commission, then spoke. Judge Harry E. Back of Danielson, Ct., and J. Brainard Hall of Worcester also gave short talks.

The report of the building committee was given by the chairman, John F. Hebard. He said that the total appropriation for the building was $2125 and the money had all been expended except $44.80. The committee some time ago decided that all who made subscriptions of $25 or more for the library should be entitled to have portraits of such persons as they might desire placed in the library. Under this arrangement the late H. A. McFarland of Wales had offered the portrait of George L. Webber, H. E. Back the portrait of William A. Robbins, and Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Howlett of Holland the portrait of Henry Vinton. The committee acknowledged a number of gifts, among them being the following subscriptions for furnishings: John Noyes of Brimfield, $5; Herbert Bagley, $10; Miss Alma Bissell, $2; J. D. Underwood, $1; Henry Young, $1; Rev. Charles Bliss of Hampden, $5; Mrs. Sohier and friend of Boston, $50; Mrs. Mary Charles of Melrose, $25. The thanks of the committee was given these contributors and also H. P. Marcy of Palmer, who showed his good will by giving 2000 bricks.

Rev. Charles Bliss of Hampden gave the dedicatory prayer and benediction was given by Rev. Martin Lovering. The American band of Fiskdale furnished music during the day.

The new library, situated in the center of the town, is an attractive one-story building of wood, with colonial doors and triple windows. The little town of Holland deserves great credit in putting through a plan to provide its people with a public library building. The few people, mostly farmers, voted to borrow $1800 to erect the library.

The building was constructed by John A. Conway of West Brookfield. A portico supported by four doric columns forms the front entrance. The reading room on the south side contains 60 shelves arranged for 1500 volumes. An artistic fireplace of hard red brick, and pretty hearth design, with settees on either side, makes a cozy nook for readers. The whole interior is finished in oak. The tables and chairs are also finished in oak, making a harmonious tone throughout. Portraits of old residents and town officials will hang upon the walls and spaces are provided for inscriptions. In addition to the reading and stack rooms there are quarters for the town officers and librarian.

The closing exercises of the celebration were held Sunday, when Rev. Martin Lovering preached a historical sermon in the quaint little Congregational church, which was built in 1856. There was a large attendance at the service, visitors coming from many distant places.

BRIMFIELD.

Mrs. Fred M. Lawrence and children have returned from Truro, where they spent six weeks.

Allen Boardman of Waterbury, Ct., has been visiting at the home of his grandfather, George M. Hitchcock.

The fall term of the public schools will open next Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. William Rogers of Main street have been entertaining his sister, Mrs. C. S. Wilbur and child of Springfield.

Stebbins is No Bull Moose.

Monson Candidate for House Announces Allegiance to Taft.

Sherman M. Stebbins of Monson, who is a candidate for the Republican nomination for representative in the First Hampden district, has been credited with being a member of the Bull Moose party. This Mr. Stebbins emphatically denies in the following statement:

"I have always been a Republican and I do not expect to become anything else. I have always been loyal to my party and it is my intention to remain so. Before the presidential primaries I was a great admirer of Mr. Roosevelt. I favored his nomination for President, but the convention at Chicago settled that question and settled it finally, so far as I am concerned. So long as Mr. Roosevelt was running as a Republican, for nomination by that party, I see no reason why it was not just as proper to support him as any other candidate. Now, of course, the situation has changed.

"Mr. Roosevelt has left the Republican party and organized another, as I understand it. I have been solicited to join that party, but have declined with the statement that I have always been a Republican and consider it my duty to remain one. I have never done anything that would give any man a right to question my good faith toward my party.

"If I am elected as the representative from this district I shall be found acting with the Republican party in all party matters. In that event, I shall most certainly vote for the Republican candidate for United States senator, whoever he may be. I do not see how any decent man, running for office on the Republican ticket, if he is elected, can do anything else. At any rate, that is my attitude in the matter and I am glad to define it as plainly and publicly as possible."

Sewer Expert Has Gone.

Work Not Completed; Lack of Funds Cause of His Dismissal.

Superintendent of Highways McKelligott has dismissed the sewer cleaning expert recently hired from New York, and says he will finish the work with his own men, using the tools owned by the town, which are practically the same as those sent up from New York. The town owns everything practically needed with the exception of two small winches, and these can be secured locally, Mr. McKelligott thinks. The New York apparatus is the invention of P. J. Healey, and was rented to the town at a price per day; with the machinery came also a man to manipulate it, Thomas Corbett. The work under his direction was stopped Wednesday night and he and the apparatus returned to New York yesterday.

The work is not completed by any means. The sections from Knox to Thorndike street is in fair shape, Mr. Corbett says, but is not as good as it might and ought to be. In this Mr. McKelligott agrees, and says there are two bad places in the sewer which he thinks will have to be dug up; just what the trouble is cannot be told, but it appears to be an entrance pipe from the side which projects too far into the main sewer. Work was begun Wednesday afternoon on the section between Thorndike and Bridge streets, and this is badly filled up. It is promised, however, that this, as well as other places which need attention, shall be thoroughly cleaned before winter.

Mr. McKelligott states that the cause of the dismissal was due to a lack of funds. The cost of the work already done was such that he could not see where the money for completing the work in all the sewers which apparently need attention is to come from. He also states that he proposes to notify the selectmen of this condition of the highway and sewer department funds.

WARE.

Receives Painful Injury.

Bridget Hanezewsky was painfully injured while at her work in the Ware steam laundry Monday morning. She was feeding collars into a mangle when her right hand was caught between two rollers. Her arm was drawn in to the elbow. Her skin was taken off completely and the flesh was badly burned.

Patrick Maloney, 79, died at midnight Tuesday in St. Vincent hospital in Worcester, where he had been taken Monday night. The cause of his death was kidney trouble. He leaves two nephews and eight nieces. The funeral was held yesterday morning in All Saints' church.

Miss Mary M. Ryan, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. D. M. Ryan of Pleasant street, has been elected teacher of French in the high school to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Miss Bonney. Miss Ryan is a graduate of the Ware high school, class of 1908, and of Smith college, class of 1912.

Next Monday, being Labor Day, the majority of the stores of the village will be closed all day.

Hitchcock Academy Triennial Reunion.

A Large Number Gather Yesterday From Far and Near. Exercises in the Town Hall; Dinner and Speechmaking on Common.

The tenth triennial reunion of the alumni association of the Hitchcock Free Academy of Brimfield, held yesterday, was all that the most enthusiastic alumnus could desire. The weather was of the best, and the attendance was large. The exercises included an afternoon program in the town hall, which was made up of a musical program, business meeting and addresses, a dinner on the common and the usual social gathering in the evening.

The exercises in the town hall were attended by about 400. The president of the association, Judge Harry E. Back, '88, of Danielson, Ct., presided. Instead of addresses by foreign speakers it was planned to give the event a more informal tone by depending on former students and friends for the speechmaking. The alumni orchestra, assisted by a chorus of 40 voices from the alumni, all under the direction of Principal George F. Kenney, added much to the enjoyment of the afternoon; the pianist was Miss Fannie Warren, a former teacher of music in the school. The opening musical number was "On the Jersey Shore," by the orchestra, and was followed by the invocation by Rev. Willis T. Sparhawk of Randolph, Vt., a former teacher in the school. The chorus, including members of classes for 40 years back, then sang "To Thee, O Country."

The welcome by the president of the association followed, and a telegram was read from Lieut. Olin R. Booth, United State army, retired, class of '90, at Fort Bayard, New Mexico, where he is ill. A brief historical sketch, a summary of which will be found below, was read by Miss Florence E. Chase, now a teacher in Sturbridge. A selection by the orchestra, with 'cello solo by Miss Gladys Munroe, '09, a sophomore in Wellesley college, was much enjoyed. The business meeting of the association followed, with election of officers. The records were read by Miss Mary W. Warren. Charles S. Tarbell, who has been treasurer for 25 years, read his report and declined a re-election as did also Miss Chase, the historian; both were given votes of thanks. These officers for the next three years were elected:

President, Harry E. Back of Danielson, Ct.; vice presidents, Hartley R. Walker and George Hitchcock; secretary, Mary W. Warren; corresponding secretaries, Rebecca M. Lincoln, Lydia Brown Hitchcock; treasurer, Munroe Tarbell; executive committee, Robert Streeter, Alice Sawin, Edward Brown, M. Anna Tarbell and Margaret Dunsmore; financial committee, Orus E. Parker, Clarence B. Brown and Fannie E. Warren; historian, Gladys L. Webber; necrologist, Emma B. Brown.

Judge Back introduced as the first speaker, Dr. E. W. Norwood, who paid a loving tribute to Charles H. Walker of Warren, whose death occurred last week. Dr. Norwood was principal of the Academy from 1869 to 1879. He spoke on "The alumni association a support to the academy," and made an earnest appeal for assistance from every pupil who has gone out from the school.

Principal Kenney spoke on "What the alumni of other schools have done," giving statistics from such institutions.

The report of the alumni fund committee showed a present fund of $1805.25. Of the association membership of 1500 there have been 164 subscribers to appeals sent out. The chairman of the committee, Judge Back, instanced a few examples of the unselfish spirit which had been manifested. Particularly the work of Miss M. Anna Tarbell, the librarian, was mentioned. Miss Tarbell is town librarian as well as school librarian and works unceasingly for the good of the students who use the books in their work, supplementing the smaller collection from the larger one. When the school lacked sufficient teachers and funds to procure them, Miss Tarbell stepped into the breach and offered her services to teach the classes she could manage with her other work, without remuneration, and in other ways has shown an unselfishness that, as Judge Back said, the association should not allow.

Judge Back opened the discussion of means to be employed by the alumni for raising funds for the Academy and A. H. Warner of Springfield, Edson Noyes of Haverhill and Frank Plimpton of Boston also offered suggestions.

The entire company adjourned to the tent on the common, where a bountiful supper was served. Following the banquet, toasts were in order, and Toastmaster Back first called upon two former teachers to express themselves. George W. Earl, principal of the Hyde Park high school, was the first to speak, and Rev. W. T. Sparhawk of Randolph, Vt., came next. Salem D. Charles of Boston, class of '69, the first to be graduated, was the first of the alumni to greet his schoolmates. He was followed by Edward Butterfield, '71, of New York, Nettie Lawrence Jordan, '72, of Framingham, George Sherman, '74, a professor at Wheaton seminary; Carrie Smith Bemis of Spencer; Frank Potter, '88, editor of the Pascoag Herald; Arthur Plimpton, '90, of Sturbridge, Stanley Plimpton, '92, of Sturbridge, Clarence Stowell, '94, manager of the Bryant and Stratton school, Providence; Ernest Barnes, '95, of Sturbridge, Alice Sawin, 1906, who has just graduated from Smith college and has been elected to teach in the academy next year; Robert Streeter, 1907, of Brimfield, who is studying for his master's degree at Clark university; Monroe Tarbell, 1910, a junior at Massachusetts agricultural college; Albert Bacon of Dorchester, one of the early students before the classes were organized; Charles Burleigh, 1911, of the Worcester Telegram, and Charles L. Peirce of Springfield. All responded briefly within the minute limit, and each was greeted with applause. The association sent greetings to Lieut. Booth in response to his telegram. Another item of great interest was the announcement that the class of 1909, since the business meeting, had raised $50 among themselves to give to the alumni fund. Credit for the success of the reunion arrangement lies at the door of the executive committtee, who spared neither pains nor effort in making every detail go smoothly. The committee were George M. Hitchcock, Mrs. Martha E. Streeter, Edward B. Brown, M. Anna Tarbell and Margaret E. Dunsmore.

Miss Florence E. Chase's historical sketch was in part as follows:

I will ask you for a few minutes, to imagine yourselves living here in this beautiful old town of Brimfield about one hundred years ago. It is the same green stretch of country, but the houses are few and scattered widely. One house in particular let us enter, for it is the home of a boy to whom in later years we owe so much. We learn that his parents were unable to send him to school all the time, but the short periods of schooling thus obtained only increased his great desire for a higher education, and cannot we picture to ourselves this young man on a bright morning in early fall while busy in some neighbor's field, stopping his work for a minute to look with longing eyes upon his boyhood companions as they waved him a farewell from the old stage coach which carried them to some school for higher learning? And as he grew to manhood and became prosperous what would be more natural than for him to take measures toward the establishing of a free high school, where not only certain studies were to be taught but a school where the young boys would be guided and trained to become good citizens, and the girls the more conscientiously to fulfill whatever occupation they entered?

Through many ages the pendulum has swung in the educational world, and ever the quest has been for the best methods. So far as possible the old Hitchcock Free Academy has kept pace with the swing of the pendulum. Its principals and teache s have come from the atmosphere of some New England college. In the past seven years there have been two principals and seventeen assistant teachers. The principals are Mr. Benjamin D. May and Mr. George F. Kenney, who has for six years with the help of competent assistant teachers endeavored to maintain the high standing of the school.

It is said that progress is marked by stations left behind. Thus it has been Mr. Kenney's great aim to place at each station of advancement some new incentive which would create in the pupils the desire of higher education.

Complain of Poor Highway.

Ware Teamsters Petition Palmer Selectmen For Repairs.

The following petition to the selectmen of Palmer has been circulated in Ware this week and has received numerous signatures:

"Ware, Mass., Aug. 24, 1912.

"To the Honorable Board of Selectmen of Palmer, Mass.

"Gentlemen: We, the undersigned, who frequently ride over, or have our teams pass over the road between Ware and West Warren, respectfully and earnestly request your Honorable Board to take some action toward making the road safe for traveling for man or beast and we assure you that whatever improvements are made will be appreciated. Trusting you will give the matter your immediate attention, we are

"Respectfully yours."

It is understood that every person who drives over this strip of road and has had an opportunity, has signed the petition. Palmer horse or auto owners who have had occasion to use the road recently are unanimous in saying "Amen!" to the Ware petition. In this instance however, the petitioners are not likely to accomplish anything, as the roads of the town of Palmer are not under the care of the selectmen but are in charge of the highway surveyor, Michael McKelligott, and the selectmen have nothing whatever to do with them.

Electric Car Time Change.

Winter Schedule Will Go Into Effect Tuesday of Next Week.

The theatre at Forest Lake will close next Monday night, and on Tuesday, the winter schedule of running time will go into effect on the electric road. On and after that date cars will leave as follows:

For Ware—5.45 a. m., 6.45, 7.15 and every hour until 10.15 p. m.

For Three Rivers—5.20 a. m., 6, 7, 8, 9.15 and every hour to 1.15 p. m., then 1.45 and every hour until 9.45, then 10.15 and 11.15.

For Bondsville—6 a. m., 7, 8, 9.15 and every hour until 11.15 p. m.

For Springfield—6 a. m., 6.15 and every hour until 1.15 p. m., then 1.45 and every half hour until 5.45, then 6.15 and hourly until 11.15.

The 7.15 a. m. car to Brimfield will be continued until further notice.

Boy Wanted for Forgery.

Caught in Thorndike and Turned Over To Vermont Officers.

Officer Edward F. McKelligott of Thorndike gathered in early last Saturday morning Maurice Turcott of Saxtons River, Vt., on a charge of forging and passing a check at Saxtons River. The boy formerly lived in Thorndike with his parents and returned there a short time ago. It was not known there that the Vermont officers wanted him until recently. The fact of his arrest was communicated to the Vermont officers, and Deputy Sheriff Alexander came for him Saturday.

Sporting News.

Palmer Town League.

Bondsville 11—Three Rivers 5.

Bondsville defeated Three Rivers, 11 to 5, at the latter place Saturday. Bennett pitched well for seven innings and then Senior was put in his place. Three Rivers' pitcher and first baseman failed to show up and Sam Cole and Palmer's regular pitcher, McLean, were pressed into service. McLean pitched well in the early stages of the game, but failed to hold Bondsville. Deyo, catcher for Three Rivers, stole home in the eighth after knocking in two runs with a triple. The score:

REMARKABLE RECORD.

Summary of School Savings For Seven Months.

AGGREGATE COLLECTIONS ARE $1991.

An Average of $1.50 For Every Pupil Enrolled; Considered Remarkable Showing.

A study of the results of the penny savings system in the public schools of the town since it was taken over by the Palmer Savings Bank last fall shows some astonishing results. In a little less than seven months—from November 20 to June 14—the total amount collected was $1991.34, an average of a little more than $1.50 for every pupil enrolled in the public schools. Of course, not all these are included in the list of savers, so that some have on deposit in the savings bank quite respectable sums as the result of their self-denial during the school year; for the bulk of the money thus saved has been "spending money," and would have gone in satisfying the pupils' pleasure if not put into the savings bank. The table below gives the results by schools and rooms:

Last Lake Theatre Shows.

Good Bill Now On. Special Attractions For Labor Day.

This is the last full week of the Forest Lake theatre, though the performances will not cease until after next Monday—Labor Day. The bill the last half of the week is the Melrose Comedy Four, colored serenaders; Burke's musical dogs; the Flying Lamars, trapeze act; Hagan and Westcott, singers and dancers. Prof. Gowdy began free balloon ascensions Tuesday, and has made some sensational flights and parachute drops. He will go up this evening and to-morrow afternoon and evening, directly after the theatre performance, and will also make two ascensions next Monday, afternoon and evening. A big new show is promised for Sunday, with new acts.

For Monday, the last day of the season, special preparations have been made. There will be a new program in the theatre, with five all-star acts, and three performances will be given, as usual on holidays. In addition there will be two balloon ascensions, with free fireworks in the evening. There will be dancing all day, with good music, as usual.

State Road Damaged.

Well-driving Apparatus Works Havoc With Oiled Macadam.

The oiled macadam road which was recently built on the Thorndike hill and on North Main street in Palmer was considerably damaged last Friday when a well-driving apparatus passed over it under its own power. On the wheels at intervals of six inches were bars which cut into the soft surface of the road to a considerable extent, tearing it up badly in some places. The wheels also had grooved rims which made a deep cut, and where the machine turned the oil was plowed up. A shower which had cooled the road a little earlier saved it from more serious damage.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—Elam Harnish, known all through Alaska as "Burning Daylight," celebrates his 30th birthday with a friendly crowd of miners at the Circle City Tivoli. He is a general favorite, a hero and a pioneer in the new gold fields. The dance leads to heavy gambling in which over $100,000 is staked. Harnish loses his money and his mine but wins the mail contract of the district.

CHAPTER II.—Burning Daylight starts on his trip to deliver the mail with dogs and sledge. He tells his friends that the big Yukon gold strike will soon be on and he intends to be in it at the start. With Indian attendants and dogs he dips over the bank and down the frozen Yukon and in the gray light is gone.

CHAPTER III.—Harnish makes a sensationally rapid run across country with the mail, appears at the Tivoli and there is another characteristic celebration. He has made a record against cold and exhaustion and is now ready to join his friends in a dash to the new gold fields.

CHAPTER IV.—Harnish decides where the gold will be found in the up-river district and buys two tons of flour, which he declares will be worth its weight in gold before the season is over.

CHAPTER V.—When Daylight arrives with his heavy outfit of flour he finds the big flat desolate. A comrade discovers gold and Harnish reaps a rich harvest. He goes to Dawson, begins investing in corner lots and staking other miners and becomes the most prominent figure in the Klondike.

CHAPTER VI.—Harnish makes fortune after fortune. One lucky investment enables him to defeat a great combination of capitalists in a vast mining deal. He determines to return to civilization and gives a farewell celebration to his friends that is remembered as a kind of blaze of glory.

CHAPTER VII.—The papers are full of "The King of the Klondike," and Daylight is feted by the money magnates of the country. They take him into a big copper deal and the Alaskan pioneer finds himself amid the bewildering complications of high finance.

CHAPTER VIII.—Daylight is buncoed by the moneyed men and finds that he has been led to invest his eleven millions in a manipulated scheme. He goes to meet his disloyal business partners at their offices in New York City.

CHAPTER IX.—Confronting his partners with a revolver in characteristic frontier style, he threatens to kill them if his money is not returned. They are cowed into submission, return their stealings and Harnish goes back to San Francisco with his unimpaired fortune.

CHAPTER X.—Daylight meets his fate in Dede Mason, a pretty stenographer with a crippled brother, whom she cares for. Harnish is much attracted towards her and interested in her family affairs.

CHAPTER XI.—He becomes an element in large investments on the Pacific coast and gets into the political ring. For a rest he goes to inspect one of his properties in the country and momentarily is attracted back to the old life on the lonesome trail.

CHAPTER XII.—Daylight gets deeper and deeper into high finance in San Francisco. He makes frequent runs into the country thus getting close to nature, but his mind is still in the speculation trend. Very often, however, the longing for the simple life well nigh overcomes him.

CHAPTER XIII.—Dede Mason buys a horse and Daylight meets her in her saddle trips. He begins to indulge in horseback riding and manages to get into her company quite often.

CHAPTER XIV.—One day Daylight asks Dede to go with him on one more ride, his purpose being to ask her to marry him, and they canter away, she trying to analyze her feelings.

CHAPTER XV.

Life at the office went on much the way it had always gone.

In spite of their high resolve, there was a very measurable degree of the furtive in their meetings. In essence, these meetings were stolen. They did not ride out brazenly together in the face of the world. On the contrary, they met always unobserved, she riding across the many-gated backroad from Berkeley to meet him halfway. Nor did they ride on any save unfrequented roads, preferring to cross the second range of hills and travel among a church-going farmer folk who would scarcely have recognized even Daylight from his newspaper photographs. He found Dede a good horsewoman—good not merely in riding, but in endurance. There were days when they covered sixty, seventy, and even eighty miles; nor did Dede ever claim any day too long, nor—another strong recommendation to Daylight—did the hardest day ever see the slightest chafe of the chestnut sorrel's back. "A sure enough hummer," was Daylight's stereotyped but ever enthusiastic verdict to himself.

His lifelong fear of woman had originated out of nonunderstanding and had also prevented him from reaching any understanding. Dede on horseback, Dede gathering poppies on a summer hillside, Dede taking down dictation in her swift shorthand strokes—all this was comprehensible to him. But he did not know the Dede who so quickly changed from mood to mood, the Dede who refused steadfastly to ride with him and then suddenly consented, the Dede in whose eyes the golden glow forever waxed and waned and whispered hints and messages that were not for his ears. In all such things he saw the glimmering profundities of sex, acknowledged their lure, and accepted them as incomprehensible.

But through it all ran the golden thread of love. At first he had been content just to ride with Dede and to be on comradely terms with her; but the desire and the need for her increased. The more he knew of her, the higher was his appraisal. Had she been reserved and haughty with him, or been merely a giggling, simpering creature of a woman, it would have been different. Instead, she amazed him with her simplicity and wholesomeness, with her great store of comradeliness. The latter was the unexpected. He had never looked upon woman in that way. Woman, the toy; woman, the harpy; woman, the necessary wife and mother of the race's offspring—all this had been his expectation and understanding of woman. But woman, the comrade and playfellow and joyfellow—this was what Dede had surprised him in. And the more she became worth while, the more ardently his love burned, unconsciously shading his voice with caresses, and with equal unconsciousness flaring up signal fires in his eyes. Nor was she blind to it, yet, like many women before her, she thought to play with the pretty fire and escape the consequent conflagration."

"Winter will soon be coming on," she said regretfully, and with provocation, one day, "and then there won't be any more riding."

"But I must see you in the winter just the same," he cried hastily.

She shook her head.

"I've been pretty good," he declared. "I leave it to you if I haven't. It's been pretty hard, too, I can tell you. You just think it over. Not once have I said a word about love to you, and me loving you all the time. That's going some for a man that's used to having his own way. I'm somewhat of a rusher when it comes to traveling. I reckon I'd rush God Almighty if it came to a race over the ice. And yet I didn't rush you. I guess this fact is an indication of how much I do love you. Of course I want you to marry me. Have I said a word about it, though? Nary a chirp, nary a flutter. I've been quiet and good, though it's almost made me sick at times, this keeping quiet. I haven't asked you to marry me. I'm not asking you now. Oh, not but what you satisfy me. I sure know you're the wife for me. But how about myself? Do you know me well enough to know your own mind?" He shrugged his shoulders. "I don't know, and I ain't going to take chances on it now. You've got to know for sure whether you think you could get along with me or not, and I'm playing a slow conservative game. I ain't a-going to lose for overlooking my hand."

This was love-making of a sort beyond Dede's experience. Nor had she ever heard of anything like it.

"So you see," he urged, "just for a square deal we've got to see some more of each other this winter. Most likely your mind ain't made up yet—"

"But it is," she interrupted. "I wouldn't dare permit myself to care for you. Happiness, for me, would not lie that way. I like you, Mr. Harnish, and all that, but it can never be more than that."

"It's because you don't like my way of living," he charged, thinking in his own mind of the sensational joy-rides and general profligacy with which the newspapers had credited him—thinking this, and wondering whether or not, in maiden modesty, she would disclaim knowledge of it.

To his surprise, her answer was flat and uncompromising.

"No; I don't."

"I know I've been brash on some of those rides that got into the papers," he began his defence, "and that I've been traveling with a lively crowd—"

"I don't mean that," she said, "though I know about it, too, and can't say that I like it. But it is your life in general, your business. There are women in the world who could marry a man like you and be happy, but I couldn't And the more I cared for such a man, the more unhappy I should be. You see, my unhappiness, in turn, would tend to make him unhappy. I should make a mistake, and he would make an equal mistake, though his would not be so hard on him because he would still have his business."

"Business!" Daylight gasped. "What's wrong with my business? I play fair and square. There's nothing underhand about it, which can't be said of most businesses, whether of the big corporations or of the cheating, lying, little corner-grocerymen. I play the straight rules of the game, and I don't have to lie or cheat or break my word."

"Don't you see," he went on, "the whole game is a gamble. Everybody

"I Like You, Mr. Harnish, and That Is All."

gambles in one way or another. The farmer gambles against the weather and the market on his crops. So does the United States Steel Corporation The business of lots of men is straight robbery of the poor people. But I've never made that my business. You know that. I've always gone after the robbers."

"I missed my point," she admitted "Wait a minute."

And for a space they rode in silence.

"I see it more clearly than I can state it, but it's something like this. There is legtimate work, and there's work that—well, that isn't legitimate The farmer works the soil and produces grain. He's making something that is good for humanity. He actually, in a way, creates something, the grain that will fill the mouths of the hungry."

"And then the railroads and market riggers and the rest proceed to rob him of that same grain," Daylight broke in.

"There ain't much difference between playing halfway robber like the railroad hauling that farmer's wheat to market, and playing all robber and robbing the robbers like I do. And, besides, halfway robbery is too slow a game for me to sit in. You don't win quick enough for me."

"But what do you want to win for?" Dede demanded. "You have millions and millions, already; why can't you do good with all your money?"

Daylight laughed.

"Doing good with your money! Ain't it funny, to go around with brass knuckles and a big club breaking folks' heads and taking their money away from them until I've got a pile, and then, repenting of my ways, going around and bandaging up the heads the other robbers are breaking? I leave it to you. That's what doing good with money amounts to. Every once in a while some robber turns softhearted and takes to driving an ambulance. That's what Carnegie did. He smashed heads in pitched battles at Homestead, regular wholesale headbreaker he was, held up the suckers for a few hundred million, and now he goes around dribbling it back to them. Funny? I leave it to you."

He rolled a cigarette and watched her half curiously, half amusedly. His replies and harsh generalizations of a harsh school were disconcerting, and she came back to her earlier position.

"I can't argue with you, and you know that. No matter how right a woman is, men have such a way about them—well, what they say sounds most convincing, and yet the woman is still certain they are wrong. But there is one thing, the creative joy; and it's a higher joy than mere gambling. Haven't you ever made things yourself—a log cabin up in the Yukon, or a canoe, or raft, or something? And don't you remember how satisfied you were, how good you felt, while you were doing it and after you had it done?"

While she spoke his memory was busy with the associations she recalled. He saw the deserted flat on the river bank by the Klondike, and he saw the log cabins and warehouses spring up, and all the log structures he had built, and his sawmills working night and day on three shifts.

"Why, dog-gone it, Miss Mason, you're right—in a way. I've built hundreds of houses up there, and I remember I was proud and glad to see them go up. I'm proud now, when I remember them. And there was Ophir—the most God-forsaken moose-pasture of a creek you ever laid eyes on. I made that into the big Ophir Why, I ran the water in there from the Rinkabilly, eighty miles away. They all said I couldn't, but I did it, and I did it by myself. The dam and the flume cost me four million. But you should have seen that Ophir—power plants, electric lights, and hundreds of men on the pay-roll, working night and day. I guess I do get an inkling of what you mean by making a thing. I made Ophir, and she was a hummer."

"And you won something there that was more than mere money," Dede encouraged. "Now do you know what I would do if I had lots of money and simply had to go on playing at business? Take all the southerly and westerly slope of these bare hills. I'd buy them in and plant eucalyptus on them. I'd do it for the joy of doing it anyway; but suppose I had that gambling twist in me which you talk about, why, I'd do it just the same and make money out of the trees. And there's my other point again. Instead of raising the price of coal without adding an ounce of coal to the market supply, I'd be making thousands and thousands of cords of firewood—making something where nothing was before. And everybody who ever crossed on the ferries would look up at these forested hills and be made glad. Who was made glad by your adding four dollars a ton to Rock Wells?

It was Daylight's turn to be silent for a time while she waited an answer.

"Would you rather I did things like that?" he asked at last.

"It would be better for the world, and better for you," she answered non-committally.

CHAPTER XVI.

All week every one in the office knew that something new and big was afoot in Daylight's mind. On Sunday Dede learned all about it.

"I've been thinking a lot of our talk," he began, "and I've got an idea I'd like to give it a flutter. And I've got a proposition to make your hair stand up. It's what you call legitimate, and at the same time it's the gosh-dangdest gamble a man ever went into. How about planting minutes wholesale, and making two minutes grow where one minute grew before? Oh, yes, and planting a few trees, too—say several million of them. You remember the quarry I made believe I was looking at? Well I'm going to buy it. I'm going to buy these hills, too, clear from here around to Berkeley and down the other way to San Leandro. I own a lot of them already, for that matter But mum is the word. I'll be buying a long time to come before anything much is guessed about it, and I don't want the market to jump up out of sight. You see that hill over there It's my hill running clear down its slopes through Piedmont and halfway along those rolling hills into Oakland And it's nothing to all the things I'm going to buy."

He paused triumphantly.

"The ferry system between Oakland and San Francisco is the worst one-horse concern in the United States You cross on it every day, six days in the week. That's say, twenty-five days a month, or three hundred a year. How long does it take you one way? Forty minutes, if you're lucky. I'm going to put you across in twenty minutes. If that ain't making two minutes grow where one grew before knock off my head with little apples I'll save you twenty minutes each way. That's forty minues a day, times three hundred, equal to twelve thousand minutes a year, just for you, just for one person. Let's see: that's two hundred whole hours. Suppose I save two hundred hours a year for thousands of other folks—that's farming some, ain't is? Come on. Let's ride up that hill, and when I get you out on top where you can see something I'll talk sense."

A small footpath dropped down to the dry bed of the canyon, which they crossed before they began the climb The slope was steep and covered with matted brush and bushes, through which the horses slipped and lunged Showers of twigs and leaves fell upon them, and predicament followed predicament, until they emerged on the hilltop the worse for wear but happy and excited. Here no trees obstructed the view. The particular hill on which they were, out-jutted from the regular line of the range, so that the sweep of their vision extended over three-quarters of the circle. Below, on the flat land bordering the bay, lay Oakland, and across the bay was San Francisco. Between the two cities they could see the white ferry-boats on the water. Around to their right was Berkeley, and to their left the scattered villages between Oakland and San Leandro. Directly in the fore

STORE CLOSES MONDAY, LABOR DAY

Our Magnificent New Stock of
RUGS and CARPETS
Bigger and Better Than Ever Before

We open the new season in our Rug and Carpet Department determined to make this the banner season. With a stock bigger and better than ever before we are prepared to give the people of Western New England better assortments and better values than ever before in floor coverings of every description.

We have spent weeks and weeks in the selection of this new stock, choosing only the cream of the productions of the leading rug and carpet makers of America, and then having secured the very choice designs and colorings we have brought our immense purchasing power to bear to give these rugs and carpets to our patrons at the lowest prices quoted by any house in the country.

Over 1000 Different Carpet-Sized Rugs

Our splendid Rug Gallery, the best appointed Rug gallery in the East, is now filled to overflowing with this brand new stock of beautiful Rugs, representing the very choicest and most exclusive productions of the foremost mills of America. This immense gallery accommodates by actual count over 1000 Carpet Size Rugs and on every rack hangs a different rug in carpet size, and still there are nearly 100 more different rugs for which we have not been able to find room.

These 1000 include practically all the leading American makes and in the most varied and artistic assortment of choice patterns we have ever shown—rugs of the finest weave representing the very highest development of rug-making in America. This assortment is so extensive and so attractive that you can have no rug need for the home that cannot be filled to your lasting satisfaction and economy.

Hundreds of Rolls of Carpets

Equally extensive and equally attractive is our showing of the new Carpets for Fall. This Carpet Exposition fairly represents the very best productions of the leading carpet mills of America, including all the standard grades in the very latest, most exclusive and most artistic patterns.

We still cling to the good old-fashioned way of showing Carpets in full rolls, believing this to be the very best method, enabling you to see the Carpet exactly as it will look in your home before making your selection. Main Floor

High-Grade Inlaid Linoleums

One of the most important features of our Department of Floor Coverings is our immense stock of High-grade Inlaid Linoleums. We carry an immense stock at all times, including complete lines of the leading imported and domestic makes, and in our own private patterns. The demand for the best Inlaid Linoleums is increasing every year, and this season we shall carry a line greater than ever before, with a stock so large and so complete that we shall be prepared to execute almost any order direct from our floors. Special Showing of
The New Scrim and Marquisettes
In the Drapery Department

We shall devote this week in the Drapery Department to a special showing of the new Scrims and Marquisettes in our complete new stock of Drapery Fabrics. These pretty, artistic yet inexpensive drapery fabrics will be more in demand than ever this fall, and we have just received a big shipment of them, making possible the largest showing of these popular curtain fabrics we have ever made.

These dainty Curtain goods come in White, Ivory and Arab, made in a great variety of styles, plain and hemstitched, with open-work blocks and stripes, in all sorts of combinations. They include the handsome allover patterns, as well as the plain centers with the handsome border designs, and they are shown in a wealth of beautiful patterns and rich colorings, reproducing with wonderful accuracy the most artistic designs and color harmonies to be found in the expensive imported goods.

MACEY Sectional Book Cabinets

The perfecting of the Sectional Bookcase has vastly simplified the problem of furnishing the library. Now with small expense one can provide book cabinets for his entire library, be it large or small, and have it, when done, an artistic whole and as convenient as the most expensive "built-in" bookcase.

The sectional idea in bookcase building has been brought to perfection in the MACEY Sectional Book Cabinet—a bookcase of such artistic beauty and so concealing its sectional feature that one would easily mistake it for a handsome one-piece case. In convenience of arrangement and use, in beauty of design and in excellence of workmanship the MACEY easily leads all imitators and its enormous sale is due solely to its unique merits.

The Beautiful Chippendale

The MACEY Cabinets are now made in several different styles to match the furniture of your library, but perhaps the most popular is the beautiful Chippendale in which the grace and art of the old school is reproduced with wonderful fidelity. It is made in selected quartered oak or solid mahogany and makes a book cabinet handsome enough to grace the most luxurious library.

BURNING DAYLIGHT.

ground was Piedmont, with its desultory dwellings and patches of farming land, and from Piedmont the land rolled down in successive waves upon Oakland.

"Look at it," said Daylight, extending his arm in a sweeping gesture "A hundred thousand people there and no reason there shouldn't be half a million. There's the chance to make five people grow where one grows now. Here's the scheme in a nutshell. Why don't more people live in Oakland? No good service with San Francisco, and, besides, Oakland is asleep. It's a whole lot better place to live in than San Francisco. Now, suppose I buy in all the street railways of Oakland, Berkeley, Alameda, San Leandro, and the rest—bring them under one head with a competent management? Suppose I cut the time to San Francisco one-half by building a big pier out there almost to Goat Island and establishing a ferry system with modern up-to-date boats? Why, folks will want to live over on this side. Very good. They'll need land on which to build. So, first I buy up the land. But the land's cheap now. Why? Because it's in the country, no electric roads, no quick communication, nobody guessing that the electric roads are coming. I'll build the roads. That will make the land jump up. Then I'll sell the land as fast as the folks will want to buy because of the improved ferry system and transportation facilities.

"You see, I give the value to the land by building the roads. Then I sell the land and get that value back, and after that, there's the roads, all carrying folks back and forth and earning big money. Can't lose. And there's all sorts of millions in it. I'm going to get my hands on some of that water front and the tide-lands. Take between where I'm going to build my pier and the old pier. It's shallow water. I can fill and dredge and put in a system of docks that will handle hundreds of ships. San Francisco's water front is congested. No more room for ships. With hundreds of ships loading and unloading on this side right into the freight cars of three big railroads, factories will start up over here instead of crossing to San Francisco. That means factory sites. That means me buying in the factory sites before anybody guesses the cat is going to jump, much less, which way. Factories mean tens of thousands of workingmen and their families. That means more houses and more land, and that means me, for I'll be there to sell them the land. Then there's the water. I'll come pretty close to owning the watershed. Why not the waterworks too? There's two water companies in Oakland now, fighting like cats and dogs and both about broke. What a metropolis needs is a good water system. They can't give it. They're stick-in-the-muds. I'll gobble them up and deliver the right article to the city. There's money there, too—money everywhere. Everything works in with everything else. Each improvement makes the value of everything else jump up. It's people that are behind the value. The bigger the crowd that herds in one place, the more valuable is the real estate. And this is the very place for a crowd to herd. Look at it. Just look at it! You could never find a finer site for a great city. All it needs is the herd, and I'll stampede a couple of hundred thousand people in here inside two years. And what's more, it won't be one of these wildcat land booms. It will be legitimate. Twenty years from now there'll be a million people on this side the bay. Another thing is hotels. There isn't a decent one in the town. I'll build a couple of up-to-date ones that'll make them sit up and take notice. I won't care if they don't pay for years. Their effect will more than give me my money back out of the other holdings. And, oh, yes, I'm going to plant eucalyptus, millions of them, on these hills."

"But how are you going to do it?" Dede asked. "You haven't enough money for all that you've planned."

"I've thirty million, and if I need more I can borrow on the land and other things. Interest on mortgages won't anywhere near eat up the increase in land values, and I'll be selling land right along."

In the weeks that followed, Daylight was a busy man. It meant quick work on a colossal scale, for Oakland and the adjacent country was not slow to feel the tremendous buying. But Daylight had the ready cash and it had always been his policy to strike quickly. Before the others could get the warning of the boom, he quietly accomplished many things. At the same time that his agents were purchasing corner lots and entire blocks in the heart of the business section and the waste lands for factory sites, Daylight was rushing franchises through the city council, capturing the two exhausted water companies and the eight or nine independent street railways, and getting his grip on the Oakland Creek and the bay tide-lands for his dock system. The tide-lands had been in litigation for years, and he took the bull by the horns—buying out the private owners and at the same time leasing from the city fathers. By the time that Oakland was aroused by this unprecedented activity in every direction and was questioning excitedly the meaning of it, Daylight secretly bought the chief Republican newspaper and the chief Democratic organ, and moved boldly into his new offices. Of necessity, they were on a large scale, occupying four floors of the only modern office building in the town—the only building that wouldn't be torn down later on as Daylight put it. There was department after department, a score of them, and hundreds of clerks and Stenographers. As he told Dede:—

"I've got more companies than you can shake a stick it. There's the Alameda & Contra Costa Land Syndicate the Consolidated Street Railways, the Yerba Buena Ferry Company, the United Water Company, the Piedmont Realty Company, the Fairview and Portola Hotel Company, and half a dozen more that I've got to refer to a notebook to remember. There's the Piedmont Laundry Farm, and Redwood Consolidated Quarries. Starting in with our quarry, I just kept a-going till I got them all. And there's the ship-building company I ain't got a name for yet. Seeing as I had to have ferry-boats, I decided to build them myself. They'll be done by the time the pier is ready for them."

For months Daylight was buried in work. The outlay was terrific, and there was nothing coming in. Beyond a general rise in land values, Oakland had not acknowledged his irruption on the financial scene. The city was waiting for him to show what he was going to do, and he lost no time about it. The best skilled brains on the market were hired by him for the different branches of the work. Initial mistakes he had no patience with, and he was determined to start right, as when he engaged Wilkinson, almost doubling his big salary, and brought him out from Chicago to take charge of the street railway organization. Night and day the road gangs toiled on the streets. And night and day pile-drivers hammered the big piles down into the mud of San Francisco Bay. The pier was to be three miles long, and the Berkeley hills were denuded of whole groves of mature eucalyptus for the piling.

At the same time that his electric roads were building out through the hills, the hay-fields were being surveyed and broken up into city squares, with here and there, according to best modern methods, winding boulevards and strips of park. Broad streets, well graded, were made, with sewers and water-pipes ready laid, and macadamized from his own quarries. Cement sidewalks were also laid, so that all the purchaser had to do was to select his lot and architect and start building. The quick service of Daylight's new electric roads into Oakland made this big district immediately accessible, and long before the ferry system was in operation hundreds of residences were going up. The profit on this land was enormous. In a day, his on-slaught of wealth had turned open farming country into one of the best residential districts of the city.

But this money that flowed in upon him was immediately poured back into his other investments. The need for electric cars was so great that he installed his own shops for building them. But no matter what pressure was on Daylight, his Sundays he reserved for his riding in the hills. It was not the rainy winter weather, however, that brought these rides with Dede to an end. One Saturday afternoon in the office she told him not to expect to meet her next day, and, when he pressed for an explanation.—

"I've sold Mab."

Daylight was speechless for the moment. Her act meant one of so many serious things that he couldn't classify it. It smacked almost of treachery. She might have met with financial disaster. It might be her way of letting him know she had seen enough of him. Or . . .

"What's the matter?" he managed to ask.

"I couldn't afford to keep her with hay forty-five dollars a ton," Dade answered. "My brother's expenses have been higher, as well, and I was driven to the conclusion that since I could not afford both, I'd better let the mare go and keep the brother."

"Who bought her?" he asked.

Dede's eyes flashed in the way long since familiar to him when she was angry.

"Don't you dare buy her back for me," she cried. "And don't deny that that was what you had in mind."

"I wish you would reconsider, Miss Mason," he said softly. "Not alone for the mare's sake, but for my sake. Money don't cut any ice in this. For me to buy that mare wouldn't mean as much as it does to most men to send a bouquet of flowers or a box of candy to a young lady. There's nobody I feel chummy with except you and you know how little we've chummed—once a week, if it didn't rain, on Sunday. I've grown kind of to depend on you. If you'd just let me buy her back—"

"No, no; I tell you no." Dede arose impatiently, but her eyes were moist with the momery of her pet. "Please don't mention her to me again. If you think it was easy to part with her, you are mistaken. But I've seen the last of her, and I want to forget her."

Daylight made no answer, and the door closed behind her.

Half an hour later he was conferring with Jones, an erstwhile elevator boy and rabid proletarian whom Daylight long before had grubstaked to literature for a year. The resulting novel had been a failure. Editors and publishers would not look at it, and Daylight was now using the disgruntled author in a little private secret service system he had been compelled to establish for himself. Jones, who affected to be surprised at nothing after his crushing experience, betrayed no surprise now when the task was given him to locate the purchaser of a certain sorrel mare.

"How high shall I pay for her?" he asked.

"Any price. You've got to get her, that's the point. Drive a sharp bargain so as not to excite suspicion, but get her. Then you deliver her to that address up in Sonoma County. The man's the caretaker on a little ranch I have there. Tell him he's to take whacking good care of her. And after that forget all about it. Don't tell me the name of the man you buy her from. Don't tell me anything about it except that you've got her and delivered her. Savvee?"

"If You'd Just Let Me Buy Her Back."

But the week had not passed, when Daylight noted the flash in Dede's eyes that boded trouble.

"Something's gone wrong—what is it?" he said boldly.

"Mab," she said. "The man who bought her has sold her already. If I thought you had anything to do with it—"

"I don't even know who you sold her to," was Daylight's answer. "And what's more, I'm not bothering my head about her. She was your mare, and it's none of my business what you did with her. You haven't got her, that's sure, and worse luck. And now, while we're on touchy subjects, I'm going to open another one with you. And you needn't get touchy about it, for it's not really your business at all. It's about that brother of yours. He needs more than you can do for him. Selling that mare of yours won't send him to Germany. And that's what his own doctors say he needs—that crack German specialist who rips a man's bones and muscles into pulp and then moulds them all over again. Well, I want to send him to Germany and give that crack a flutter, that's all."

"If it were only possible!" she said, half breathlessly, and wholly without anger. "Only it isn't, and you know it isn't. I can't accept money from you—"

"Now look here, Miss Mason. You've got to get some foolish notions out of your head. This money notion is one of the funniest things I've seen. Suppose you was falling over a cliff, wouldn't it be all right for me to reach out and catch you by the arm? Sure it would. You're standing in your brother's way. No matter what notions you've got in your head, you've got to get out of the way and give him a chance. Will you let me go and see him and talk it over with him? I'll make it a hard and fast business proposition. I'll stake him to get well, and that's all, and charge him interest."

She visibly hesitated.

"And just remember one thing, Miss Mason: it's his leg, not yours."

Still she refrained from giving her answer, and Daylight went on strengthening his position.

"And remember, I go over to see him alone. He's a man, and I can deal with him better without women-folks around. I'll go over tomorrow afternoon."

Continued Next Week.

Fine-Feathered Vulture.

In the South American forests is found the most beautifully colored of all vultures, and it is the true king over the black vultures and turkey buzzards. Its plumage is of a delicate cream, with black quills, and the head is brilliantly colored with red and orange.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

This Season We Introduce the New

"Everlasting" Sheets and Pillow Cases

Which Possess Exceptional Wear-Resisting Qualities

"Everlasting" Sheets are made from a medium weight, smooth, soft-finished sheeting which is manufactured of specially selected cotton. The fabric when washed will soften and thicken instead of becoming thin and harsh. You will find by actual laundry test that they will last longer than any other sheets made at anything like the same price—and we guarantee them to do so. We recommend the "Everlasting" Sheets and Pillow Cases highly to hotels, boarding houses, rooming houses and institutions, as well as for private homes.

We carry all usual sizes and sell them at remarkably low prices.

One great advantage to the Academy is the library consisting of nearly 2000 volumes, catalogued by author, title and subject. The Academy also has free access to the town library of 6000 volumes, and it has proved a great help to the school.

In adding manual training to the elective work the Academy was fortunate in having someone so well acquainted with the subject as Mr. Kenney. The basement room was certainly devoid of unnecessary equipment the first year, but tools and conveniences gradually accumulated. Gifts from the later graduating classes have aided greatly. The problems worked out by the boys of the H. F. A. have been much harder than those chosen by the ordinary high school; the wood has been paid for by the pupils. Exhibitions at the fairs were recognized by money awards.

The year following the introduction of manual training, drawing was entered as an obligatory study for all freshmen. A knowledge of drawing is of the highest importance to a high school student entering college, and is a necessity to those entering technical schools.

Botany has always been an important study in the school course, but under Mr. Kenney a more practical phase of work was taken up. At the annual meeting of the trustees it was suggested that trees and shrubs adaptable to this locality be planted on the school land which surrounds the ball ground. This arboretum was begun last year with transplants of white pine, Norway spruce, blue spruce, Austrian pine and the basket willow.

The Hitchcock Free Academy orchestra has contributed no small share to the credit of the school. Aside from the advantages accruing to the pupils in this study of music, they have helped greatly in the social life of the school and the town.

Dramatics also have been revived during the last six years, the subjects chosen being along the line of the best literature. In 1907 Shakespeare's "Merchant of Venice"; in 1908 Trowbridge's "Oratorio of Emmanuel"; in 1909 Sheridan's "The Rivals"; in 1910 Shakespeare's "Midsummer Night's Dream"; "Dicken's Cricket On the Hearth" in 1911, and Goldsmith's "She Stoops to Conquer" this year. Also seven orchestral concerts have been given.

Nor was the athletic course neglected, for the school is proud of its baseball team, and reports all interscholastic games won except one. The track team also showed good material, although they had but little time for training.

These subjects have not in the least detracted from the fundamental studies, for never before has there been so much stress laid upon the fundamentals as during the last year. Spelling has been given daily, while language, composition work, drill in reading and debating are all in the daily program.

We know that the majority of pupils leaving high school do not enter college. Does not that fact make it more imperative that the high school course shall be the broadest and most practical that can be worked out?

During the past seven years sixty-six young boys and girls have been presented with their well-earned diplomas and declared graduates of the Hitchcock Free Academy by Dr. Norwood. Until 1911 the class of 1899 was the largest class ever graduated,—14 members,—but the class of 1911 won the banner with 15; the class of 1912 also numbered 14. I cannot report as many Bachelors of Arts or Doctors of Divinity or even lawyers as was reported at our reunion in 1908, but that does not mean that our Alma Mater is not sending out young men qualified for those positions, for many of these are still students in higher branches of learning. Of these 66, twelve are already teachers, three as teachers in high schools, one as assistant in college. Two degrees have been granted, Robert Streeter received his of M. A. from Clark University in 1912, and William Hebard his B. A. from the University of Maine in 1912 also. There is one theological student, one law student, one electrician, one nurse, eleven students in colleges and normal schools, five clerks, one music teacher, one newspaper reporter, one telephone operator, one in the government service, three stenographers, one conductor, two contractors, one photographer and four helping at home on the farm.

Life and character tend either upward or downward; one single act or characteristic may not indicate the tendency of life as a whole, but let us, the alumni of the Hitchcock Free Academy, do our part financially in keeping the standard of the school where its influence will tend to lead its pupils to higher education. And then we can say of our Alma Mater as Whittier did of his—

"Long live the good school! giving out year by year
Recruits to true manhood and womanhood dear:
Brave boys, modest maidens in beauty sent forth,
The living epistles and proof of its worth:
In and out let the young life as steadily flow
As in broad Narragansett the tides come and go;
And its sons and its daughters in prairie and town
Remember its honor, and guard its renown."

The report of the necrologist, Miss Julia E. Hitchcock, was as follows:

Mrs. Emma Savage Brainard.
Henry Corey.
Earl William.
Merrick Allen.
Mrs. Alice Smith Weeks.
Mrs. Catherine Newell Fairbanks.

NOT HER FIRST APPEARANCE

Well Meaning Church Woman Unfortunate in Extending Welcome, as Pastor Had Counseled.

It is embarrassing sometimes, this thing of sudden religious zeal; that is, if you haven't made it a regular business. Witness the mistake made some time ago by a good woman who was a regular attendant at a church down on Chestnut street, says the Louisville Times.

One Sunday morning her pastor preached an inspiring sermon on the subject of welcoming the "Stranger Within Thy Gates." He urged upon his membership the duty of giving a cordial greeting to strangers who happened in at that church.

This good woman was much impressed with his remarks. As she turned around to leave the church, she discovered an unfamiliar face in the pew immediately behind her. With a radiant smile she extended her hand. "I'm glad to see you out this morning," she said.

"Thank you," replied the stranger with a merry twinkle in her eyes.

"Do you come often?" sweetly asked the good woman.

The stranger smiled. "I have been occupying this pew for the past seven years," she said.

There was an embarrassed silence, and then the good woman turned and started out. It was noticeable that she made no further attempt to greet any stranger that morning.

RIDDLES ARE OLD AS TIME

But Boys Are Said to Be More Fond of Them Than Girls—First of Which There Is Record.

It is a curious fact that boys are more fond of conundrums than girls are.

While all conundrums are riddles, all riddles are not conundrums, the term conundrum being used more for riddles which are based on some fancied resemblance, such as, "Why is a pig looking out of a second-story window like the moon?" and the answer is because it looks round. If anyone objects that the moon does not always look round, you can reply, "Neither does the pig."

Two of the most famous riddles are at least 3,000 years old. The first of which there is any record is found in the fourteenth chapter of Judges, and was made up by Samson after his fight with a lion. He offered a prize to anyone who could solve it within seven days, but no one got it. It is recorded that his wife pestered him to tell her the answer, but he absolutely refused until the time was up, and many think that he never intended to tell it at all.

Bishop Whately never told the answer to any of his puzzles. If they were correctly guessed he would acknowledge that the solution was right; but if no one got the answer he kept it to himself, and some of his enigmas are still unsolved.

One of the chief entertainments in ancient times at any domestic gathering, such as a marriage feast, was asking riddles, and many persons spent their lives in devising them and selling them to the rich and great, just as some public men now get others to write their speeches for them.

Blunders of Royal Authors.

Royal authors sometimes need a deal of editing. A glaring instance is Frederick the Great, whose spelling and punctuation astounded Carlyle, says the London Chronicle. "A steure" for "a cette heure" was a specimen of the former, "and as for punctuation, he never could understand the mystery of it; he merely scatters a few commas and dashes as if they were shaken out of a pepper box upon his page and so leaves it."

How, asks Carlyle, can such slovenliness be explained in a king who "would have ordered arrest for the smallest speck of mud on a man's buff belt, indignant that any pipe clayed portion of a man should not be perfectly pipe clayed?" He can only conclude that Frederick really cared little about literature after all. Also "he never minded snuff upon his own chin, not even upon his waistcoat and breeches." "I am a king and above grammar," said another monarch.

Sport of Collar Spotting.

"Collar spotting," the new automobile sport, is at its best when the streets are dirty enough to hold puddles of water. When the broadly-tired wheel of the machine strikes such a puddle a thin but solid sheet of water is thrown upward and outward, the path it takes being determined by the speed of the machine, the depth of the liquid and, to a certain extent, its consistency. These three factors make the aiming of the sheet a matter of great skill. When the puddle is close to the curb it is possible for the expert spotter, by swerving into it, to throw the sheet in such a way as to hit a man's collar—even when it's a narrow one—or the white feathers on a woman's hat. Not every one is as expert as this, but the great fun of the sport lies in the fact that even when you miss your aim you're pretty sure to hit something, if it's only skirts or trousers of pedestrians.

Valiant Soldier.

Penam—Col Bloodyman's old war traits still cling to him.

Nicks—How so?

Penam—I dined with him last night and he gave the waiter no quarter

PALMER NEWS.

Reunion on Pacific Coast.

Four Former Palmer Men Meet There And Renew Acquaintances.

The Daily Argus of Alameda, Cal., of the 16th contained the following:

After a period of 52 years four men who were chums in Palmer, Mass., were brought together in this city yesterday. Prof George W. Calkins, Captain S. F. Graves of 1226 Chestnut street and Frank Goff, all residents of this city for many years, visited the home of Louis Sholes at Pearl street and San Jose avenue, Sholes being the other member of the happy quartet of 52 years ago. Through a strange coincidence the three Alamedans learned that Sholes was residing in their midst and had been in this city for the past six months, having come here to make his home from Seattle, Wash.

The three old friends traveled together to Sholes' home when they learned of his presence in this city, and yesterday they renewed their friendship of many years and enjoyed talking over old times. Sholes' son is the editor of the Argonaut.

All of the men mentioned above are remembered by older residents of the town, and some of them by younger citizens, as they have visited the town at times in recent years.

Springfield Woman Dies in Palmer.

Mrs. William H. Fewell of Springfield died about 6 o'clock Wednesday evening at the home of Charles Shaw near the West Brimfield station at the age of 74. Mrs. Fewell came from her home Tuesday afternoon to visit the Shaws and suffered a paralytic shock not long after her arrival, from which she did not rally. Mrs. Fewell was born in Spencer, but has made her home in Springfield for the past eight years. Besides a husband she leaves two sons and one daughter. The body will be taken to-morrow to Greenwich village, her former home, for burial.

New Overseer of Poor.

The selectmen and overseers of the poor, at a joint meeting held Monday evening, elected Patrick J. Fitzgerald of Bondsville to fill the vacancy on the board of overseers caused by the recent death of Patrick Crowley. Mr. Fitzgerald is a native of Bondsville and has lived there all his life. For 30 years he was employed in the market of Clark & Hastings, and after the death of Mr. Hastings a few years ago he entered the firm, which is now Hastings & Fitzgerald, and is its manager.

Counting the Vehicles.

The state highway commission has had a traffic census taken recently on roads in this vicinity to give them a knowledge of the amount of travel between certain cities and towns. In some sections there is much teaming, while in others the travel is principally by autos, while in still others teams are most in evidence. The count on the Springfield-Worcester line was made in Wilbraham near the Springfield line, on the Ware road near the golf club house, and on the Brimfield road near the Goetze farm.

Fish Killed by Dynamite.

Dead fish are frequently found along the banks of the Swift river near Three Rivers, killed, it is said, by the heavy blasting along the line of the new Hampden railroad in that vicinity. The blasting is very heavy, and buildings in this village have been repeatedly shaken by it. Farmers in the vicinity of the work also complain that the blasting has prevented eggs from hatching, and are beginning to mourn a scarcity of chickens this year.

Investigating License Commission.

The selectmen of Clinton paid a visit to Palmer Wednesday to make a few inquiries as to the workings of the license commission in this town. The town of Clinton is thinking of taking the matter up and asking the Legislature for permission to establish such a commission, and the visit was for the purpose of getting a few points on the workings of the system here.

Laborers Are Scarce.

The problem of securing laborers for the work on the Southern New England railroad is one which is giving the contractors no end of trouble. It is almost impossible to get men, and one contractor, after a visit to Boston, New York and other places, has been unable to secure enough to warrant him in starting the section he is to build.

New Books at the Library.

The Circulation is Increasing Since More Fiction Has Been Bought.

The new method of obtaining books at the public library—permitting patrons to visit the shelves and make their selections after inspection—and the purchase of more fiction than formerly has been fully appreciated by the public, as evidenced by the large increase in the circulation during the past few months. Following is a list of new fiction recently put in circulation:

Death of Mrs. Nellie Knickerbocker.

Mrs. Nellie L. Knickerbocker, 45, died Saturday evening in Monson of inflammatory rheumatism. She was born in Waterbury, Ct., but went to Monson about 20 years ago and later to Palmer, returning to Monson to live a short time ago. She leaves one daughter, Mrs. A. H. Shultz of Monson, one sister, Mrs. Clara Dennis, and four brothers, Fred, George, Henry and William Darling, all of Palmer.

Several members of the Eastern Star attended the picnic of the order held in Springfield Wednesday in honor of the birthday of Robert Morris.

In the district court Tuesday Moeiej Skuria of Three Rivers was convicted of an assault Saturday evening and fined $6, which he paid. Thomas J. Walsh, claiming to be a railroad man en route to New York state in search of work, was fined $6 for evading car fare on the Boston and Albany; sent up in default of funds.

Sunday was one of the most disagreeable days of the summer. There was a good breeze in the early morning, but the mercury shot up at a rapid gait and registered among the 90's from midday on. There was a large amount of humidity in the atmosphere and it was hard work keeping comfortable. Not only was the day disagreeable, but the discomfort extended well into the night.

Eugene Mitchell, who has been a clerk in Taylor's grocery store for some time, will leave that place to-morrow night to take the management of the new Victor bowling alleys on Lyman street in Springfield. This is a new establishment, with six fine new alleys, which will be opened for the first time next Monday.

A Rhode Island automobile, en route for Providence, met with a mishap near the Backus farm on the Thorndike road about 3.15 yesterday afternoon. The car was proceeding toward Thorndike when the left forward axle broke close to the wheel and the wheel took a roll all by itself away from the car. The corner of the car dropped and the machine was considerably damaged by the sudden stoppage, but fortunately none of the occupants were hurt.

Following the suggestion made by W. G. McAdoo, treasurer of the national Democratic campaign committee, that all national banks in the country act as receivers of popular subscriptions to the campaign funds of all parties, the Palmer National Bank has received a circular asking it to act in this capacity. If there is any in this vicinity who wish to subscribe to the "sinews of war" of any of the great parties, the bank will receive and forward the amounts.

Work will be started next Tuesday morning on the section of highway at Shearer's Corner connecting the town way with the state road west of the wire mill bridge. This section will be built by the highway commission under the small town's act and the work will be done by the local repair men. With the completion of this section and the building of Park street there will be a completed line of state road from east to west through the town of Palmer. There remains but the section about 1000 feet in length through the village of North Wilbraham to make the road complete to the Springfield line.

Among the Churches.

Services will be resumed next Sunday at St. Mary's mission in Masonic hall, at 3.15 p. m.

The Sunday school of St. Paul's church will not resume its sessions until the second Sunday in September.

Preaching in the Advent chapel Sunday afternoon at 3 by Rev. Albert C. Johnson of Westfield. Communion will also be observed. Friends will receive a hearty welcome at all the services.

There will be communion and sermon at the Congregational church Sunday morning, sermon subject, "The God of all comfort;" Sunday school at 12; Christian Endeavor at 6, subject, "Hopefulness a Christian virtue;" evening service at 7, when the pastor will begin a series of sermons expository of the Psalms, using the first Psalm.

At the Baptist church Sunday, services will be as follows: 10.15, men's prayer meeting; 10.45, morning worship and special illustrated sermon to the junior congregation. The ordinance of the Lord's Supper will be celebrated at the close of the morning service, at which time the hand of fellowship will be given to new members: 12, Bible school; 7, evening service of praise with a short sermon on the theme, "In the beginning."

A beagle hound owned by Thomas Gleason was killed Tuesday evening on the Boston and Albany railroad tracks.

R. E. Cummings has sold a building lot in the wire mill district to Anthony Wludyka, who is to erect a house thereon.

At the meeting of the selectmen last evening the telephone company was granted permission to set poles on Pleasant street, and the electric company permission to set a pole on South Main street near Fox street.

The body of Miss Ida E. Warriner of New London, Ct., was brought to Palmer Wednesday for burial in the Oak Knoll cemetery. Miss Warriner was the daughter of the late Ethan Warriner, formerly of Palmer.

Card.—We wish to thank neighbors and friends for their many kind acts during our recent bereavement: also for the beautiful floral tributes.

WARREN.

Death of Charles H. Walker.

Charles Hawley Walker, 68, one of the town's most prominent business men, died suddenly Friday afternoon of acute indigestion. He had been in poor health for some time, but had attended to his business. He was taken ill at his furniture store in the morning and passed away very suddenly. Mr. Walker was born in Brookfield, but had lived in Warren nearly all his life. He was prominently connected with the Congregational church, was a member of the Royal Arcanum, of the Warren Thief Detecting Society and of the West Brookfield Farmers' Club. He had never sought town office, but for many years acted as moderator of all town meetings and had served at various times upon the school board. At the time of the starting of the Warren Steam Pump Company he was one of 12 men to back the project, and served upon its board of directors for several years. He learned the trade of a machinist as a young man, and for some years he was interested in the operation of knitting machines, being at one time located near Boston. Over 30 years ago he returned to Warren and became associated with his father-in-law, William Combs, in the furniture business, and became agent for the American express company. He was married October 3, 1886, to Sarah E. Combs, who survives him with one daughter, Lena May Walker. The funeral was held Monday afternoon in the Congregational church, Rev. John L. Findlay and Rev. T. C. Richards officiating. The stores were closed from 1.30 to 3.30, out of respect to his memory.

BELCHERTOWN.

THACKERAY AS A REPORTER

Future Great Novelist Just the Man to Enjoy Such Spicy Repartee as the Following.

Thackeray once acted as police reporter for the London Diogenes, and performed his work in no perfunctory way How the future novelist must have enjoyed observing and recording this bit of courtroom humor:

Pat Fogarty went on the way from Manchester to London in order to thrash Mick Fitzpatrick, which he did, winding up the performance with the assistance of an "awful horseshoe." He was detected and brought before Mr. Justice Simpleman.

"Well, sir," began the court, "you came here from Manchester, did you?"

"Your honor has answered correct."

"You see the complainant's head; it was cut by a sharp instrument. Do you know what cut it?"

"Ain't your honor after sayin' that a sharp insthrumint did?"

"I see you mean to equivocate," said the court, becoming restive "Now, sir, you cut that head; you came here to cut it, did you not? Now, sir, what motive brought you to London?"

"The locomotive, per honor."

"Equivocating again, you scoundrel!" said the court, waxing warm. Raising up the horseshoe, and holding it before Pat, he said, "Do you see this horseshoe, sir?"

"Is it a horseshoe, yer honor?"

"Don't you see it is, sir? Are you blind? Can you not tell at once that it is a horseshoe?"

"Bedad, no, yer honor."

"No?" angrily.

"No, yer honor; but can yersilf tell?"

"Of course I can, you stupid Irishman."

"Oh, glory be to goodness, see what education is!" soliloquized Pat, aloud. "Sure, yer honor, a poor, ignorant creature like mesilf wouldn't know a horse's shoe from a mare's."—Youth's Companion.

LIKE THE WAIL OF BANSHEE

Mournful Cry of the Screech-Owl Heard In Youth Plainly Recalled in After Years.

From the orchard, too, on an autumn midnight, comes the mournful whistle of a screech-owl Most of us who have heard the screech-owl at all have heard its call drifting down from an old orchard on a frosty October night. The chill of coming winter, the cattle stamping in dark stables, a dim and ghostly world stretching over garnered fields to the mystery of the woods, and a gnarled, ancient orchard up the slope seem phantomlike under a waning moon—these are the setting for the screech-owl's mournful whistle I can at this moment shut my eyes, reproduce that whistle in my throat, and bring back to memory as if it were yesterday the scene as my boyhood eyes saw it from my chamber window whence I peeped with frosted breath before diving into bed, and I can actually smell (for all the tobacco smoke in my present study) the peculiar odor of the cold October night air and feel again a vague, almost terrifying melancholy chill in my heart as, in the darkness, I heard from the orchard that reiterated whoo-oo-oo-oo Like the whip-poor-will on the pasture rail on a hot evening of July, this other night-singer of New England seems to dwell just on the skirts of human habitations and to keep our souls reminded of the sadness of the world.—Walter Prichard Eaton, in Harper's Bazar

Defiant.

"There is a place awaiting you in the abode of future punishment," said the man who, even though angry, strives to be discreet of speech.

"It don't scare me none," replied the janitor "I'll be kind o' glad to get some place where the tenants never complain because the radiators are cold."

THORNDIKE.

Night Prowler Annoys Residents.

People living on Church street and Pine avenue have been annoyed recently by a man who has been prowling around their houses and in some instances has tried to enter the houses. He was seen trying to unlock a house on Church street one night, but quickly ran away when some one called out to him. He was seen near the home of Joseph Bassette and is described as being tall and wearing a mask. It is thought to be the same man who a few weeks ago tried to break into houses on Commercial street. What his motive can be is not known, but steps are being taken to apprehend him as the people residing in the vicinity of Church street and Pine avenue are greatly incensed by his actions.

Baseball Fans Are Sore.

Thorndike baseball fans were much displeased at the action of the Palmer club's manager in cancelling the game scheduled for last Saturday here. The game had been advertised and no word to the contrary was received by the local managers until Friday night, when they learned indirectly that the game was off. They feel that the cancellation at so late a date was a good deal of an injustice, as all arrangements had been made and the expense of hiring a battery had been incurred.

Rev. C. C. Gorst Resigns.

Rev. Charles C. Gorst, pastor of the First Congregational church, has tendered his resignation to take effect October 1. Rev. Mr. Gorst is to take a post graduate course at Boston University. The marriage of Miss Annie Mae Brosnan of this place to Daniel Edward Sheehan of Rutland, Vt., now engaged at work in Panama, will take place next Tuesday morning at 8 o'clock in St. Mary's church. A reception will follow at the home of the bride's parents on High street.

The Polish members of St. Joseph's Hall Association are making preparation for the dedication of their new hall on High street which will take place Labor Day. The forenoon will be devoted to speechmaking, music, etc. Dancing will be the order for the afternoon, while a drama will be given in the evening. The music will be from Chicopee and many visiting organizations are expected to attend.

THREE RIVERS.

FUNERAL OF JOSEPH PAULIN.

Held in St. Anne's Church Sunday With Large Attendance.

The funeral of Joseph A. Paulin, who was killed by a fall from a staging here last week Thursday, was held Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in St. Anne's church, of which he was a member; interment was in St. Anne's cemetery. A large attendance at the service bespoke the high esteem in which the young man was held. There were many floral offerings from various organizations and friends, as well as from relatives. Mr. Paulin was second assistant engineer of the Three Rivers fire district, and all members of the department were present, in addition to which there were large delegations from the Palmer and Ware departments. The bearers, all intimate friends of the young man, were: Archie Rogers, Alcide Barber, Oscar Patnaude, George Patnaude, Paul Rollett and Henry Fredette. Mr. Paulin was born in Central Falls, R. I., but came to this village when very young, so has always been closely associated with the young people here, all of whom were deeply attached to him. His sunny disposition and cheerful nature endeared him to all with whom he came in contact, and his untimely death is deeply regretted by a large number of friends.

Both Legs Cut Off.

John Elliott, a Quarry Employe, Killed By Freight Train.

John Elliott, 50, was killed by a north-bound freight train Monday afternoon at 5.15 o'clock. He had left his work at the quarry Monday morning and was wandering around the tracks. He was ordered off the railroad property several times, but would not leave.

The freight which was at the station ran up on a siding to let the 5 o'clock passenger train pull through, and struck the man. The body was discovered by G. W. French, who lives but a short distance from the track, with both legs cut off.

Medical Examiner Jackson was called and viewed the body, which was brought to Bradway's undertaking rooms. Whether he had relatives or not could not be learned.

Death of Mrs. Alice Neville.

Mrs. Alice Neville, 55, died at her home on Main street Sunday morning at 10.15 of tuberculosis; she had been ill since January. Besides her son Henry of this town, she leaves a mother, one brother, N. P. Hanley of this town, and a sister, Mrs. W. H. Anderson. She was married in April, 1888, to James Neville of Ware, who died in 1892. After her husband's death she returned to Monson, where she has since lived. The funeral was held Tuesday morning at 9.30 from St. Patrick's church and burial was in the Pearl street cemetery.

Lawn Party Next Week.

The annual lawn party of the Summer Sewers will be held on Miss Holmes' grounds next Tuesday afternoon and evening. There will be ice cream, ice cream cones, candy and pop corn for sale, and strange fruits may be obtained from a wonderful tree. The work of the Summer Sewers will be on exhibition and for sale. There will be an entertainment both afternoon and evening, so an admission fee of five cents will be charged in the afternoon and ten cents in the evening. A good time is assured to all.

Small Brush Fire.

A still alarm called out Hose 1 of the fire department yesterday afternoon for a brush fire on Pearl street. The blaze was started by some small boys who built a fire in a hole in a large oak tree to bake some apples. The tree being old and dry the fire spread to the brush which is near Frank Wood's house. A stream of water from a hydrant soon extinguished the flames.

Sustains Broken Shoulder.

H. D. Moulton was taken to the Springfield hospital Wednesday morning in an ambulance. Tuesday evening while driving home the wheel of the buggy which he was in caught in the car tracks and overturned the team, throwing Mr. Moulton out. # The Farm Hand

"I don't see, Ianthe, why you persist in going to the country every season," said Mrs. Montague, frowning slightly.

Ianthe, a tall, graceful girl of 20, smiled wisely. "I think you have a faint idea why I go," she answered.

Mrs. Montague flushed a little and looked uncomfortable. "Well, I know I'm fond of Mr. Dean, and if you knew him I'm sure you'd like him, too. No one can blame me if I want to see my only child comfortably settled. Some time, sooner or later, I shall have to give up my little girl, and I had rather give her to him than to any one else. He's a man every one likes and trusts, somehow."

Ianthe slipped her arm about her mother's neck tenderly "I know you think only of my good, mamma, dear," she murmured. "But you won't have to give me up for—oh, a long time yet, I hope."

"Mrs. Norcross will be so disappointed, Ianthe," said Mrs. Montague, after a moment of silence. "She has set her heart upon your coming with me."

"I don't want to visit Mrs. Norcross, mother—I might go if Mr. Dean wasn't such a frequent caller at her home. And I do want to go down to Mrs. Kingsley's again."

The following week found Ianthe Montague at the Kingsley's. Mrs Kingsley had been an old schoolmate of her mother, and for the past two summers the girl had spent a few weeks at her home. Her chief reason for going was that she did not want to meet the man whose good qualities her mother was always exploiting Mrs. Montague had first met him at Mrs. Norcross' home two years ago.

It was the hay-making season and the Kingsleys had several farm hands Two of them Ianthe remembered seeing the previous summer, but the third, a tall, fine-looking young man, with a highly intellectual face, was a stranger.

Ianthe looked at him frequently in astonishment and wondered why a man of this type should have no higher ambition

At the end of a month she began to fear that she was thinking of him more than she should, and when two months had elapsed she was obliged to confess to herself that she was really beginning to care for James Clifford. She knew it was shameful

She, a descendant of a family who prided itself upon never marrying outside of its own class, was actually fond of a poor farm hand. She declared that she would thrust him from her.

Picking up a book, she went out into the grove back of the house and tried to fix her wandering attention upon its contents. But she turned the leaves absent-mindedly, for her thought refused to leave James Clifford.

Just then a step sounded behind her, and turning quickly she beheld the object of her thoughts. In spite of herself a deep crimson mounted to her brow It seemed almost as if she had spoken her thoughts and he had heard them

"I have something to say to you, Miss Montague," he said, seating himself beside her on the settee. "Mrs Kingsley has told me that you think of returning home tomorrow."

"Yes," she answered, briefly. This was an unheard of liberty for him, to sit beside her, and she tried to look displeased, but she made a miserable failure of it

"You must have seen that I love you, Ianthe," he began, boldly, just as if he had been her equal "If you can only care for me a little I shall be the happiest man on earth."

Ianthe was silent, but she thought rapidly. She must not listen to him, she told herself. It would break her mother's heart if she should promise to marry James Clifford Still he was a noble man, and she loved—yes, she loved him with her whole heart

"Are you angry, Ianthe?" he asked when she did not speak "I understand—you don't care for me, and—"

Ianthe looked up shyly "I haven't said—I didn't—care," she faltered

"Is it—possible that you care for a poor man?" he asked, reaching over and taking one of the small hands in his own.

"It makes no difference to me—whether you are rich or poor," she answered, softly

"I've something to confess, Ianthe," he said, after a moment. There was an anxious look on his face "I'm not what you thought me," he went on. "I've deceived you, but say you'll forgive me——"

"I don't understand," interposed the girl in bewilderment.

"I'm not a farm hand—my name is James Clifford—Dean, the man you didn't want to meet," he went on "I learned from Mrs Norcross that you were coming here and it was not difficult for me to guess why you didn't care to visit her with your mother. As Frank Kingsley and I used to be good friends at college, I came here and pretended to be one of the farm hands. I was curious to see the girl who didn't want to see me And from the moment I saw you, Ianthe, I have loved you. You'll forgive me for the deception, won't you, dear?" he pleaded.

Ianthe looked into his face with a smile. "There's really nothing for me to forgive," she murmured happily

The Hampden Murder

Old Hampden was dead—murdered!

It semed odd that it could be so, that morning as I walked up the wide avenue leading to the great stone building that had stood on Hampden Heights for a hundred years.

He had been buried three weeks, when they telegraphed for me, and, on my arrival, I went to the house, up into the room where they had found him lying so ghastly and grim.

The best detectives in the city had examined the house, and failed to find a clue. I could hardly hope to do better than they had done, but I made the circuit of the apartment three times, I examined the doors, then the windows, and finally, without the least idea of finding anything, glanced behind the screen that half concealed the fireplace; for John Hampden, having a fondness for old-time ways, clung to the broad stone hearths and wide chimneys of ancient days.

For a moment I was startled at what I saw, but recovering myself I stooped down and examined it.

There, firmly stamped in the half-baked ashes, was the imprint of a foot, a singularly made affair, looking as though the foot that wore it was deformed.

I went out of the house and passed round to the eastern side.

A horse had been tethered in a cluster of trees not far away, and there, hidden in the rotten end of a decaying log, I found the boot itself, stiff with human gore.

The name of the manufacturer was stamped on the inside, and taking the down train the next morning, I called at his office.

I described the article, and asked him the name of his customer.

"His name is Hughes," replied the bootmaker, "and I am now making him another pair. He will call for them in less than an hour."

"Please detain him until I return if I should not be in when he comes," I said.

"By what right do you command such a thing?"

"This."

I opened my coat and showed the glittering badge that shone brightly as the sunshine rested on it.

A shadow fell for a moment on the door-sill and a half-suppressed imprecation reached by ears. I looked up, and standing before me, his eyes riveted on the glimmering badge of my office, was a man whom I instinctively felt to be the one for whom I was seeking.

He suspected my object, for as I advanced toward him he turned and fled down the street.

"That was the very man!" cried the dealer.

"I thought so," I replied, and hastily leaving the shop, I hurried to the chief of police. Like a swift flash the wires of the telegraph had carried a minute description of the assassin to all points in the city, and the outlets of escape were effectually guarded.

But like a fox under cover, he kept us at bay, and it was two weeks and over ere, in the densely populated city, I found him.

One evening a lady and two gentlemen stopped at the hotel where I boarded, and engaged rooms. One of the gentlemen was very ill, and muffled completely in shawls and comforters.

I often sent up fruit and little delicacies to tempt his appetite, and once went to his door; but he declined to see me, stating that he was really too ill and dispirited to see any one.

The next thing I heard was his death, and his wife, a young and elegant-looking lady, wrote me a note asking me to send an undertaker to them.

I watched the hearse drive up to the door the next morning to convey the corpse to the train, for it had been his request to have his body buried in his native state. Yielding to an uncontrollable impulse, I followed the body, and seated myself near the coffin after it had been deposited in the baggage car.

His wife wept profusely, and would not leave the corpse, so the officials made her as comfortable as possible where she was.

The lady seemed very nervous, and after a while asked me if it would not be pleasanter for me to sit with the other passengers. But I preferred to remain where I was. My eyes could not and would not leave that dismal coffin, and I looked at it so long and attentively that it seemed as if every nail and curve would be branded on my memory forever.

At last I walked up to it, and was about to turn back the reversible lid that covered the glass over the face when she sprang at me with a wild cry.

What before had been in my mind only a vague something shaped itself suddenly into a strong suspicion, and throwing back the lid, I pushed her off and looked in.

There, with his mouth and nose pressed closely to a small aperture in the side of the coffin, his eyes staring blindly into mine, and his livid face covered with great drops of sweat, was the man for whom I was seeking—the murderer of John Hampden.

He was not yet recovered from the effects of the drug he had taken, and I secured him easily.

DATES FROM THE ROMAN ERA

World Conquers Had What Corresponded to Daily Newspaper—The First English Publication

The first daily newspaper in English appeared in London March 11, 1702, 210 years ago.

News letters and pamphlets printed from time to time when news or politics warranted had been common enough during the latter half of the preceding century, but these were in no sense newspapers.

The first "daily" was called The Daily Courant, and was published by E. Mallet, "against the Ditch at Fleet bridge"—close by the site of the present London Times office. The paper was only a single sheet of two columns. It professed to give only foreign news with the name of the foreign source.

So keen was the publisher to steer clear of any responsibility for his news, and to hide himself and his views in the background, that he says in his first issue in so many words he will make no comments of his own, "supposing other people to have sense enough to make reflections for themselves."

The Daily Courant, which lasted until 1735, may be said to be the first daily newspaper in anything like the modern sense Yet the Romans had a publication called Daily Happenings (Acta Diurna) which noted the movements of the armies and elections, games, sacrifices or wonders of the town. These were written out by special officers, deposited in the state archives, and copies posted about the city. A few circulated privately. A Roman satirist describes a lady looking over the news in the morning.

London as a Frenchman Sees It.

The little French boy has every opportunity of getting an engaging idea of London In a recent volume of French and general geography, which has run into several editions, the compiler gives an English reading from the works of M Enault, whoever he may be And the little French boy is told concerning the London of this century that there are in the best parts of our unhappy city "whole streets formed of dens dug out of the soil, which itself was only a mass of rubbish" And again: "A little further on, bands of half-starved men without fire or shelter take refuge in gypsy vans, which vans are buried up to the axletree in mud" People also sleep in wheelless cabs, for which they pay a rent of 12½ cents a week We Londoners should not have known anything about this if M Enault had not told us!—London Chronicle.

Serious Omission.

The new millionaire's banquet table was spread, and the guests about to be summoned.

"Are you sure there are no reporters present?" anxiously asked the host of the butler.

"I've made certain of it, sir."

"Then go out and get a few," rejoined the host.—Canadian Courier.

Look for the Good Intention.

It never pays to attribute an intentional unkindness to anyone. People are careless and selfish, it is true, but they are seldom enough interested to take the trouble to be really vindictive. But alas! the magnifying glass of self-love, what does it not lead us to believe?

Irrigation in Chile.

Chile is producing great harvets of cotton and other valuable staples by extended irrigation. Already about 2,500,000 acres of her territory are being treated in this way and about as much more of her land is available for the same purpose.

Seeking A Sensation

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press)

Carruthers jammed his note book into his pocket; lit his big calabash pipe, took up his walking stick and soft hat and whistled to his dog, Mike. A moment later he was swinging off across the fields surrounding the aviation club.

Carruthers could not tell the dog that he had written a story in which an airship figured and that his knowledge of bird men and their craft was lamentably meager.

"We will stroll about the fields, Mikey, in the hope that some conqueror of the air will chance to pass over our ignorant heads. In that way we may glean a sufficient atmosphere to make our story real."

Half an hour later Carruthers was lying full length in the long grass. Mike, more or less disgusted that the walk had turned out as it usually did, nosed about for venturesome snakes and moles.

Suddenly he pricked up his ears. A buzzing as of many bees disturbed the silence. The noise grew louder, nearer, Mike circled about like mad until he caught sight of the great flying thing that was approaching nearer and nearer.

Mike, completely disgusted at his master's lack of enthusiasm, put his nose to the sky and yelped frantically at the flying monster.

His efforts were successful. Carruthers awoke from his dreaming and sat bolt upright.

Steady and smooth as a bark on a calm sea the bi-plane sailed majestically through the air.

"By Jove, Mike!" Carruthers exclaimed in his enthusiasm, "I would give the whole of my last cheque for the sensation of gliding through space like that!"

As if in direct answer to his desire a missive came hurling down from the airship.

Carruthers picked up the missive and read:

"Whoever finds this note of mine,
Can fly with me at any time.
Call at hangar number nine.
"N. QUILLER."

We will have to wait until tomorrow for our sensation," he told Mike as they made their way back to the lonely bungalow on the hill.

But the next day rain came down in torrents and the wind blew. Carruthers had a vague notion that bird men did not make flights in rainy weather.

The following day he and Mike set out for the aviation grounds.

Carruthers slackened his pace but when he drew near to the hangar that bore the name of N. Quiller.

Within, voices were heard and outside lay the great bi-plane.

Carruthers knocked at the green door and Mike barked imperiously.

A small man came from within and through the smoky goggles of his leather bonnet looked at the author.

With a hesitating gesture Carruthers held out the square of lead with its bit of paper.

"I am looking for a man by the name of N. Quiller—the man who dropped this—"

A silvery laugh came from behind the goggles. Carruthers started back.

"So you picked up my note." The laugh came again and Carruthers found himself making music of it. "I hoped it would be found and if you are ready we will go up immediately."

Carruthers had drawn away in his embarrassment. "I—I— had not expected to find a— lady," he said hesitatingly and twirling his cap in a vague, undecided manner.

The voice from behind the goggles was slightly mocking. "You are not afraid, are you?"

"I might be if I could see your face," Carruthers told her with his whimsical smile.

Natalia Quiller colored swiftly beneath the leather bonnet, "Then you can not see my face until we reach terra firma," she cried laughingly. "Come—I will take you up as my note promised."

"Don't you want to know the name of your passenger in case—"

"In case we come down quicker than we expect?" she laughed. "Yes," she said with sudden softness, "yes—I would like to know your name."

"John Carruthers—and that is my dog, Mike."

"Is my passenger then, the John Carruthers of short story fame?"

"I was seeking sensations for a story when your missive nearly took my ear off," the author said.

"I hope you find—sensations," Natalia said with a wicked light in the eyes behind the goggles. And Carruthers found more than a story—he found a wife in the air.

Tactful Request.

Dobbleigh was a confirmed borrower, and, what was worse, he seldom returned the borrowed articles. He had held on to Whibley's umbrella, for instance, for nearly a year.

"And I'm blest if I know how I am ever going to get it back," said Whibley.

"Easy," said Hickenlooper. 'Call a messenger and send Dobbleigh this note."

And he scribbled off the following: 'Dear Dobbleigh: If you can spare it I'd like to borrow that umbrella of mine for a couple of days. Can you oblige me?"—Harper's Weekly.

Lady Pamela's Dishonorable Deed

(Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.)

I was staying with Lady Pamela at her lovely house in town.

Lady Pamela and I had been at school together and later had spent two years "finishing" in France and Germany.

Then we had come home; and the next time I heard from her she was engaged to Lord Gerald Lumley. Six months later they were married, and, after seemingly endless globe-trotting, had settled down at Lumley Court in Kent.

That was fifteen years ago, and since then Lady Pamela has never missed having me with her for a month or so during the London season.

"Let us have a quiet evening together, Helen," she had said one afternoon. And I had heartily agreed, for the bustle and fatigue of dinner parties, theaters and balls during the last three weeks had thoroughly tired me.

I drifted into Lady Pamela's boudoir and found her gazing with thoughtful eyes at a little silver casket she held in her hand.

Slowly she opened the delicate silver box and took from it a visiting card. Then she put it back and closed the box with a tiny snap.

"Pamela!" I said. "You look quite serious. There must be some tragic tale connected with that card."

Lady Pamela started. Then she smiled.

"There is a story, Helen, but it is hardly tragic—at least to the person most concerned. It happened eight years ago. Gerald and I were staying in this very house, and I was giving a dance—one of the biggest of the season.

"I had staying with me at the time a very beautiful girl. Her name was Cynthia Carruthers. It was her first season and London had gone wild over her. On the night of the ball Cynthia came to me. I knew she was in trouble or difficulty, but had not asked her anything, knowing that it would all come out sooner or later. And it did that evening.

"It appeared there were two men—only two—whom she really cared for. Both were to be at the ball and both, she expected, would propose to her.

"The poor girl was nearly distracted. She could not decide which to accept and came to me as helpless as a baby.

"The two men were Major Bewsher and Lieutenant Carstairs. Both were handsome. Carstairs was young, and poor as a rat. Bewsher had money. Of him I had my suspicions. Monte Carlo—drink—cards. Nothing serious, of course, but there all the same.

"I liked the boy Carstairs, but knew little about him.

"'Well, Cynthia,' I remember saying, 'you must take Major Bewsher and give up Carstairs.' 'Oh! no, no, no,' she had cried, and when I said 'Very well, then take Carstairs, you silly girl,' she burst into sobs and said she could not give up Bewsher, and so on.

"In fact the girl simply did not know her own mind, and begged me to decide for her.

"'Very well,' I said, 'I will do so—or rather I shall help you to decide for yourself. But you must promise to abide by whatever decision we come to.'

"She promised.

"'You see this box,' I explained, 'and you see these two cards. On them I have written the names of your two admirers. You will draw one from the box and you must accept the man whose name you draw.'

"She turned very pale; then with an effort she reached for the box and with trembling fingers drew out one of the cards.

"'Well,' I said, 'and who is the lucky man?' And she whispered 'Carstairs.'

"That evening Carstairs proposed. Cynthia accepted and they were married shortly afterward. Then his regiment was ordered out to India and she went with him. Five years later, when Carstairs had come into money and a title, and Bewsher had, well—shot himself in the Casino Gardens, I met Cynthia.

"From a beautiful girl she had grown into a beautiful woman. She had two darling boys and was as happy as a woman can be. I invited her down to Lumley Court.

"One evening she showed me a visiting card. It was one of my own, and on it was written the name 'Carstairs.' It was the card she had drawn on the evening of the ball. She told me she treasured it as her most priceless possession, and—and this, Helen, is the other."

"I see," I said, "the other, on which you had written the name of Major Bewsher."

"No," said Lady Pamela quietly, "on which I had also written the name of Lieutenant Carstairs."

Tit for Tat.

"You'll have to send for another doctor," said the one who had been called, after a glance at the patient.

"Ah I so ill as that?" gasped the sufferer.

"I don't know just how ill you are," replied the man of medicine, "but I know you're the lawyer who cross-examined me when I appeared as an expert witness. My conscience won't let me kill you, and I'll be hanged if I want to cure you."

Debt Collection.

No doubt the world does owe all of us a debt, but the question of collection is one which does not seem to be in a fair way to be settled. It is a lamentable fact that there will never again be such brilliant truths and witticisms spoken as those which were given to the world by the ancients. Still, there is balm in reflecting that they were born before we were and naturally had the first chance.

Willows as Mourning Symbol.

The Babylonian willow, with its long drooping branches, has come to be the symbol of mourning the world over. Even in China it is planted as such. There seems to be much authority for believing that it was upon this tree that the Israelites hung their harps before their sorrowing departure from Babylon, whence, perhaps, arose the symbolism of the tree.

Prescience.

"There is coming a break in your life through a blonde woman." "I knew it! My nice dinner set is going to get smashed by our new Swedish cook!"

Scottville, Mich.—"I want to tell you how much good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Sanative Wash have done me. I live on a farm and have worked very hard. I am forty-five years old, and am the mother of thirteen children. Many people think it strange that I am not broken down with hard work and the care of my family, but I tell them of my good friend, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and that there will be no backache and bearing down pains for them if they will take it as I have. I am scarcely ever without it in the house.

"I will say also that I think there is no better medicine to be found for young girls. My eldest daughter has taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for painful periods and irregularity, and it has helped her.

"I am always ready and willing to speak a good word for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I tell every one I meet that I owe my health and happiness to your wonderful medicine." —Mrs. J. G. JOHNSON, Scottville, Mich., R.F.D. 3.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotics or harmful drugs, and today holds the record of being the most successful remedy for woman's ills known.

HUNTING LAWS, 1912.

Regulations Which Sportsmen Will Do Well to Heed.

CHANGES FROM LAST YEAR'S RULES.

Dates of Seasons, Number Which May Be Killed, Game Protected, Possible Penalties.

The Massachusetts Fish and Game Commissioners have issued the laws for 1912, and many changes are made over the last year's laws.

The season for hunting ducks, geese and brant opens September 15 and closes December 31; a bag limit is placed on black duck of 15 in any one day. The season on partridge, woodcock and quail opens October 19 this year and closes November 12, inclusive; bag limit, three partridge in any one day and 15 for the season. Bag limit on woodcock and quail, four in any one day and 20 in the season.

The season on hares and rabbits opens October 15 and closes February 28, inclusive. The season for gray squirrels opens October 15 and closes November 14, inclusive; bag limit five in one day, 15 in the season.

The legal taking of deer will be the same as last year, one to each licensed hunter. The season will begin at sunrise on the third Monday of November and close at sunset the following Saturday.

All persons must secure from the town or city clerk a license for hunting. Fee for unnaturalized foreign-born citizens, $15; non-residents, $10; citizens of Massachusetts, $1.00. This year's law allows a non-resident and foreign-born citizen to hunt deer providing they secure a license.

Pheasants are not to be hunted or killed; penalty, $50. Wood duck swans, wild pigeons, upland plover, piping killdeer, plover, herons, bittern, eagles, fish hawks, marsh hawks, small owls, gulls and terns are not to be killed at any time, or the feathers used for millinery purposes, penalty, $10 to $50.

It is unlawful to buy or sell or otherwise dispose of any partridge, woodcock or quail; penalty, $20 for each bird or part thereof.

It is unlawful to send or attempt to carry any game out of the state; penalty $10 to $20 for each bird. Hunting on the Lord's Day is prohibited; penalty, $10 to $20.

The setting of snares or traps is prohibited, except that farmers and fruit growers by permission of the fish and game commissioners may trap rabbits; penalty, $10 to $20. Eggs and nests of birds are not to be taken or disturbed; penalty, $10. Insectivorous and song birds not to be killed, captured, or held in possession at any time or used for millinery purposes; penalty, $10.

In hunting deer, shot guns only are to be used; penalty for using rifle, $100. Every person killing, wounding or injuring a deer in the open week of hunting must report at once to the fish and game commission, State House, Boston; for failure to do so within 24 hours the penalty is not exceeding $100. It is unlawful to sell or offer for sale the whole or any part of a deer killed in Massachusetts. It is also against the law to set or use a trap, salt lick or other device for the purpose of ensnaring, enticing, taking or injuring or killing a deer; penalty, $100.

The above laws are of much interest to those interested in game, and are published in the Journal for the first time.

Macadam Road Being Built.

State is Putting in Small Strip Near Wire Mill to Close Gap.

Work was commenced Tuesday, under the direction of D. L. Bodfish, on the construction of a short strip of macadam road at Shearer's Corner, to connect the end of the road built by the town of Palmer with the strip built by the state, which ended at the wire mill road. The strip is being built under the small towns act, and will make a continuous macadam road from the Brookfields to Springfield, with the exception of Park street in the village of Palmer. During the construction of the road teams and autos will be obliged to use the street car track in order to negotiate a way past the work. An attempt was made to open the old road across the tracks of the Ware River and Central Vermont railroads, which is just west of the present road, but the conditions were such that the selectmen did not deem it advisable. The excavation for the new road is to go down two feet, but as it will not come nearer than five feet to the car track, that and the space occupied by the rails will give room for passing.

Ware Boy Badly Hurt.

Parts of Fingers Blown Off by Explosion of Dynamite Caps.

Leo, the 14-years-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Gervais of Ware, was badly hurt last Friday morning at his home on Maple street by the explosion of dynamite caps. He was playing with two of the caps when they exploded in his hands, blowing off parts of his fingers. Dr. W. W. Miner was called and at once removed the boy to his office, where he found it necessary to amputate the thumb and two first fingers of the left hand and the top of the thumb of the right hand. The boy was also quite painfully hurt about the face, it being necessary to take two stitches in the lower lip. Young Gervais says he found the caps near Stevens's well, near his home. He had a nearly filled box of them. They are used in exploding dynamite charges.

Hampden Woolen Mills Sold.

The water privileges of the Ravine mill and the old Lacowsic woolen company on the Scantic river at Hampden were sold Saturday to Frank J. Millea of the Enterprise plating company of Springfield. The Ravine mill property includes all the land about the pond and dam, which belonged to the estate of Horace Kimball. The Ravine privilege, which is the lower on the Scantic, is much the better of the two, and can now be increased by raising the dam a few feet. This could not be done while the Lacowsic was owned by another party, as the back water would interfere with a water-wheel at the Lacowsic. The Raven mill was burned about eight years ago, and the Lacowsic mill was burned about 18 years ago.

BRIMFIELD.

Attended the Triennial.

The following were among those who attended the triennial of the academy alumni last week Thursday and stayed over to renew acquaintances in the town: Mr. and Mrs. George W. Earle and Master Charles Earle of Hyde Park, Rev. Willis T. Sparhawk of Randolph, Vt., Mrs. Laura Spaulding Chappell and Miss Helen Chappell of Guilford, Ct., Albert Bacon of Dorchester, Mrs. Nettie Lawrence Jordan of Framingham, Miss Martha Jones of Boston, Miss Gertrude Maynard of Providence, R. I., Mr. and Mrs. Frank H. Brown, Miss Bernice Brown and Mr. and Mrs. John Putnam of Port Chester, N. Y., Edson Noyes of Haverhill, Mrs. Ellen Charles Bliss and Miss Bertha Bliss of Brookline, Mr. and Mrs. Jonathan Davenport of Colrain, Mrs. Julia Leonard Hagar of Auburn, R. I., Mrs. Mary Bacon Smith, Miss Alice M. Bacon, Mrs. Mary Newton, Miss Julia Newton, Miss Julia T. Brown, Mrs. Carrie Brown Marsh, Miss Carrie Bacon, Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Baker of Springfield, Miss Hazel Jones of Ludlow, Mrs. Carrie Spaulding Fiske of Boston, Niss Nellie Nolan of Fiskdale, Miss Marion Legg of Worcester, Mrs. Lena Webber Butterworth of Beverly, Mr. and Mrs. John Carlin of Swanzey, N. H., Mrs. Ella Baker Smith of Springville, N. Y., Mrs. Ida Baker Pike and Miss Pike of Salem, Mrs. Delia Leydon Griggs of Appanaug, R. I., Clarence Stowell of Providence. There were present at the reunion of the alumni two members of the class that entered the school upon its establishment in 1855. They were Mrs. Ellen Charles Bliss of Brookline and George M. Hitchcock of Brimfield, clerk of the board of trustees.

Rev. and Mrs. William Jennings have returned from a three-weeks' vacation.

Miss Hattie Eaton of Mooers, N. Y., formerly of Brimfield, was a guest last week of friends in town.

Roland Cox, a student at Worcester Tech, has been the guest of his cousin, Miss Gladys Monroe.

Miss A. Gertrude Maynard has returned to her home in Auburn, R. I., after spending a few days with Miss Tarbell.

A pleasant dancing party was held at the hotel Saturday evening. Among the out-of-town guests were Miss Marion Legg and Miss Violet Legg of Worcester, Mrs. Marion Stowell Clough of Providence, R. I., Miss Marjorie Stewart of North Brookfield, Roland Cox of Hartford, Allen Boardman of Waterbury, Ct., and John Newton of Springfield.

A pleasant gathering of relatives and friends was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Orus Parker over the week-end. The guests were Mrs. Olivia M. Kinney, Walter E. Kinney and Nelson P. Sanford of Rochester, N. Y., Mr. and Mrs. Oscar F. Kinney and their daughter Katherine and Mr. and Mrs. Sumner P. Kinney of Albany, N. Y., and Orville Parker of Springfield.

Robert J. Streeter left Monday to begin her duties as instructor in history in Quincy high school.

TO PROTECT OUR FOOD.

New Cold Storage Law Went Into Effect Monday.

DEALERS MUST TELL IF THEY SELL.

Artificial Temperature of 40 Degrees For 30 Days Makes "Cold Storage" Goods.

A law passed by the Legislature last May, entitled "An act to regulate the cold storage of certain food products," went into effect on September 1, which was Monday, so the effect was not felt until Tuesday, as the stores were all closed on Monday, Labor Day.

The new law provides that all stores handling products which have been in cold storage shall display a sign as follows: "Cold storage goods sold here," and also declares that it shall be unlawful to represent as fresh any goods which have been in cold storage. According to the terminology of the act, goods have been in cold storage if they have been in any place artificially cooled to a temperature of 40 degrees Fahrenheit for a period of 30 days. The articles referred to are fresh meat, fresh meat products, except in the process of manufacture, fresh food, fish, poultry, eggs and butter. The act further provides that anyone conducting a cold storage plant shall secure a license from the state board of health, that no article of food shall be held in storage for more than 12 calendar months, and that food once taken from the storage warehouse for the purposes of sale shall not be returned to the warehouse.

A little inquiry yesterday showed that few of the local dealers were acquainted with the provisions of the new act, and some of them had never even heard of it. There can be no doubt however that it is in full force, and dealers in butter, eggs, etc., which have been refrigeratored as outlined above will do well to provide themselves with signs announcing that they sell cold storage butter and eggs.

New Use For Electric Light.

Man Uses It to Enable Him to See to Build House at Night.

Automobilists and patrons of the mid-evening electric cars on the Springfield line have noted an example of industry near the Green stock farm. Just east of this farm on the south side of the highway is a stone post which marks the dividing line between the towns of Palmer, Monson and Wilbraham, and close to it stands a small house. Repairs have been under way there recently and an addition has been built on one side. The owner evidently has another job during the day, for at night he has electric lights to aid him in his carpenter and other work on the outside of the building. Passersby have noted him sitting on a staging with a light in a convenient position to light his work, whistling merrily as he sawed and nailed, apparently as conveniently situated as though he had daylight to work in.

Game Preserve in Palmer.

Mr. Elmore, who owns the Olney farm, just above Forest Lake, has requested the Massachusetts Fish and Game Commissioners to post his land containing 160 acres. This will make this well known tract of hunting territory a state preserve and it will be unlawful to hunt or pursue wild birds or quadrupeds or enter upon said premises with firearms. Penalty for violations $100, or by imprisonment for not more than 60 days, or both such fine and imprisonment.

HAMPDEN.

Death of Mrs. Moses H. Warren.

Mrs. Moses H. Warren, 76, died at her home in Hampden Wednesday afternoon. She had been in ill health for some time, but was taken suddenly ill Sunday morning. Mrs. Warren's maiden name was Louise M. Alden. She was born in Springfield October 24, 1836, and was educated there. Her first husband was Albert Burleigh of Palmer. After Mr. Burleigh's death she continued to live in Palmer until her marriage to Mr. Warren in 1894. She was a member of the Congregational church in Hampden, and was always active in church work. Besides her husband, she leaves a brother, Joel M. Alden of Springfield. The funeral was held at the house this afternooon at 1 o'clock and the body was brought to Palmer for burial in Oak Knoll cemetery.

Miss Eva Howlett has returned to her duties in Maynard.

Marcus S. Beebe has resigned as manager of the baseball nine.

Henry W. Chapman has moved his family into the house adjoining his blacksmith shop.

Express at 40 Miles an Hour Hit Warren Lad.

ACCIDENT WITNESSED BY SEVERAL.

Was Playing In Park Sunday Afternoon; Stepped Behind Freight In Front Of Passenger.

Edmond Bernard Durant, the seven-years-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Edmond P. Durant of Pine street, Warren, was instantly killed Sunday afternoon, when he was struck by train 41, westbound, at the Boston and Albany station in Warren.

The boy, accompanied by a playmate, George Hack, seven years old, started to cross the track just back of a freight train and stepped in front of the passenger train, which was running 40 miles an hour. People in the park who saw the boys called to them to go back and they both turned and started back. Hack kept going and was just cleared by the train, but Durant became confused and stopped for an instant. The body was picked up on the cow-catcher and carried about 50 feet and then fell off and the train ran over it, mutilating it terribly. It was taken to the baggage room and Dr. John E. Dalton was called, but the boy was dead before he arrived.

The body was viewed by Medical Examiner E. W. Norwood and was later taken to the undertaking rooms of James N. F. Quinlan on Quaboag street, where it was prepared for burial and from there was taken to his home on Pine street. The funeral was held Tuesday.

DARES DEATH FOR $1.42.

Low Prices Paid to Men Who Make Parachute Drops.

SALARY $5 A WEEK AND EXPENSES.

Not Living Wages, So Little Wonder Man Stole to Provide Himself With Clothes.

The arrest in Ware last week of one of the young men who made numerous parachute drops during the week at Forest Lake brought out some peculiar facts, including the one that the balloonists risked their lives half a dozen times a week for about $1.68 a time, or if they worked Sunday, as they do in some places, the price is reduced to $1.42.

The young man was arrested for the larceny of a cap, which he had not the funds to purchase, after providing himself with shoes, which he had to have. In court he stated that he was employed by Prof. Gowdy to make balloon ascensions and parachute drops. For this work he was paid $5 a week and expenses. He was one of two employes, who took turns in making the ascensions.

Nearly everybody has seen balloon ascensions and parachute drops. After watching the filling of the big bag they stand almost breathless while it soars away with the "Professor" hanging by his knees to the trapeze bar below. It rises higher and higher, and then, on signal of two pistol shots from the watcher on the ground the man below the balloon is seen to drop suddenly and what breath has remained with the spectators leaves them entirely until the parachute opens and the man's descent becomes gradual and he lands safely. Sometimes two and three drops are made, one after the other. A single drop is rarely ever at a height less than 1000 feet, which is increasing according to the number of drops to 5000 feet at times. Usually, at summer resorts two ascensions are made daily, and often Sunday is included, making a seven-day week. On this basis each man goes up seven times a week, and takes a chance on the parachute opening for about $1.42, on the basis that his board costs his employer $5 a week. It's a long chance for small money.

A few years ago, when ascensions of this kind were not so plentiful as now, they cost about $200 for the first and $100 for the second, and $75 for each succeeding flight as long as the engagement lasted. This included, of course, the furnishing of everything needed—apparatus, railroad transportation, etc.—for the attraction. The prices soon attracted the attention of numerous young people—both men and women—of nerve, and the number who were available for the business increased rapidly. With the increase in number came a drop in price, until now it is possible to get triple parachute drops for as little as $50 a trip, or even less where a week's engagement can be had so as to save railroad fares, etc. The work is not hard, but the chance is great. The landing cannot be selected by the man making the drop, and he is liable to land in trees, lakes or rivers, often far from his starting point, and in the night he may be compelled to camp in the open with no covering but the balloon—if he is fortunate to be able to find it after he reaches the ground.

WARREN.

Elmer A. Lincoln has moved his family to Rochester, N. Y.

Mrs. Charles H. Comins has returned from a two-weeks' vacation in Dana.

The marriage of Miss Mary F. Peasly and George H. Flint, both of Worcester, took place Sunday afternoon in the Methodist church. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Eugene Thrasher, brother-in-law of the bride, before a few immediate relatives. After a short trip, they will make their home in Worcester.

The public schools opened Tuesday morning, with the following corps of teachers: High school principal, A. J. Clow; assistants, William F. Taylor, Misses Katherine Wilbur, Anna M. French, Bertha Lewis and Mary Harwood; grades in high school building, Misses Eva H. Hines, Rose I. Tagan and Mary A. St. George; East street, Miss Carolyn A. Irwin, principal, Miss Ruby Bailey, Miss Effie L. Agard, Miss L. Alice Hoe, Miss Mary E. Donahue and Miss E. Marion Corey; West Warren, Miss Minnie E. Chapel, principal, Miss Mary McMahon, Miss Mary O'Neil and Miss Fannie Frost.

The premium lists for the Palmer fair are ready for distribution.

CHAPTER XVII.

For six weeks hand-running Daylight had seen nothing of Dede except in the office, and there he resolutely refrained from making approaches. But by the seventh Sunday his hunger for her overmastered him. It was a stormy day. A heavy southeast gale was blowing, and squall after squall of rain and wind swept over the city. He could not take his mind off of her, and a persistent picture came to him of her sitting by a window and sewing feminine fripperies of some sort. When the time came for his pre-luncheon cocktail to be served to him in his rooms, he did not take it. Filled with a daring determination, he glanced at his note-book for Dede's telephone number, and called for the switch.

At first it was the landlady's daughter who was raised, but in a minute he heard the voice he had been hungry to hear.

"I just wanted to tell you that I'm coming out to see you," he said. I didn't want to break in on you without warning, that was all."

"Has something happened?" came her voice.

"I'll tell you when I get there," he evaded.

She came herself to the door to receive him and shake hands with him. He hung his mackintosh and hat on the rack in the comfortable hall and turned to her for direction.

"They are busy in there," she said, indicating the parlor, from which came the boisterous voices of young people, and through the open door of which he could see several college youths. "So you will have to come into my rooms."

She led the way through the door opening out of the hall to the right, and, once inside, he stood awkwardly rooted to the floor, gazing about him and at her and all the time trying not to gaze. In his perturbation he failed to hear and see her invitation to a seat.

"Won't you sit down?" she repeated.

"Look here," he said, in a voice that shook with passion, "there's one thing I won't do, and that's propose to you in the office. That's why I'm here. Dede Mason, I want you, I just want you."

So precipitate was he, that she had barely time to cry out her involuntary alarm and to step back, at the same time catching one of his hands as he attempted to gather her into his arms.

"Oh, I know I'm a sure enough fool," he said. "I—I guess I'll sit down. Don't be scairt, Miss Mason. I'm not real dangerous."

"I'm not afraid," she answered, with a smile, slipping down herself into a chair.

"It's funny," Daylight sighed, almost with regret; "here I am, strong enough to bend you around and tie knots in you. Here I am, used to having my will with man, beast or anything. And here I am sitting in this chair, as weak and helpless as a little lamb. You sure take the starch out of me."

"I—I wish you hadn't asked," she said softly.

"Mebbe it's best you should know a few things before you give me an answer," he went on, ignoring the fact that the answer had already been given. "I never went after a woman before in my life, all reports to the contrary notwithstanding. The stuff you read about me in the papers and books, about me being a lady-killer, is all wrong. There's not an iota of truth in it. I guess I've done more than my share of card-playing and whisky-drinking, but women I've let alone. There was a woman that killed herself, but I didn't know she wanted me that bad or else I'd have married her—not for love, but to keep her from killing herself. She was the best of the boiling, but I never gave her any encouragement. I'm telling you all this because you've read about it, and I want you to get it straight from me."

"I can't marry you," she said. "I like you a great deal, but—"

He waited a moment for her to complete the sentence, failing which, he went on himself.

"I haven't an exaggerated opinion of myself, so I know I ain't bragging when I say I'll make a pretty good husband. You could follow your own sweet will, and nothing would be too good for you. I'd give you everything your heart desired—"

"Except yourself," she interrupted suddenly, almost sharply. "Don't you see?" she hurried on. "I could have far easier married the Elam Harnish fresh from Klondike when I first laid eyes on him long ago, than marry you sitting before me now."

He shook his head slowly.

"That's one too many for me. The more you know and like a man the less you want to marry him. Familiarity breeds contempt—I guess that's what you mean."

"No, no," she cried, but before she could continue, a knock came on the door.

His eyes, quick with observation like an Indian's, darted about the room while she was out. The impression of warmth and comfort and beauty predominated, though he was unable to analyze it; while the simplicity delighted him—expensive simplicity, he decided, and most of it leftovers from the time her father went broke and died.

She re-entered the room, and as she crossed it to her chair, he admired the way she walked, while the bronze slippers were maddening.

"I'd like to ask you several questions," he began immediately. "Are you thinking of marrying somebody else?"

"There isn't anybody else. I don't know anybody I like well enough to marry. For that matter, I don't think I am a marrying woman. Office work seems to spoil me for that."

"It strikes me that you're the most marryingest woman that ever made a man sit up and take notice. And now another question. You see, I've just got to locate the lay of the land. Is there anybody you like as much as you like me?"

But Dede had herself well in hand.

"That's unfair," she said. "And if you stop and consider, you will find that you are doing the very thing you disclaimed—namely, nagging. I refuse to answer any more of your questions. Let us talk about other things. How is Bob?"

Half an hour later, whirling along through the rain on Telegraph Avenue toward Oakland, Daylight smoked one of his brown-paper cigarettes and reviewed what had taken place. It was not at all bad, was his summing up though there was much about it that was baffling. There was that liking him the more she knew him and at the same time wanting to marry him less. That was a puzzler.

Once again, on a rainy Sunday, weeks afterward, Daylight proposed to Dede. As on the first time, he restrained himself until his hunger for her overwhelmed him and swept him away in his red automobile to Berkeley. He left the machine several blocks away and proceeded to the house on foot. But Dede was out, the landlady's daughter told him, and added, on second thought, that she was walking in the hills. Furthermore, the young lady directed him where Dede's walk was most likely to extend. Daylight obeyed the girl's instructions, and soon the street he followed passed the last house and itself ceased where began the first steep slopes of the open hills. The air was damp with the on-coming of rain, for the storm had not yet burst, though the rising wind proclaimed its imminence. As far as he could see, there was no sign of Dede on the smooth, grassy hills. To the right, dipping down into a hollow and rising again, was a large, full-grown eucalyptus grove. Here all was noise and movement, the lofty, slender-trunked trees swaying back and forth in the wind and clashing their branches together. In the squalls, above all the minor noises of creaking and groaning, arose a deep thrumming note as of a mighty harp. Knowing Dede as he did, Daylight was confident that he would find her somewhere in this grove where the storm effects were so pronounced. And find her he did, across the hollow and on the exposed crest of the opposing slope where the gale smote its fiercest blows.

"Dede Mason, I Want You, I Just Want You."

"It's the same old thing," he said. "I want you and I've come for you. You've just got to have me, Dede, for the more I think about it the more certain I am that you've got a sneaking liking for me that's something more than just ordinary liking. And you don't dast say that it isn't; now dast you?"

"Please, please," she begged. "We can never marry, so don't let us discuss it."

Daylight decided that action was more efficient than speech. So he stepped between her and the wind and drew her so that she stood close in the shelter of him. An unusually stiff squall blew about them and thrummed overhead in the tree-tops, and both paused to listen. A shower of flying leaves enveloped them, and hard on the heel of the wind came driving drops of rain. He looked down on her and on her hair, wind-blown about her face; and because of her closeness to him and of a fresher and more poignant realization of what she meant to him, he trembled so that she was aware of it in the hand that held hers. She suddenly leaned against him, bowing her head until it rested lightly upon his breast. And so they stood while another squall, with flying leaves and scattered drops of rain rattled past. With equal suddenness she lifted her head and looked at him

"Do you know," she said, "I prayed last night about you. I prayed that you would fail, that you would lose everything—everything."

Daylight stared his amazement at this cryptic utterance.

"That sure beats me. I always said I got out of my depth with women and you've got me out of my depth now. Well, you've just got to explain, that's all."

His arms went around her and held her closely, and this time she did not resist. Her head was bowed, and he could not see her face, yet he had a premonition that she was crying. He had learned the virtue of silence, and he waited her will in the matter Things had come to such a pass that she was bound to tell him something now. Of that he was confident.

"I would dearly like to marry you," she faltered, "but I am afraid. I am proud and humble at the same time that a man like you should care for me. But you have too much money. There's where my abominable common sense steps in. Even if we did marry, you could never be my man—my lover and my husband. You would be your money's man. I know I am a foolish woman, but I want my man for myself. And your money destroys you; it makes you less and less nice. I am not ashamed to say that I love you, because I shall never marry you. And I loved you much when I did not know you at all, when you first came down from Alaska and I first went into the office. You were my hero. You were the Burning Daylight of the gold-diggings, the daring traveler and miner. And you looked it. I don't see how any woman could have looked at you without loving you—then. But you don't look it now. You, a man of the open, have been cooping yourself up in the cities with all that that means. You are becoming something different, something not so healthy, not so clean, not so nice. Your money and your way of life are doing it. You know it. You haven't the same body now that you had then. You are putting on flesh, and it is not healthy flesh. You are kind and genial with me, I know, but you are not kind and genial to all the world as you were then. You have become harsh and cruel. I do love you, but I cannot marry you and destroy love. You are growing into a thing that I must in the end despise. You can't help it. More than you can possibly love me, do you love this business game. This business—and it's all perfectly useless, so far as you are concerned—claims all of you. I sometimes think it would be easier to share you equitably with another woman than to share you with this business. I might have half of you, at any rate. But this business would claim, not half of you, but nine-tenths of you, or ninety-nine hundredths. You hold back nothing; you put all you've got into whatever you are doing—"

"Limit is the sky," he grunted grim affirmation.

"But if you would only play the lover-husband that way. And now I won't say another word," she added. "I've delivered a whole sermon."

She rested now, frankly and fairly, in the shelter of his arms, and both were oblivious to the gale that rushed past them in quicker and stronger blasts. The big downpour of rain had not yet come, but the mist-like squalls were more frequent. Daylight was openly perplexed, and he was still perplexed when he began to speak.

"You've left me no argument. I know I'm not the same man that came from Alaska. I couldn't hit the trail with the dogs as I did in them days. I'm soft in my muscles, and my mind's gone hard. I used to respect men. I despise them now. You see, I spent all my life in the open, and I reckon I'm an open-air man. Why, I've got the prettiest little ranch you ever laid eyes on up in Glen Ellen. That's where I got stuck for the brick-yard. You recollect handling the correspondence. I only laid eyes on the ranch that one time, and I so fell in love with it that I bought it there and then. I just rode around the hills, and was happy as a kid out of school. I'd be a better man living in the country. The city doesn't make me better. You're plumb right there. I know it. But suppose your prayer should be answered and I'd go clean broke and have to work for day's wages? Suppose I had nothing left but that little ranch, and was satisfied to grow a few chickens and scratch a living somehow—would you marry me then, Dede?"

"Why, we'd be together all the time!" she cried.

Then was the moment, among the trees, ere they began the descent of the hill, that Daylight might have drawn her closely to him and kissed her once. But he was too perplexed with the new thoughts she had put into his head to take advantage of the situation. He merely caught her by the arm and helped her over the rougher footing. At the edge of the grove he suggested that it might be better for them to part there, but she insisted that he accompany her as far as the house.

"Do you know," he said, "taking it by and large, it's the happiest day of my life. Dede, Dede, we've just got to get married. It's the only way, and trust to luck for it's coming out all right."

But the tears were threatening to rise in her eyes again, as she shook her head and turned and went up the steps.

CHAPTER XVIII.

When the ferry system began to run, and the time between Oakland and San Francisco was demonstrated to be cut in half, the tide of Daylight's terrific expenditure started to turn. Not that it really did turn, for he promptly went into further investments. Thousands of lots in his residence tracts were sold, and thousands of homes was being built. Factory sites also were selling, and business properties in the heart of Oakland. All this tended to a steady appreciation in the value of Daylight's huge holdings But, as of old, he had his hunch and was riding it. Already he had begun borrowing from the banks. The magnificent profits he made on the land he sold were turned into more land, into more development; and instead of paying off old loans, he contracted new ones. As he had pyramided in Dawson City, he now pyramided in Oakland; but he did it with the knowledge that it was a stable enterprise rather than a risky placer-mining boom.

Work on Daylight's dock system went on apace; yet it was one of those enterprises that consumed money dreadfully and that could not be accomplished as quickly as a ferry system. Not content with manufacturing electricity for his street railways in the old-fashioned way, in power-houses, Daylight organized the Sierra and Salvador Power Company. This immediately assumed large proportions. Crossing the San Joaquin Valley on the way from the mountains, and plunging through the Contra Costa hills, there were many towns, and even a robust city, that could be supplied with power, also with light; and it became a street-and-house-lighting project as well. As soon as the purchase of power sites in the Sierras was rushed through, the survey parties were out and building operations begun. And so it went. There were a thousand maws into which he poured unceasing streams of money.

In the spring of the year the Great Panic came on. The first warning was when the banks began calling in their unprotected loans. Daylight promptly paid the first of several of his personal notes that were presented; then he divined that these demands but indicated the way the wind was going to blow, and that one of those terrific financial storms he had heard about was soon to sweep over the United States. How terrific this particular storm was to be he did not anticipate. Nevertheless, he took every precaution in his power

Other Necessary Furniture

Tastes will differ on the furniture for the balance of the room, but whatever kind of furniture you want for your college room, whether the simplest or the most luxurious, we can show you a most complete and attractive line of strictly high-grade furniture and in patterns new, choice and exclusive, and always at the lowest prices.

Brass-trimmed Enameled Beds

The White Enamel Bed, plain or brass-trimmed, is the most satisfactory bed you can buy for college use. It is always neat and appropriate, it will last throughout the course and then look so well that you can sell it to a freshman for almost as much as you pay for it.

We carry an immense line of these White Enamel Beds, both plain and brass trimmed, but we mention two of our most popular numbers.

4 feet 6 Bed in white enamel, brass trimmed—$4.35.

4 feet 6 Bed in white enamel with full brass top rail and brass trimmings—an extra good Bed at $7.50.

Hair and Felt Mattresses

It pays to buy a good mattress. A cheap one will go to pieces or lump up in a short time, to say nothing of the solid comfort a good mattress will give you.

Our "Snowdown" Mattress

The celebrated "Snowdown" Mattress, as made by Olmstead & Tuttle, will compare favorably with many of the much advertised felt Mattresses at $15. It is a strictly high-grade mattress and we recommend it with full confidence.

With best quality ticking—$10.
Other Felt Mattresses from $8 up.
Speeial Cotton Mattress—$6.

Our Special Hair Mattress

Our Special Mattress we have made for years, and we believe it to be the best mattress on the market at the price.

Made of 40 pounds of selected hair, covered with the best quality ticking, the product of our own sunny shop—a big value at $20.

We also have a large number of other hair mattresses, some better, some cheaper.

Wood and Iron Couches

SPECIAL COLLEGE COUCH, with wood frame and best woven wire spring, making a good coueh and a comfortable bed— $3.25.

COUCH WITH STEEL FRAME and national or woven wire spring, making a very durable and comfortable coueh—$4.50.

CLIMAX COUCH BED --- A strong, well-made iron eoueh that opens with one motion into a big comfortable bed. Complete with mattress—$13.50.

Beds and Bedding

Our big department of Domestic and Imported Blankets contains everything the student can possibly want in bedding, with many special sizes and numbers especially suited to the needs of the college room, and always at the lowest prices.

Rugs for Rugged Wear

Very fine or very dainty Rugs have no place in a college room. The ideal rug for a college room must combine attractiveness with rugged durability at a moderate priee. Our immense stock of rugs, including the best productions of nearly twenty of the leading rugmakers of America, has many different makes that will eonform to these eonditions. We mention one special new rug which we believe will be especially popular with the college boys, eombining in an unusual degree beauty and durability at a very low priee.

Afton Scotch Rugs

Afton Scotch Rugs are handsome seamless wool rugs, of great durability and made in a wide variety of pleasing designs, ehiefly with seroll or conventional borders and plain eenters, and they are shown in almost every conceivable color. They are to be had in all the popular sizes and they are very inexpensive — 9x12 — $16.50.

Smaller sizes at proportional prices.

BURNING DAYLIGHT.

and had no anxiety about his weathering it out.

And in the end, when early summer was on, everything began to mend. Came a day when Daylight did the unprecedented. He left the office an hour earlier than usual, and for the reason that for the first time since the panic there was not an item of work waiting to be done. He dropped into Hegan's private office, before leaving, for a chat, and as he stood up to go, he said:—

His Arms Went About Her and Held Her Closely.

"Hegan, we're all hunkadory. We're pulling out of the financial pawnshop in fine shape, and we'll get out without leaving one unredeemed pledge behind. The worst is over, and the end is in sight. Just tight rein for a couple more weeks, just a bit of a pinch or a flurry or so now and then, and we can let go and spit on our hands."

For once he varied his programme. Instead of going directly to his hotel, he started on a round of the bars and cafes, drinking a cocktail here and a cocktail there, and two or three when he encountered men he knew. It was after an hour or so of this that he dropped into the bar of the Parthenon for one last drink before going to dinner. By this time all his being was pleasantly warmed by the alcohol, and he was in the most genial and best of spirits. At the corner of the bar several young men were up to the old trick of resting their elbows and attempting to force each other's hands down. One broad-shouldered young giant never removed his elbow, but put down every hand that came against him. Daylight was interested.

"It's Slosson," the barkeeper told him, in answer to his query. "He's the heavy-hammer thrower at the U.

"We're Pulling Out of the Financial Pawnshop in Fine Shape."

C. Broke all records this year, and the world's record on top of it. He's a husky all right all right."

Daylight nodded and went over to him, placing his own arm in opposition.

"I'd like to go you a flutter, son, on that proposition," he said.

The young man laughed and locked hands with him; and to Daylight's astonishment it was his own hand that was forced down on the bar.

"Hold on," he muttered. "Just one more flutter. I reckon I wasn't just ready that time."

Again the hands locked. It happened quickly. The offensive attack of Daylight's muscles slipped instantly into defence, and, resisting vainly, his hand was forced over and down. Daylight was dazed. It had been no trick. The skill was equal, or, if anything, the superior skill had been his. Strength, sheer strength, had done it. He called for the drinks, and, still dazed and pondering, held up his own arm and looked at it as at some new strange thing. He did not know this arm. It certainly was not the arm he had carried around with him all the years. The old arm? Why, it would have been play to turn down that young husky's. But this arm—he continued to look at it with such dubious perplexity as to bring a roar of laughter from the young men.

This laughter aroused him. He joined in it at first, and then his face slowly grew grave. He leaned toward the hammer-thrower.

"Son," he said, "let me whisper a secret. Get out of here and quit drinking before you begin.

The young fellow flushed angrily, but Daylight held steadily on.

"You listen to your dad, and let him say a few. I'm a young man myself, only I ain't. Let me tell you, several years ago for me to turn your hand down would have been like committing assault and battery on a kindergarten."

Slosson looked his incredulity, while the others grinned and clustered around Daylight encouragingly.

"Son, I ain't given to preaching. This is the first time I ever come to the penitent form, and you put me there yourself—hard. I've seen a few in my time, and I ain't fastidious so as you can notice it. But let me tell you right now that I'm worth the devil alone knows how many millions, and that I'd sure give it all, right here on the bar, to turn down your hand. Which means I'd give the whole shooting match just to be back where I was before I quit sleeping under the stars and come into the hen-coops of cities to drink cocktails and lift up my feet and ride. Son, that's what's the matter with me, and that's the way I feel about it. The game ain't worth the candle. You just take care of yourself, and roll my advice over once in a while. Good night."

He turned and lurched out of the place, the moral effect of his utterance largely spoiled by the fact that he was so patently full while he uttered it.

Still in a daze, Daylight made to his hotel, accomplished his dinner, and prepared for bed.

"The damned young whippersnapper!" he muttered. "Put my hand down easy as you please. My hand!"

He held up the offending member and regarded it with stupid wonder. The hand that had never been beaten! The hand that had made the Circle City giants wince! And a kid from college, with a laugh on his face, had put it down—twice! Dede was right. He was not the same man. The situation would bear more serious looking into than he had ever given it. But this was not the time. In the morning, after a good sleep, he would give it consideration.

CHAPTER XIX.

Daylight awoke with the familiar parched mouth and lips and throat, took a long drink of water from the pitcher beside his bed, and gathered up the train of thought where he had left it the night before. He reviewed the easement of the financial strain. Things were mending at last. While the going was still rough, the greatest dangers were already past.

His mind moved on to the incident at the corner of the bar of the Parthenon, when the young athlete had turned his hand down. He was no longer stunned by the event, but he was shocked and grieved, as only a strong man can be, at this passing of his strength. He had always looked upon this strength of his as permanent, and here, for years, it had been steadily oozing from him. As he had diagnosed it, he had come in from under the stars to roost in the coops of cities. He had almost forgotten how to walk. He had lifted up his feet and been ridden around in automobiles, cabs and carriages, and electric cars. He had not exercised, and he had dry-rotted his muscles with alcohol. And was it worth it? What did all his money mean after all? Dede was right. It could buy him no more than one bed at a time, and at the same time it had made him the abjectest of slaves. It tied him fast. Which was better? he asked himself. All this was Dede's own thought. It was what she had meant when she prayed he would go broke. He held up his offending right arm. It wasn't the same old arm. Of course she could not love that arm and that body as she had loved the strong, clean arm and body of years before. He didn't like that arm and body himself. A young whippersnapper had been able to take liberties with it. It had gone back on him. He sat up suddenly. No, he had gone back on it! He had gone back on himself. He had gone back on Dede. She was right, a thousand times right, and she had sense enough to know it, sense enough to refuse to marry a money-slave with a whisky-rotted carcass.

He got out of bed and looked at himself in the long mirror on the wardrobe door. He wasn't pretty. The old-time lean cheeks were gone. These were heavy, seeming to hang down by their own weight. He looked for the lines of cruelty Dede had spoken of, and he found them, and he found the harshness in the eyes as well, the eyes that were muddy now after all the cocktails of the night before, and of the months and years before. He looked at the clearly defined pouches that showed under his eyes, and they shocked him. He rolled up the sleeve of his pajamas. No wonder the hammer-thrower had put his hand down. Those weren't muscles. A rising tide of fat had submerged them. He stripped off the pajama coat. Again he was shocked, this time by the bulk of his body. It wasn't pretty. The lean stomach had become a paunch. The rigid muscles of chest and shoulders and abdomen had broken down into rolls of flesh. And this was age. Then there drifted across the field of vision of his mind's eye the old man he had encountered at Glen Ellen, coming up the hillside through the fires of sunset, white-headed and white-bearded, eighty-four, in his hand the pail of foaming milk and in his face all the warm glow and content of the passing summer day. That had been age. "Yes siree, eighty-four, and spryer than most," he could hear the old man say.

Next he remembered Ferguson, the little man who had scuttled into the road like a rabbit, the one-time managing editor of a great newspaper, who was content to live in the chaparral along with his spring of mountain water and his hand-reared and manicured fruit trees. Ferguson had solved a problem. A weakling and an alcoholic, he had run away from the doctors and the chicken-coop of a city, and soaked up health like a thirsty sponge. He sat down suddenly on the bed, startled by the greatness of the idea that had come to him. He did not sit long. His mind, working in its customary way, like a steel trap, canvassed the idea in all its bearings. It was big—bigger than anything he had faced before. And he faced it squarely, picked it up in his two hands and turned it over and around and looked at it. The simplicity of it delighted him. He chuckled over it, reached his decision, and began to dress. Midway in the dressing he stopped in order to use the telephone.

Dede was the first he called up.

"Don't come to the office this morning," he said. "I'm coming out to see you for a moment."

He called up others. He ordered his motor-car. To Jones he gave instructions for the forwarding of Bob and Wolf to Glen Ellen. Hegan he surprised by asking him to look up the deed of the Glen Ellen ranch and make out a new one in Dede Mason's name. "Who?" Hegan demanded. "Dede Mason," Daylight replied imperturbably—"the 'phone must be indistinct this morning. D-e-d-e M-a-s-on. Got it?"

Half an hour later he was flying out to Berkeley. And for the first time the big red car halted directly before the house. Dede offered to receive him in the parlor, but he shook his head and nodded toward her rooms.

"In there," he said. "No other place would suit."

As the door closed, his arms went out and around her. Then he stood with his hands on her shoulders and looking down into her face.

"Dede, if I tell you, flat and straight, that I'm going up to live on that ranch at Glen Ellen, that I ain't taking a cent with me, that I'm going to scratch for every bite I eat, and that I ain't going to play ary a card at the business game again, will you come along with me?"

She gave a glad little cry, and he nestled her in closely. But the next moment she had thrust herself out from him to the old position at arm's length.

"How is this possible? How can you leave your business? Has anything happened?"

"No, nothing's happened yet, but it's going to, blame quick. I've taken your preaching to heart, and I've come to the penitent form. I've taken my last drink. You're marrying a whisky-soak, but your husband won't be that. He's going to grow into another man so quick you won't know him. A couple of months from now, up there in Glen Ellen, you'll wake up some morning and find you've got a perfect stranger in the house with you, and you'll have to get introduced to him all over again. You'll say, 'I'm Mrs. Harnish, who are you?' And I'll say, 'I'm Elam Harnish's younger brother. I've just arrived from Alaska to attend the funeral.' 'What funeral?' you'll say. And I'll say, 'Why the funeral of that good-for-nothing, gambling, whisky-drinking Burning Daylight—the man that died of fatty degeneration of the heart from sitting in night and day at the business game.' 'Yes, ma'am,' I'll say, 'he's sure a gone 'coon, but I've come to take his place and make you happy. And now, ma'am, if you'll allow me, I'll just meander down to the pasture and milk the cow while you're getting breakfast.'"

"But you haven't answered my questions," she reproached him, as she emerged, rosy and radiant, from the embrace that had accompanied the culmination of his narrative.

"Now just what do you want to know?" he asked.

"I want to know how all this is possible? How you are able to leave your business at a time like this? What you meant by saying that something was going to happen quickly?"

"Let's go and get married," he urged, all the whimsicality of his utterance duplicated in his eyes. "I've been working like forty horses ever since this blamed panic set in, and all the time some of those ideas you'd given me were getting ready to sprout. Well, they sprouted this morning, that's all I knew. I wanted to ride in the hills with you just about thirty million times more than I wanted to go to the office. And I knew all the time it was impossible. And why? Because of the office. The office wouldn't let me. And then I made up my mind that I was to the dividing of the ways. One way led to the office. The other way led to Berkeley. And I took the Berkeley road. I'm never going to set foot in the office again. That's all gone, finished, over and done with, and I'm letting it slide clean to smash and then some. I'm wiping the slate clean. I'm letting it all go smash. When them thirty million dollars stood up to my face and said I couldn't go out with you in the hills today, I knew the time had come for me to put my foot down. And I'm putting it down. I've got you, and my strength to work for you, and that little ranch in Sonoma. That's all I want, and that's all I'm going to save out, along with Bob and Wolf, a suit case and a hundred and forty hair bridles. All the rest goes, and good riddance. It's that much junk."

A knock at the door interrupted him, and he was left to stare delightedly at the Crouched Venus and on around the room at Dede's dainty possessions, while she answered the telephone.

"It is Mr. Hegan," she said, on returning. "He is holding the line. He says it is important."

Daylight shook his head and smiled.

"Please tell Mr. Hegan to hang up. I'm done with the office and I don't want to hear anything about anything."

A minute later she was back again.

"He refuses to hang up. He told me to tell you that Unwin is in the office now, waiting to see you, and Harrison, too. Mr. Hegan said that Grimshaw and Hodgkins are in trouble. That it looks as if they are going to break. And he said something about protection."

It was startling information. Both Unwin and Harrison represented big banking corporations, and Daylight knew that if the house of Grimshaw and Hodgkins went it would precipitate a number of failures and start a flurry of serious dimensions. But Daylight smiled, and shook his head.

He caught her by the hand and drew her to him.

"You let Hegan hang on to that line till he's tired. We can't be wasting a second on him on a day like this."

"But I know something of the fight you have been making," Dede contended. "If you stop now, all the work you have done, everything, will be destroyed. You have no right to do it. You can't do it."

Daylight was obdurate. He shook his head and smiled tantalizingly.

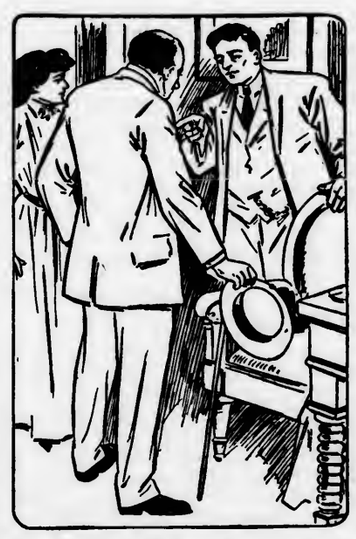
"Nothing will be destroyed, Dede, nothing. You don't understand this business game. It's done on paper. All I stand for is paper. I've got the paper for thousands of acres of land. All right. Burn up the paper, and burn me along with it. The land remains, don't it? Nothing is going to be lost—not one pile out of the docks, not one railroad spike, not one ounce of steam out of the gauge of a ferryboat. The cars will go on running, whether I hold the paper or somebody else holds it."

By this time Hegan had arrived in an automobile. The honk of it came in through the open window, and they saw it stop alongside the big red machine. In the car were Unwin and Harrison, while Jones sat with the chauffeur.

"I'll see Hegan," Daylight told Dede. "There's no need for the rest. They can wait in the machine."

"Is he drunk?" Hegan whispered to Dede at the door.

She shook her head and showed him in.



"Good morning, Larry," was Daylight's greeting. "Sit down and rest your feet. You sure seem to be in a flutter."

"I am," the little Irishman snapped back. "Grimshaw and Hodgkins are going to smash if something isn't done quick. Why didn't you come to the office? What are you going to do about it?"

"Nothing," Daylight drawled lazily. "Except let them smash, I guess. I've had no dealings with Grimshaw and Hodgkins. I don't owe them anything. Besides, I'm going to smash myself. Look here, Larry, you know me. You know when I make up my mind I mean it. Well, I've sure made up my mind. I'm tired of the whole game. I'm letting go of it as fast as I can, and a smash is the quickest way to let go. All you've got to do is to protect yourself and all our friends. Now you listen to me while I tell you what to do. Everything is in good shape to do it. Nobody must get hurt. Everybody that stood by me must come through without damage. All the back wages and salaries must be paid pronto. All the money I've switched away from the water company, the street cars, and the ferries must be switched back. And you won't get hurt yourself none. Every company you got stock in will come through—"

"What have you done to him?" Hegan snarled at Dede.

"Hold on there, Larry." For the first time Daylight's voice was sharp, while all the old lines of cruelty in his face stood forth. "Miss Mason is going to be my wife, and while I don't mind your talking to her all you want, you've got to use a different tone of voice or you'll be heading for a hospital, which will sure be an unexpected sort of smash. And let me tell you one other thing. This-all is my doing. She says I'm crazy, too."

"Use a Different Tone of Voice, or You'll Be Heading for a Hospital."

Dede stepped forward where she confronted the two men.

"Wait," she said. "I want to say something. Elam, if you do this insane thing, I won't marry you. I refuse to marry you."

Hegan, in spite of his misery, gave her a quick, grateful look.

"I'll take my chance on that," Daylight said. "And now, Larry, you'd better be going. I'll be at the hotel in a little while, and since I'm not going to step into the office again, bring all papers to sign and the rest over to my rooms. And you can get me on the 'phone there any time. This smash is going through. Savvee? I'm quit and done."

He turned to Dede as soon as Hegan was gone, and took her by the hand.

"And now, little woman, you needn't come to the office any more. Consider yourself discharged."

"I'd cry, if I thought it would do any good," she threatened.

"In which case I reckon I'd have to hold you in my arms some more and sort of soothe you down," he threatened back.

As he stood at the top of the steps, leaving, she said:—

"You needn't send those men. There will be no packing, because I am not going to marry you."

"I'm not a bit scared," he answered, and went down the steps.

Soap Bubbles.

The ancient Britons invented soap. The Romans, two thousand years ago, carried the invention back to Italy. They manufactured soap in Savona, whence the French word for it—savon.

There are natural soaps—the soaproot of Spain, the soapberry of Chili and the bark of the Peruvian soap tree.

At Quartetaro, in Mexico, soap takes the place of copper coinage.

The Tierra del Fuegans eat soap, finding the fat therein really nourishing. They say they like the taste, too.

Soap is made from garbage in the newest incinerating plants.

Trunk Trays.

Trunks have improved along with everything else in this progressive age. The trunk with one tray is a rarity, and most trunks are made with five or six trays. There is such a demand for trays that they are sold separately, and can be added to any trunk whenever needed.

A Perilous Duty.

"My position," remarked the eminent physician, "is one requiring the greatest tact and diplomacy."

"What is the trouble?"

"I feel conscientiously obliged to tell several of my most wealthy and influential patients that they overeat."

Most Valuable of All.

The world and all things in it are valuable, but the most valuable thing in the world is a virtuous woman.—Mohammed.

Make Use of It.

Some weak people are so sensible of their weakness as to be able to make good use of it.

Mohammed's View.

The holder of a monopoly is a sinner and offender.—Mohammed.

Big School Enrollment.

Number Larger Than Ever Before. Some Rooms Badly Crowded.

The public schools of the town opened Tuesday with the largest number enrolled in the history of the town. The total number is 1471, and there are still others to come, as is always the case at the beginning of the school year. The number enrolled is about 60 more than last year, which in turn was about 75 larger than in 1910. The enrollment by schools for last and this year is given for comparison:

| | 1911. | 1912. |
|---|---|---|
| High School, | 132 | 154 |
| Palmer Grammar, | 409 | 448 |
| Three Rivers Grammar, | 313 | 308 |
| Thorndike Grammar, | 213 | 213 |
| Bondsville Grammar, | 232 | 248 |
| Districts, | 110 | 100 |
| Total, | 1412 | 1471 |

The high school and the Palmer grammar show the largest increase, the former having 22 more pupils than last year and the latter 39. In the grammar school the lower rooms are unusually full, there being 91 pupils in the first grade, and 60 in the second, while all up to the seventh have about 50 each; the new fourth and fifth grade room, opened last year, has 42 pupils. The congestion has compelled the putting of two grades in some of the rooms which formerly were devoted to one only.

Rode on Sidewalk—Paid $25.

August Zimmerman of Springfield, whom Special Officer C. H. Babcock found riding a motocycle on the sidewalks of Park street Wednesday, appeared in the district court yesterday morning in answer to a summons made by the officer. At the time he was caught Zimmerman refused to give his name and address to the officer, though he said he would be in court at the required time, and he was. On account of his refusal to give his name he was arraigned on that charge. He tried to make Judge Dillon believe that he had not been asked for his name, but the officer had a witness and it was no use. The minimum fine allowed in such cases—$25, was imposed and paid.

Death of Mrs. Emily M. Wilbur.

Mrs. Emily M. Wilbur, 69, died at 2 o'clock this morning in the Mercy hospital in Springfield, where she went Tuesday for an operation. Mrs. Wilbur's maiden name was Jones and she was born in Foxboro, but had lived in Palmer for the past 24 years; her husband died about five years ago. Mrs. Wilbur was a member and chaplain of Revere chapter, Order of the Eastern Star.

Palmer was well represented in the crowd which heard Col. Roosevelt speak in Springfield Monday.

Highway Surveyor McKelligott commenced work again Tuesday on the clearing of the Main street sewer.

H. D. Converse has erected a handsome monument in the family lot in Oak Knoll cemetery, MacLean being the designer.

Rev. Otto S. Raspe of the Universalist church will conduct services in the Silver Street chapel Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Merrick Hellyar, who broke his leg some time ago while playing ball, has recovered sufficiently to be out with the use of crutches.

The Mission Circle of the Universalist church held a missionary tea with Mrs. F. M. Ralton of South Main street this afternoon.

In the district court Saturday morning the liquors which were seized a few weeks ago on the premises of John Dominick Barney in Brimfield were ordered forfeited.

Job Was Too Strenuous.

The weighing of the mails which are carried by the railroad, which takes place every four years and determines the compensation to be paid the roads the coming four years, began at midnight Tuesday and is to continue for 105 days. The mails are weighed at the railroad station. Two men were sent by the post office department to Palmer to do the work, one from Fall River and the other from Springfield. They worked for a while Wednesday and then jacked up the job, concluding that the pay wasn't up to the work. Postmaster Shaw hustled and secured H. G. Sumner and the substitute carrier, D. J. Fortier, who will complete the job.

New Sunday Post Office Rules.

The new rules regarding the opening of post offices on Sunday makes no material difference in the Palmer office, except that the windows are not opened for the giving out of mail or the sale of stamps. The clerks are on hand about 8 in the morning to sort the mail which has come in during the night, as they must in order to disclose any special delivery which may be called for, but they leave as soon as this is done. Patrons who have lock boxes have the privilege of getting any mail which has been put up the night before, but the force is not supposed to put mail up Sundays. The office is opened again from 5.15 to 5.45 to sort and send out mail only.

Thowald Johnson of Palmer Center has been spending a few days with relatives in Worcester.

The stump of a large elm tree in front of the Elms House on Main street, which died some time ago, was taken down this week.

There will be the usual prayer meeting at the home of Mrs. H. W. Stimson at Palmer Center Sunday at 3 o'clock. Rev. C. C. Gorst of Thorndike will preach.

At a regular meeting of Court Palmer, F. of A., Tuesday evening, it was voted to hold its annual ball Friday evening, October 25th, with Flanagan's singing orchestra of Marlboro to furnish music.

A flat car loaded with ties for the the street railway company left the track at the switch just east of Central street Tuesday afternoon and proved rather bothersome in getting back on the rails again, delaying the regular cars about half an hour.

Wednesday and yesterday were trying days for the baggage force at the union passenger station. the amount of baggage handled being enormous. Wednesday was the worst, and broke all records for years in the number of pieces checked; the greater portion was for Northfield.

The body of Andrew Hall, who died in Fitchburg yesterday, will be brought to Palmer to-morrow for burial in the Four Corners cemetery. Mr. Hall was a former resident, and of late years has made a practice of visiting town at fair time. Many housewives will remember him as an expert sharpener of scissors and shears.

The Baptist Progressive League will hold a basket social in the parlors of the church next Tuesday evening at 7.30. Each lady attending is asked to bring a basket lunch for two; these will be auctioned off by E. B. Taylor and L. E. Royce, and partners for lunch will be obtained in this way. Everybody is invited.

The rain of Monday rather spoiled the plans of many amusement seekers. While there was a large crowd at Forest Lake considering the weather, the attendance was not so large as was hoped for in the event of fair weather. There was a good deal of riding on the electric cars during the day, but it was inclined to run in bunches.

The death of Mrs. Moses H. Warren of Hampden, which occurred Tuesday afternoon at her home, was a great shock to her numerous friends here, many of whom did not know that she had been ill. Mrs. Warren was formerly Mrs. Albert Burleigh, and lived many years in Palmer, being prominently identified with the social and church work of the town. The body was brought here to-day for burial in the family lot in Oak Knoll cemetery.

H. W. Giffin, formerly of Palmer, who has for some time been an instructor in the technical high school in Springfield, has resigned that position to take one as designer with the New London ship and engine company and electric boat company of New London, Ct., builders of the Holland submarine boats and Diesel engines for all classes of work. Mr. Giffin is the son of Mrs. J. A. Palmer of Knox street and formerly attended the Palmer high school.

Motor cycle riding on the sidewalks of Park street, between Pearl and Thorndike, got to be a good deal of a nuisance Tuesday, and there were numerous complaints. The rain of Monday left the street in horrible condition for mud and ruts, and it was a great temptation to riders to take to the sidewalk in defiance of the state law to the contrary. Some were considerate and dismounted when they saw pedestrians coming, while others compelled pedestrians to look sharp or be run down.

A Robber in the Room

When I was thirty-one I was passing through the western states on the track of a speculation which promised well.

My plans had led me to leave the boat at Cincinnati, and strike about 50 miles southerly into Kentucky. I found myself at the end of the day in question in a small hotel, waiting for my supper. I had come to this particular house only by accident, and certainly nothing but the lateness of the hour, the rain that was falling heavily, and my own tired, hungry condition, prevented my sallying forth at once in search of better accommodations. The house was quite apart from the rest of the town, and seemed to be one of those ill-kept, unattractive inns where a traveler only goes by accident, and where he never goes twice. I could not discover that there was any other guest than myself present that night.

I took my candle and carefully examined the room. It was a small, square apartment, with no furniture save the bed, a chair, and the washstand. I looked under the bed and behind the stand. Nobody was there. I spied a closet, and explored it, with the same result. The door of the room fastened on the inside with a heavy bolt, but to make assurance doubly sure, I set the washstand against it after sliding the bolt; and not yet content, I moved the bed around and effectually barricaded it. The two windows appeared to be about eight feet from the ground; and these also I secured in such a way that it would be impossible to raise them from the outside.

"Pretty safe, this, I think," was my remark, as I looked around at my defenses; and throwing off my coat, I drew from the breast pocket a long leather bill book, and proceeded to count its contents. Three thousand three hundred dollars in notes—a large amount to carry about one's person; but the business in which I was engaged demanded it.

I placed my pocketbook beneath the pillow and laid my pistol beside it; then putting the candle on the stand, I went to bed.

Usually I was a sound and ready sleeper, but I now lay wide awake, and all the arts that I used to lull myself to rest were unavailing. The house was perfectly still, and there was no noise from the street, save the steady drip, drip of the rain, which seemed to intensify the stillness. I closed my eyes, and at the end of ten minutes opened them again, perfectly sleepless.

I turned on my side; my eye was caught by my pistols lying by the pillow. I looked at them merely for a change of object, and as I looked I made a discovery that sent a chill of terror all over me. The caps had been removed from both of them!

My heart sank within me, and a terror like that of death seized me. Some infernal plot was on foot to destroy me; the mysterious agency that was to take my life might be in readiness that instant. I lay perfectly still, with my eyes almost closed, not daring even to turn upon my back, as I had been lying.

It was well for me that I did not. I heard no step, not even a breath; but a long, glittering knife was slowly projected from behind me and held suspended by a human hand above my head!

I drew my breath quietly and regularly—how, I know not, but I did it. I even counterfeited a slight snore. The robber was apparently satisfied. The knife was still poised above me; but I felt his hand cautiously feeling beneath my pillow. It seized the pocketbook and slowly drew it forth.

What followed passed with almost the speed of thought. My right hand flew to the knife and grasped it as I rolled upon my back. With a terrific oath the robber started up and threw himself upon me. He was a brawny, muscular villain of thrice my strength, but there was to be no trial of that kind between us. As he flung himself at my throat I turned the knife upon him; the point took him in the breast, and his weight and impetus drove the blade right through him. With one spasmodic movement he rolled off from me and tumbled dead on the floor.

The horror of his presence, and the consciousness of my peril had been so suddenly forced upon me that the shock was too great for me—I fell back fainting on the bed.

When I awoke broad daylight was streaming in at the windows. Little by little I recalled the dreadful realities of my adventure, and persuaded myself that it was not all a nightmare. I assured myself of the safety of my money, and then put on my clothes and looked about me. The robber lay on his face; his fall had broken the knife, and a great pool of blood was oozing out on the floor. The mystery of his preesnce there was soon explained. A secret closet was let into the wall where he had been hidden, and from a chink of which he had seen where I deposited my money. It was arranged so that a part of the wall could be noiselessly opened in, like a door; and from this lurking place had the desperado emerged when he judged me sound asleep, creeping on hands and knees to my bedside, and as it proved, to his own destruction.

TASK FINDS THEM PREPARED

Men Who Do Great Things, it Will Be Discovered, Have Looked Forward to the Work.

There are a great number of stories of men who have seemed to do a great thing in a casual way. It will invariably be found that they have not only been making ample preparations by study, discipline, and experience, but they have constantly tested their capacity, as a wrestler tests his, by bouts with all the strong men he can meet.

When a man does a great thing there are some people who always will set it down to luck rather than to his capacity, but it is an interesting thing that a man may have such a stand-in, as it were, with this fickle and tricky thing. It is quite common to hear capable people say: "O, I am always lucky." They are really in a measure unconscious of the certainties of their capabilities

The world is just beginning to wake up to the fact that natural resources in the way of ability have been wasted or monopolized as great natural physical resources have been The psychologist and the sociologist are doing what they can to make this fact understood. The reason that men with all sorts of handicaps have attained greatness has not until recently been read aright We have seen nothing but the phenomena. In these examples. As a matter of fact, the handicap has many cases brought to the front the grit of the man or woman as nothing else could have done, yet we are prone to believ that such exceptional ability will out.

Minute Men.

The so-called organization of Minute Men came into existence shortly before the outbreak of the Revolution. The patriots of Massachusetts and other New England colonies banded themselves together, obtained arms and pledged themselves to the defense of the colonies "at a minute's notice." From this pledge to take up arms "at a minute's notice" they got their name

The Minute Men were enrolled in pursuance of the act of the Provincial congress, which was passed on November 23 1774. Many names that were destined to become famous in the Revolution appeared on this roster of patriots. In the beginning they were expected to serve only in the New England colonies but when the conflict came no thought was taken of this. The Massachusetts Historical society has a list of the patriots who were enrolled as Minute Men.

MORTGAGEE'S SALE OF REAL ESTATE.

By virtue of a power of sale contained in a certain mortgage deed given by Thomas C. Carroll to Herbert A. Northrop, dated February 11, 1909, and recorded in the Registry of Deeds for the County of Hampden, Book 755, Page 78, for breach of the condition contained in said mortgage and for the purpose of foreclosing the same, will be sold at public auction, on the premises, on Saturday, the twenty-eighth day of September, 1912, at two o'clock in the afternoon, all and singular the premises conveyed by said mortgage deed, namely:—

A certain tract of land with the buildings thereon, situate on the northerly side of the Carpet Mill road leading from Park street to the Carpet Mill in said Palmer and bounded and described as follows:—Commencing at an iron pin in the ground on the northerly line of said road, thence running at right angles with said road about eight (8) rods to an iron pin in the ground, thence westerly about five (5) rods parallel with said road to an iron pin in the ground; thence southerly parallel with first line about eight (8) rods to the road; thence westerly on the line of said road about five (5) rods to first mentioned bound, containing one-fourth of an acre more or less, subject to the rights of the Palmer Water Company. The first mentioned bound is about thirty (30) rods westerly from an angle in the road bounded by a walnut tree. The aforesaid premises are a part of land conveyed by the heirs of Laura A. Parks to A. J. and H. A. Northrop by deed dated August 18th, 1887, and recorded in Hampden County Registry of Deeds, Book 439, Page 206.

THORNDIKE.

Brosnan—Sheehan.

Miss Annie Mae Brosnan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Brosnan of High street, was united in marriage at St. Mary's church Tuesday morning to Daniel Edward Sheehan of Rutland, Vt. The ceremony was performed in the presence of many friends and relatives of the bride and groom. Miss Julia A. Sheehan of Rutland, sister of the groom, was bridesmaid, and John Brosnan, brother of the bride, was best man. A reception followed at the bride's home, which was largely attended by friends and relatives. Mr. and Mrs. Sheehan left in the afternoon on their wedding tour, the destination being Panama, where they will make their home, the groom being employed there. The newly-married couple were the recipients of many wedding presents.

Dedicate New Hall.

There was a large attendance at the dedication of St. Joseph's Society's new hall on Monday. Many were in attendance from out of town as well as from the villages of the town. The exercises began at 11 o'clock in the forenoon and included speechmaking, singing and music. This was followed by dancing in the afternoon with music by an orchestra from Chicopee. In the evening a drama was presented which was enjoyed by a large audience and the day's festivities closed one of the biggest events that the Polish residents of the town have ever had. The new hall is a handsome structure and is fitted with all the modern conveniences; a large stage with new scenery, bath and toilet rooms, and moving picture booth, the whole being lit with electricity.

Death oi an Old Resident.

Daniel Heney, 78, died Friday at the town farm as the result of a fall he sustained sometime during the night. He fell from a second story window and was found upon the ground about midnight by the warden. It seems that he arose from his bed and raised the window screen, when he fell to the ground, a distance of about 18 feet. The remains were brought to Thorndike to J. W. Loftus' undertaking rooms, and the funeral was held Sunday afternoon from St. Mary's church, prayer being offered by the pastor, Rev. P. J. Griffin; burial was in the Thorndike cemetery. Mr. Heney was for years a resident of this place and was widely known, having been employed by the Thorndike Company as watchman.

Mongeau—Shea.

Miss Dora Mongeau of this place was united in marriage on Monday to John L. Shea of Amherst. The ceremony was performed in St. Mary's church by the pastor, Rev. P. J. Griffin. Miss Melina Gingras was bridesmaid and William Mongeau, brother of the bride, was best man. A wedding breakfast was served at the bride's home on Commercial street, which was attended by near relatives only. After a wedding trip the newly-wedded couple will reside in Amherst.

Fair of the Summer Sewers.

Large Attendance, Delightful Time, and Satisfactory Financial Returns.

After several days of rainy weather the sun came out on Wednesday to brighten the annual lawn party given by the Summer Sewers on Miss Holmes' grounds. There were many attractions, fruit in form of grabs on a tree, for the little folks; ice cream served at small tables under the pergola; home-made candy at a nearby table, bags of pop corn carried in baskets by two young ladies, lemonade served from punch bowls, and flowers were on sale. One of the most attractive tables was the one where the fancy articles were sold. The young ladies had made many pretty things during the summer at their Monday afternoon meetings and showed how neatly they could sew. The girls dressed in white, with gay colored ribbons in their hair, the waitresses in the ice cream pergola wearing the Puritan costume with blue skirts, white aprons and kerchiefs, and the guests in their varicolored gowns, all combined, made a very pretty appearance on the lawn. Ten little girls dressed in white gave a May pole dance with gay colored streamers, and the folk dances given by the school girls of the seventh and eighth grades under the direction of Miss Delehanty were well done and were very pretty. In the evening the grounds were decorated with Japanese lanterns, and a large number enjoyed the entertainment given in the barn, which consisted of music by an orchestra of young people from Springfield, piano solos and duets by Miss Lull, Miss Allen and Miss Hillard, songs by Miss Krause, recitations by Carol Beckwith, and shadow pictures. Nearly one hundred dollars was taken during the afternoon and evening. Some of the money will be given the Doane Orphanage in Springfield in which Monson people are interested, and the rest will be used for other charitable purposes. The Summer Sewers have during the summer sent baskets of fruit to sick people, and have tried in many ways to remember others who have been in trouble. They wish now to thank all the friends who patronized their lawn party, and hope they will come again next summer, as they expect to make the lawn party an annual event.

Schools Open Again.

Several Changes In Teaching Force Since Last Year.

The public schools opened Tuesday for the fall term. Several changes in the teaching force have been made since last year. Miss Marion Tucker, teacher of the second grade in No. 8 school, has resigned and will go to the teacher's college, Columbia University; her position will be filled by Miss Helen M. Coleman of Natick, who taught at North Monson last year. Miss Beatrice Belden has been transferred from Colton Hollow to North Monson, and Miss Bernice E. Mahoney of Holyoke has been appointed to the Colton Hollow school. Mrs. Grace C. Pease has resigned from the Pease district school and has been succeeded by Miss Charlotte E. Mahoney of Springfield. Miss Anna M. Cornihan has resigned from the Moulton Hill school and has been succeeded by Miss Ella K. Hyde. Miss Sarah F. Pendleton of Natick has been appointed to the 7th grade at State street to succeed Miss Marguerite Smith, resigned, and Miss Elizabeth Ryan of Northboro will succeed Miss Mildred Moulton at the Quarry school.

Both Bones of Leg Broken.

Fall From Wheelbarrow Results Seriously For Workman.

Michael F. Dalton of High street, a blacksmith for the W. N. Flynt Granite Co., suffered a compound fracture of his left leg while at work at the quarry Tuesday. Mr. Dalton had gone to the upper part of the quarry with a wheelbarrow to get a load of sawdust, and was in the wheelbarrow tramping down the load when the barrow tipped over. One of the handles struck his leg just below the knee, breaking both bones. Dr. C. W. Jackson of this town and Dr. R. E. Camfill of Springfield were called and Mr. Dalton was removed to the Mercy h ospital in Springfield.

Trying For More Macadam.

Would Like to Have Balance of Strip to Palmer Covered.

Superintendent of Highways S. M. Stebbins was in Springfield yesterday in conference with the Massachusetts Highway Commissioners relative to an appropriation for macadam on the Monson-Palmer road the coming year. If the strip of road from the Leach place to the Palmer line can be macadamized it will make a strip of unbroken macadam road from South Monson to Palmer. About $8000 is needed for the work.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Needham of Baltimore, Md., are visiting Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Needham on Fountain street.

McCray—Keeney.

A wedding of local interest which took place in Hampden on Monday was that of Miss Elizabeth McCray of Hampden and Hawley Smith Keeney of this town. The wedding took place at Mountain View Farm, the home of the bride, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, in a bower of golden rod and maple boughs on the lawn. The "Lohengrin" wedding march was played by Miss Hazel Pease of Hampden for the bridal procession, which comprised the ushers, Robert K. Squier and Ralph M. Lull of Monson, followed by the groom and his best man, William E. McCray, brother of the bride; the bridesmaids, Miss Margaret Lemon of Quincy and Miss Mildred Pease of Hampden; the maid of honor, Miss Helen M. Needham of Monson, and the bride with her father. The bride's gown was white lace over white messaline; she wore her mother's veil and carried a bouquet of white roses. The maid of honor wore a pink gown, a black picture hat and carried pink sweet peas. The bridesmaids wore light blue gowns with caps to match, and carried pink sweet peas. The bride and groom, assisted by their parents, received out of doors, where refreshments were served. About 150 guests attended, and many beautiful wedding gifts were received, including silver, cut glass, china and money. The groom's gift to the bride was a silver mesh bag; to the best man a gold watch chain, and to the ushers gold knot stick pins. The bride's gift to the groom was a gold stick pin with diamond setting, and to the maid of honor and bridesmaids gold brooches with pearl settings. Mr. and Mrs. Keeney are taking their wedding trip in an automobile, and after their return will live in Springfield.

Stacy—Sansville.

The wedding of Miss Ina Stacy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Stacy of Cushman street, and William J. Sansville took place in St. Patrick's church Monday morning at 9 o'clock, the ceremony being performed by the pastor, Rev. Thomas O'Keefe. The bridesmaid was Miss Mildred St. George of Warren, and the best man was Joseph St. George of the same place. The bride's gown was of white messaline silk; she wore a veil caught with orange blossoms, and carried a bouquet of asters. The bridesmaid's gown was of blue crepe de chine; she wore a white picture hat and carried a bouquet of white asters. The bride's gift to the bridesmaid was a string of pearl beads, and the groom's gift to the best man was gold cuff links and stickpin. Immediately after the ceremony a reception and wedding breakfast was held at the home of the bride's parents. Gifts were numerous, including silverware, china, cut glass, linen and money. Guests were present from Warren, Thorndike, Brimfield, Brockton and Pittsburg. After a short wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Sansville will reside in their newly furnished home in Palmer.

Death of Miss Bridget Coyle.

Miss Bridget L. Coyle, 51, died in the House of Mercy hospital in Pittsfield Saturday evening after an illness of about a week. She was visiting relatives in Pittsfield when she was taken ill, and was removed to the hospital there. She had been in poor health for several years, but not until a week before she died was her illness considered serious. She was born in Blackstone, but had lived in Monson for 30 years. She is survived by one brother, Joseph, and two sisters, Mrs. John Crowley and Miss Catherine, all of Monson. The body was brought to Monson Sunday, and the funeral was held from the home on Bridge street Tuesday morning, with a requiem mass in St. Patrick's church at 9 o'clock; the burial was in Stafford Springs.

New Teacher at the Academy.

William E. Blake of Easthampton has been appointed to the faculty of Monson Academy to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Prof. George Miller. Mr. Blake is 26 years of age; he was educated in the Huntington high school, graduated from Tufts college in 1906 with the degree of A. B., secured his A. M. in 1907, and was assistant in the history department under Dr. Erdus for the past four years. He has been instructor in history and English in Highland Military Academy in Worcester.

Horse Found Dead.

G. C. Flynt lost a valuable horse this week. The animal was in a pasture, and Wednesday morning was found dead with both hind legs broken. It is thought that in running down hill the animal slipped, breaking its legs.

The Oft-Told Tale

The typewriter went slower and slower, and finally ceased, as though it hadn't a single click left in it.

"Why the reminiscent light in the eyes?" inquired the Audience of One at the bookkeeper's desk

"Just something I happened to see in a window opposite," responded she of the clickless keys. The Audience of One directed its gaze at as many of the windows opposite as it could cover simultaneously.

"No use. They've gone now. I guess it's all right, but I hardly knew whether I ought simply to giggle or to rush across and make a rescue." The Audience of One stuck its red-ink pen behind one ear and listened with the other to the story.

"Once upon a time, when the panic was on in full force and a job was as difficult to find as an eligible young man in the marrying mood, I happened on a funny experience. I was pretty well discouraged, but one morning I saw an advertisement in the paper that filled me with a fond, wild hope. 'Highly educated young lady wanted,' it ran, 'of attractive appearance, rapid, accurate stenographer, tactful and willing to do a little outside work. Good salary and permanent position to right party,' or words to that effect.

"I spent 50 cents having my hair waved and 75 cents for a facial massage, borrowed my sister's best gloves without her kind permission, and, if I do say it myself, I really didn't look so bad.

"It was in that grand big building opposite when it was first put up, and the windows looked right out on Trinity Chapel.

"There were three other girls waiting outside the railing, but when I sized them up I knew right away they had no chance with me, for the Marcel was extra good and my shirtwaist was straight from the laundry.

"When my turn came I hadn't sat in the chair of judgment half a minute before I knew I had walked away with the job.

"I had been there only a few days when I saw plainly that there was mighty little work to be done except to listen to the jovial boss tell the story of his life. It was interesting, but rather lurid, with too many high lights. I also observed a curious phenomenon. In the morning he was very quiet, very dignified, very business like in his manner. Toward noon he began to grow cordial, and in the afternoon about three o'clock he became extremely sociable, reminiscent and not altogether distinct in his speech. At five, when I was supposed to go home, he waxed highly sentimental, verging upon the melodramatic, but wholly unintelligible.

"I sadly determined that after salary day, when I would at least have the price of a pair of shoes, and a bargain hat—if the landlady wasn't too pressing—I should, like Bridget O'Rorke, give notice. Meantime, however, things assumed a more exciting aspect. One afternoon the door opened with a flourish and half a ton of bright red roses entered, moving toward me across the room. On looking closely I saw my romantic employer was acting as the motive power, almost completely concealed by the masses of bloom. My lap, my typewriter, the chair and a good part of the floor, all were inundated by the tidal wave of roses, and in the middle distance stood the gallant gentleman, somewhat unsteadily, his face a perfect match for the flowers, and pride and triumph beaming from his eyes.

"'Thash only the beginning," he announced, with a deprecating glance at the tidal wave. 'I can shpen money like a—like a—a drunken shailor, m'dear. Got sh-sh-shix thous'd dollarsh over there in that shafe. You c'n have it. You can have anything Jack Wayburn's got! Come over here to thish window. There! Look out winder. Shee church over there? Thash Trinity church. Sure's my name's Jack Wayburn, I'm going to take you over to that church an' we'll do the thing up proper. Nobody'll have anything on ush. All ri'. If you won't come today, you'll come t'-morrer."

"I was so scared that I don't know how I ever got home, but I did and had to send him a note the next day instead of coming to his beautiful office any more. But, oh, I had to go without the shoes after all. And the hat. And the landlady began to get sarcastic. But I soon got this job, and I'll hold onto it until it's time for me to go into the Old Ladies' Home."

The Audience of One took down the red ink pen from behind its ear, reached for the ledger and sighed. "You poor little girls do have kind of a hard road to travel sometimes, don't you? But what did you see in the window just now?"

"Oh, that's the funny part. I just casually glanced over at those windows, wondering if the Dashing Detective still had his offices there, when what do you suppose! There he was in the window, with a scared-looking girl by the wrist. He was pointing over at the spire of Trinity. The clock said three. Just the time he always got sentimental. I knew exactly what he was saying. I could almost smell the roses. Really, I didn't know whether to laugh or to dash madly into the building and rescue the scared-looking girl from gallant Jack Wayburn, whose word was as good as his bond!"

The door of adversity is never locked.

Penny

"Penny—Penny Mulligan!" whispered Miss Gabin of the notion counter.

The young girl with two long, thick braids of red hair leaned down from the bundle counter overhead.

"Well?" she replied crisply.

"Have you seen the new floorwalker?"

"No—where is Mr. Freer?"

"Transferred to the upholstery. It's a shame, too. He certainly is a gentleman!" Miss Gabin patted the blond puffs of her elaborate coiffure and sighed audibly. "He certainly is a gentleman," she repeated.

"He is," returned Penny. She turned back to her labors of wrapping parcels.

"You certainly are swift, Penny," murmured the stout bundle girl.

"It's a dull day," said Penny, yawning.

Ever since she had run away from her home in the middle West to become an actress, Penelope had been on the lookout for people from home. True she had written back to her uncle and aunt, telling them that she was earning her living and when she said that she was "acting" how could that unsophisticated couple suspect that the part she was playing was the very practical one of bundle counter girl in a department store.

She had given her name as Penny Mulligan, when in fact she bore the charming title of Penelope Marston. Arthur Preston had asked her to marry him and had been haughtily dismissed by the stage-struck girl. "I cannot marry any one, Arthur," she said, condescendingly. "I have a career before me, you know?"

"Pooh!" the practical Arthur had said—he was a real estate agent and very live and up-to-date in his native town—"pooh, honey, you can't act!"

"I will show you!" Penny had said, wrathfully.

"Penny—Penny Mulligan!" shrilled Miss Gabin during another lull in the business of this rainy day.

"What is it?" asked Penny languidly as she leaned over the railing.

"There he is!"

"Whom do you mean?" Penny was not interested, but she strove to be polite.

"The new floorwalker. He's standing there by the perfumery—his back is this way. He's lovely looking!"

Penny looked and saw a tall, massively built young man garbed in the conventional black of the store standing with his hands loosely clasped behind his back. He looked—oh, so much like Arthur Preston, but of course that was absurd!

"Yes, isn't he?" she managed to say carelessly in response to Miss Gabin's last remark.

Later she happened to glance downward, and her blue eyes met the calm, cool gaze of the new floorwalker. His glance passed from her face to that of the other bundle girl, and then he passed on his leisurely way down the store. It was Arthur Preston.

When she had an opportunity she asked Miss Gabin the name of the new floorwalker.

"The most romantic name you ever heard, Penny! Miss Clark from the office told me—his name is Claude Reston."

Penny darted back to her work, conscious that Miss Gabin was holding an animated conversation with Mr. Claude Reston.

"How dare he come here under an assumed name?" fumed Penny.

She snapped the string viciously and the fat parcel flew out of her hands and fell plump upon the sleek, black head of the new floorwalker.

Miss Gabin shrieked becomingly as Mr. Reston gracefully disentangled himself from the shower.

"Ain't you afraid you'll get fired, Penny?" gasped the fat girl.

"I don't care!" flared Penny recklessly. "I'm going to leave anyway, to-night."

Some one was coming up the steep little stair of the bundle counter. A ruffled black head, a pair of black eyes, a pair of broad shoulders, a big hand holding forth the ragged bundle of false hair.

"Here, Penelope," he said coolly. "Please don't do that again."

Penny was speechless with indignation, as she took the package from him and their hands touched. He disappeared at once, and Penny proceeded to wrap the bundle carefully. It required elaborate care, for great tears were welling in her blue eyes. The tears splashed upon the package, and she thrust it violently toward the tube.

To Penny's horror, it leaped over the rail and descended almost at the feet of the new floorwalker!

"Gee!" giggled the fat girl.

Penny was frozen with mortification, as once more Mr. Reston climbed the stairs and handed the package to the girl.

"I'll be waiting for you at six o'clock, Penelope," he whispered softly. "If we hurry we can take the train tomorrow morning and—I promised your Aunt Susan that if she would make the wedding preparations I'd bring the bride. You wouldn't want to disappoint Aunt Susan, would you?"

"No," whispered Penelope, meekly.

"Gee!" muttered the fat girl once more.

"The nerve!" glared Miss Gabin.

"Oh, joy!" sang Penelope's heart.

When people read about the cures made by a medicine endorsed from far away, is it surprising that they wonder if the statements are true? But when they read of cases right here at home, positive proof is within their reach, for close investigation is an easy matter. Read Palmer endorsement of Doan's Kidney Pills.

Mrs. J. M. Barton, 307 S. Main St., Palmer, Mass., Says: "My faith in Doan's Kidney Pills is just as strong today as it was when I publicly recommended them in 1898. For a long time I was troubled a great deal by severe pains through my loins when going up or down stairs. If I sat in one position for any length of time or did any extra work, my suffering was acute. I finally began using Doan's Kidney Pills and received great relief from the first. I continued taking them and it was not long before all symptoms of kidney trouble had disappeared."

The Perfect Husband

"I should certainly like to meet your husband, Mrs. Talleck," said Mrs. Spenger.

"So should I," echoed Mrs. Bryden. All the other women said the same.

Mrs. Talleck smiled beamingly. "I hope," she told them emphatically, "that you may, I really do!"

Mrs. Talleck spoke as though it was a treat too great for mortal to receive except specially favored. It was quite as though she hoped they would each have a great fortune left them, though she doubted it. She did not seem to notice that some of the glances were freighted with dislike. If she had she doubtless would have taken the dislike as a sort of tribute. She did not wonder that the poor things were envious and jealous.

At least that is how Mrs. Spenger explained it. Mrs. Spenger and Mrs Bryden and all the rest had husbands, of course; husbands of a sort; but compared with the sort of husband Mrs. Talleck said hers was the other husbands dwindled into such human misfits that their abashed owners pushed them farther and farther into the background each time they met Mrs. Talleck, who had recently joined their sewing club.

It was not in human nature to be otherwise than displeased that one could not come back at Mrs. Talleck gloriously and show her that her husband wasn't so much after all.

In the first place, Mrs. Talleck's husband was a remarkable looking man Mrs. Talleck told them all about how when she first married him she was frequently embarrassed by the attention he attracted.

"And it happens yet!" she confided to them. "If you could see the way the women look at him! But I don't blame them. I don't see how they could help it. He has the most wonderful eyes—they seemed to draw one There is something overpowering about him. I suppose you would call it personality. The minute that man steps into a room—I don't care how crowded it is—everybody feels his presence. It is comical to see how everybody stops talking and turns toward him. It is enough to make a woman proud, I can tell you!"

"Yes, indeed!" said Mrs. Bryden politely, because Mrs. Talleck looked at her expectantly when she stopped speaking. "It must be lovely!" Mrs. Bryden had heretofore been quite satisfied with her own husband, but now with a little twinge she recollected that never in her whole married career had she had the joy of witnessing a whole roomful of people paralyzed by the entry of John. Everybody had always talked right on as though nothing much had happened.

"I suppose," Mrs. Talleck proceeded, "I've grown rather used to his brilliance—still, even yet I realize how extraordinary his wit is. I never remember his making a perfectly commonplace remark. Whenever he speaks he makes what he says count. I like that in a man!"

"Yes, indeed," agreed Mrs. Spenger, at whom Mrs. Talleck's gaze was directed. She sighed. Hitherto she had always enjoyed her own husband's talkativeness. It had seemed cheerful and boyish. It was a new sensation to be dubious on this point.

"And kind!" Mrs. Talleck added. "If there is anywhere a more considerate, polite, thought man than Henry Talleck I'd like to have him shown me!"

All the women looked confused. Their memories mercilessly taunted them with sundry occasions when their husbands had been none of those agreeable things. It was true, then, what they had reluctantly given up as impossible—there were men—or, at least, there was a man—who possessed all the qualities of the ideal that every woman cherishes until it is reduced to a frazzle before her eyes. And Mrs. Talleck had him!

Three meetings of the sewing club had broken up in gloom. The members had departed sadly, apologetically, hopelessly. The day when they met at Mrs. Talleck's every woman's mouth was set in a firm line. Go home at five o'clock as usual? Not they!

They lingered after tea. They admired Mrs. Talleck's embroidered napkins and the photographs and they insisted on hearing the history of each. Never before did women find so much to talk about. Nobody appeared to observe that it was more than dark outside. Not a soul, apparently, saw the clock that stared them in the face.

The silence was broken an instant later by a falsetto voice that cried: "Say, why don't you oil this infernal clock? And do I smell cabbage cooking for dinner? You know I hate cabbage!"

An undersized man, wearing spectacles and a peevish expression, entered and stared at them in an annoyed way. Everybody tumultuously fled.

Two blocks away Mrs. Spenger spoke. "Do you know," she said, "I am happier this minute than I have been before since I first met Mrs. Talleck!"

Letty's Strategy

In the cool, vigorous air of a June morning, Letty sat on the brow of a rocky hill that looked down upon a narrow winding river. She had come here to be alone and meditate—something very unusual for Letty, because she was an athletic young woman with a tendency to do things and not to dream them. She was considered a mannish girl, but something very feminine had come to her of late. She was in love with Griffith Kennedy.

At first this undisguised affection had amused Letty; gradually she had come to like it. And now, she admitted, she craved it and yearned for it.

Two or three times she knew that he had been on the very verge of a proposal, but obstacles had arisen to prevent his speech. She had been content to wait. She knew the psychological moment had only been postponed; but last night at a dance, he had held that pretty, frivolous, cooing-voiced Maude Nelson very close as he guided her carefully over the crowded floor.

At this sight a fierce jealousy had crept into Letty's heart, and she had come out here alone to have it out with herself.

"That silly, little, scheming thing shall not entrap him!" she resolved. "Why is it men care for that clinging vine sort!"

Her memory then reverted to the first time she had been conscious of his working up to a proposal. This had been late in the preceding Autumn when they were walking in the country. A runaway team had come plunging toward them. Letty had forgotten Grif's very existence. She was conscious only of the white, terrified faces of the women and children in the wagon. She had rushed on ahead, met and stopped the horses, holding them firmly until Grif came up to them.

Everyone had praised her coolness and bravery, but Grif had been strangely silent. After that she had thought him ill at ease in her presence.

The next time had been in the Winter when they were skating on the river. Grif had begun haltingly, but midway in his exordium she caught sight of a litle boy struggling in the water. She shot ahead and made a quick rescue. Griffith had been a close second and carried the child to a nearby house, but his ardor and his fingers were alike frost-nipped.

Now, after witnessing his fond pride in Maude's helplessness, Letty longed for the postponed proposal with all her heart.

"I'll fight her with her own weapons," she diplomatically decided, "and after this I'll never make a rescue in Grif's presence. If he can't stop runaway horses and snatch children out of airholes, they shall meet their fate. Next time I'll faint or something."

This point decided, she started to walk home. In the meadow lot, she saw Grif approaching.

"Now is my chance!" she thought, as they neared the field. "I must pretend I am afraid to climb the fence and pass the cows, and then he will feel himself monarch of all he surveys."

As her lips parted to utter the protest she saw a woman running through the field. A bull was in hot pursuit.

Alas for the plans of bulls and Letty! At once she grasped the situation. The bull would overtake the woman before either she or Grif could reach the scene of action. This time Grif anticipated her and was over the fence rushing to the rescue There was only one thing to do. She must divert the bull.

Wth a ringing cry she hurled her red parasol into the field. It landed between the bull and the woman, in the path of the infuriated animal which charged upon the gorgeous article fiercely and effectively. Grif rushed the woman over the fence to safety, and Letty stood silent, impervious to the woman's gratitude and Grif's praise.

Presently the woman went on and Griffith and Letty continued their way in silence. They entered the cool, olive depths of the woods, and suddenly Letty did a feminine and unpremeditated thing. She burst into tears—hysterical tears, partially induced by derision at the failure of her plan.

Instantly Grif's arms were about her.

"My darling, what is it?" he cried.

"No, Letty! I won't let you go! You can't put me off again. I will tell you that I love you, Letty. Do you care at all?"

It was easy sailing, then, and the course of true love ran very smoothly and pleasantly.

"Tell me, Letty, why you cried?" he demanded presently.

"Oh, Grif—I don't know—I was so afraid the bull would get you, and—"

"He would if it hadn't been for your presence of mind. It is that and your bravery that make me love you, Letty. You are so different from the other ordinary, tiresome, flippant girls."

Then Letty almost cried again, but her sense of humor conquered, and she confided to Grif her fears and her plans. His roar of laughter was reassuring.

"Oh, Letty! I made up my mind when I was dancing with that silly Maude that I would find you to-day, and make you listen to me."

The Word "Strike."

The earliest use of the word "strike" in the sense of stopping work occurs in the London Chronicle for September, 1765, in connection with a coal strike This publication reports a great suspension of labor in the Northumberland coalfields, and the colliers are stated to have "struck out" for a higher bounty before entering into their usual yearly "bond." The time-honored illustration of profitless labor, "carrying coals to Newcastle," appears to have received its first slap in the face during this strike. The Chronicle reports that "several pokes of coal were brought from Durham to Newcastle by one of the common carriers, and sold on the sandhill for 9d a poke, by which he cleared 6d a poke."

Thought They Were Mere Bills!

"Why don't you answer my notes?" asked a woman of another woman she had greeted effusively. "I have written you four notes during the last two weeks and not a single reply."

"O, were those four letters I thought they were merely bills, so I didn't open them."

Origi of Naval Salute.

Originally a town or a warship fired off their guns on the approach of friendly strangers, to show that they had such faith in the visitors' peaceful intentions they didn't think it necessary to keep their guns loaded. Hence the naval salute.

The Kind.

"There is one class of business men who always take the pledge and generally keep it."

"Who are they?"

"Pawnbrokers."

Interesting Experience of Two Women—Their Statements Worth Reading.

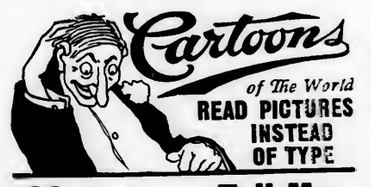
Asheville, N.C.—"I suffered for years with female trouble while going through the Change of Life. I tried a local physician for a couple of years without any substantial benefit. Finally after repeated suggestions to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I quit my physician and commenced using it with the happiest results. I am today practically a well woman and anxious to contribute my mite towards inducing others to try your great medicine, as I am fully persuaded that it will cure the ailments from which I suffered if given a fair chance.



"If you think this letter will contribute anything towards further introducing your medicines to afflicted women who are passing through this trying period, it is with great pleasure I consent to its publication."—Mrs. JULIA A. MOORE, 17 East St., Asheville, N. C.

The Case of Mrs. Kirlin.

Circleville, Ohio.—"I can truthfully say that I never had anything do me so much good during Change of Life as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"Before I had taken one half a bottle of it I began to feel better, and I have continued taking it. My health is better than it has been for several years. If all women would take it they would escape untold pain and misery at this time of life."—Mrs. ALICE KIRLIN, 358 W. Mill St., Circleville, Ohio.

The Change of Life is one of the most critical periods of a woman's existence. At such times women may rely upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

guard your home against such danger. They make a roof fire-proof, weather-proof, long-lived. Cost less than first-grade wood shingles.

Penco Shingles also make a satisfactory siding. The larger sizes are splendidly adapted for laying over old wooden shingles.

Penco Shingles are stamped from high-grade metal and heavily galvanized or coated with special weather-resisting paint. They give protection from lightning and make a handsome roof for every building. Because of their light weight, they put only one-fourth to one-third as much strain on rafters as shingles or slate.

Any good tinsmith, carpenter or building material dealer can supply and lay Penco Shingles. Before you buy any roofing, write for prices, samples and full information.

STATE BUYS THE LAND.

A Permanent Fish Hatchery in Palmer is Assured.

DEEDS WERE RECORDED YESTERDAY

Fish and Game Commission Now Has Absolute Control of Goodreau Farm in Palmer.

The permanency of the fish hatchery established recently near Palmer Center as an experiment is assured by the transfer of the property yesterday to the state, warranty deeds for the property being filed in Springfield.

The property covers about 68 acres, and is located north of Palmer Center, near the crossing of the roads from Palmer to Ware and Warren to Enfield. The owner was Alfred Goodreau, and the price paid is about $2500.

The state took a lease of the property, with an option of purchase, last March. A temporary building was erected and rearing pools for young fish constructed, on the supposition that the water in the brook was of good quality and adapted to the propagation of fish; another feature was the unfailing supply of water in the brook, there being an abundance even during the extreme dry weather of the last two or three years. That the expectations of the commissioners proved correct is shown by the purchase of the property. It is probable that with its acquisition by the state, larger and permanent buildings will be erected, and the scope of the work there materially enlarged.

Killed on Railroad Track.

Charles John, Greek Laborer, Struck by Express Train.

Charles John, a Greek employed on the new Southern New England railroad, was killed on the track of the Boston and Albany road near the Cooley crossing, about two miles east of Palmer, Saturday noon. John, with a fellow employe, was crossing the tracks when he was struck by the second section of train No. 41, a westbound express due in Palmer at 12.10. Death was instantaneous, the man's head being crushed and the body badly mangled; the clothing was completely torn off. The body was taken to Phillips' undertaking rooms in Palmer, and relatives from Worcester came for it later.

Polish Church Elects Officers.

The annual meeting of the Polish Roman Catholic congregation was held Tuesday evening in St. Joseph's hall, Thorndike. Joseph Tenezar was the presiding officer, and these officers were elected: Clerk, Michael Pelezarski of Thorndike; treasurer, Stanislaus Zemba of Three Rivers; trustees, Michael Pisarczyk of Bondsville, Michael Boyka of Three Rivers, Frank Szeaycinski of Palmer, Powell Trzepacz of Three Rivers and Charles Krusyna of Thorndike. At a meeting of the trustees these officers were elected: President, Frank Szeayeinski; vice president, Powell Trzepacz.

Death of Lawrence Welch of Warren.

Lawrence Welch, 48, died suddenly at his home in Warren yesterday after only a half hour's illness, the cause of death being heart disease. He was a member of Marks Mountain lodge of United Workmen and of Court Warren, F. of A. He leaves his widow, three sons and two daughters. The funeral will be held to-morrow in St. Paul's Catholic church, with burial in St. Paul's Catholic cemetery.

BELCHERTOWN.

Celebrated 82d Birthday.

E. F. Towne celebrated his 82d birthday last Friday, when a number of relatives and friends called to express their best wishes. Mr. Towne enjoys the best of health. A week ago he walked from Dwight Station to the center of Belchertown in just 50 minutes, and sawed some wood an hour afterward. He received birthday cards from friends in different parts of the state.

Clifton Witt will attend Fitchburg normal school this year.

E. E. Towne is making extensive improvements on his house.

L. R. Blackmer has gone to Arcadie, N. Y., for a visit with his brother.

Mrs. Ellen Bridgman has bought the Ansel Shaw place and is building a home for herself and daughter.

Theodore Hazen has returned from the Springfield hospital, where he underwent an operation for appendicitis.

Philip D. Dodge, a civil war veteran, aged 79, died at his home near Dwight station Sunday afternoon. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. S. Hale Tuesday afternoon.

Waiting Station Report.

Business Club Committee Announces That It Can Do Nothing.

At the meeting of the Palmer Business and Social club Tuesday evening the committee appointed some time ago to investigate the possibility of improvement in the street railway waiting room conditions in Palmer—George Ezekiel, Samuel Stewart and F. A. Upham—made known the result of its findings.

It reported having held a conference with Superintendent Atkins of the electric road, at which he was informed of the wide-spread dissatisfaction, not only on the part of Palmer people but patrons of the road from the other villages and all who have occasion to use the waiting room, on account of the inadequate space and unventilated condition of the present room. Mr. Atkins replied, the committee stated, that it was impossible to improve the conditions at present. Mr. Atkins stated that the company had endeavored to secure other quarters on Main street but had been unable to come to terms with any of the property owners interviewed. The committee suggested the removal of the conductors' room to the second story and the use of the entire first floor for a waiting room and starter's office as a possibility which would greatly improve present conditions but were given little satisfaction on that proposition.

The committee found that the railroad commissioners have no jurisdiction in such matters, and therefore referred the whole matter back to the club for such further action as it might deem best. The club voted to accept the report of the committee and lay the report on the table for future action.

Sad Story Was Fairy Tale.

And the Money Which Was Secured Thereby Went For Booze.

People with large sympathies had their heartstrings—and pocketbooks—touched Wednesday afternoon by a man who pretended to be lame and had a story of misfortune and need which brought him funds where otherwise the donors would have withheld assistance. Finally, however, after he had been seen by one benefactor visiting other places, tabs were kept on the fellow and he was found spending the money in local saloons. Officer Crimmins was called and the man taken in charge, and in the district court yesterday morning was sent to Bridgewater. He limped pathetically when he left the court room, but before the railroad station had been reached Deputy Sheriff Bills was in a fair way to make a record as a sprinter in trying to keep up with the fellow, who gave the name of Thomas Rivers.

Decides That Death Was Accidental.

A decision was handed down Monday by Judge Thomas W. Kenefick of Palmer in the inquest held in Palmer August 3 on the death of Joseph H. Opray, who was hurt on a freight locomotive at West Brimfield May 18 and died in Worcester May 24. Opray was a fireman on a freight train, and about 3 o'clock in the morning was severely burned by escaping steam, which came from some part of the locomotive which had broken. Judge Kenefick finds that death was due to an accident, and in no way due to any negligence on the part of the railroad.

BRIMFIELD.

John H. Noyes has returned from a visit in New York state.

Miss Gladys Monroe leaves for her duties as a student at Wellesley College next week.

Edward S. Butterfield is spending a part of the week in East Orange, N. J.

Mrs. Francis E. Boardman of Waterbury, Ct., and son are visiting at the home of George M. Hitchcock.

Monroe Tarbell has returned to his studies at the Massachusetts Agricultural College, where he is a member of the junior class.

Mr. and Mrs. Waldo Prickett and Master Roland Prickett spent the week-end at the home of Albert Pierson.

Miss Cornelia Peck of Smithtown, L. I., is spending the week in town as the guest of Mrs. Hubbard. Miss Peck is librarian of the public library in Smithtown.

Mrs. M. J. Eagan and daughter Ellen have returned to their home in Providence, R. I., after an extended stay at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Haley.

Raymond P. Hoskins, who has been a student in the New York Military Academy, Cornwall-on-Hudson, the past year, has entered the new Wilbraham Academy, which opens September 18. Mr. Hoskins has been making his home with his aunt, Mrs. Albert R. Brown, during his vacations the past year. His father, Dr. Albert J Hoskins, is a noted surgeon in Mexico.

BOY HIT BY ELECTRIC.

Steps Out of Tall Grass in Front of Moving Car.

HIT IN MOUTH BY RUNNING BOARD.

Lip Cut, Teeth Gone and Jaw Broken in Three Places, But Is Not Seriously Hurt.

John, the seven-years-old son of John Supeka of Thorndike, was struck and severely hurt by an electric car near his home on Church street last Friday afternoon about 5 o'clock. His upper lip was cut in the middle, some of his teeth were knocked out and his jaw broken in three places. He was taken on the car to Palmer, where he was attended by Dr. H. C. Cheney, and later was taken in an automobile to the hospital in Springfield.

The boy, with others, had been gathering grapes on the side of the steam railroad cut, close to his home. He had started for home and after climbing the bank emerged from the tall grass directly in the path of the car, dodging suddenly through the fence at the side of the track. The corner of the running board struck him in the mouth, and he was fortunately thrown away from the track instead of toward it. The car was in charge of Motorman Millerick and Conductor Monahan. No blame is attached to the car crew, as the boy's appearance was so sudden that it was impossible to make a move to stop the car.

New Telephone Cable.

Company is Installing 30-Line Circuit to Three Rivers.

The New England Telephone and Telegraph company has a gang of men at work on a new cable to Three Rivers. The new construction runs from the rear of the company's office on North Main street to the railroad track, along that to the Point of Rocks on North Main street, and thence along the highway to Three Rivers. From the central office to Shearers Corner the cable carries 60 pairs of wires, and from that to the post office in Three Rivers 30 pairs, enabling the company to install 30 circuits or lines in that village. The new installation is expected to give Three Rivers a very much better service that has been possible under the old construction. This is the cable which the company two years ago wished to run along North Main street from the central office, but which was so violently opposed by the abuttors that the selectmen refused to grant the petition.

Death of Wilbraham Man.

William S. Thurlow died yesterday morning at the home of his father-in-law, A. J. Bryant, after nearly a year's illness. Besides a widow and two children, he leaves his father in Denver, a sister, Mrs. Baumgarten, in St. Louis, and a brother, Harry, in Culpepper, Va.

WARREN.

Miss Dorothy DeLand has gone to Sherwood, N. J., where she has a position as teacher in a private school.

Miss Mary Hosley has gone to Rutland, where she has a position as supervisor of domestic science in the public schools.

The marriage of Alexander Julsonnett of Rutland and Miss Blanche Collen of Warren was performed by Rev. J. P. McCaughan Monday morning at 7 o'clock in St. Paul's church. After the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served at the bride's home on the Brimfield road, after which Mr. and Mrs. Julsonnett left for a short trip. They will live in Rutland.

Forest Fire Warden Charles E. Rice was called twice Wednesday to put out small brush fires near the farm property of James F. Cutler on the Brimfield road. The fires were evidently started in piles of brush thrown out last winter when the New England telephone and telegraph company cut through a new right of way. No trace could be found of the person setting the fires.

HAMPDEN.

Miss Annie Newell returned Saturday from her vacation at Old Orchard.

Mrs. F. Stockbridge Smith has gone to White River Junction, Vt., to visit Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Ullery.

The funeral of Mrs. Moses H. Warren was held last Friday afternoon, Rev. C. B. Bliss officiating. The body was brought to Palmer for burial, and Rev. F. S. Brewer read the committal service and made the prayer at the grave. The bearers were William J. Sessions, H. H. Thresher, C. L. Burleigh and John P. Isham.

DROWNING ACCIDENT.

Small Boy Loses Life at Three Rivers Monday.

PLAYING NEAR RIVER WITH SISTER.

Fell Over Bank Into Water. Accident Was Seen, But Rescue Efforts Proved Futile.

John Nodin, the 6-years-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Moteka Nodin, Polish residents of Three Rivers, was drowned in the river at Three Rivers Monday morning.

The little boy, with his four-years-old sister, was playing on the bank of the river just north of the Central Vermont railroad bridge. He was probably leaning over the bank, when he lost his balance and fell in. An alarm was given by children who saw the accident and men from the Palmer Mill responded quickly, several men diving in. The body was not recovered for an hour however.

Medical Examiner J. P. Schneider was called and viewed the body. He found death was due to accidental drowning. The body was taken in charge by the parents. The funeral was held Tuesday afternoon at St. Peter and St. Paul's church, with burial in the Four Corners cemetery.

Repairs on Memorial Hall.

The selectmen have had some needed repairs made this week on the town's memorial building. The coping on the front of the building had reached a condition where it was thought to be in danger of falling, and the masonry in several places needed pointing up. It has all been gone over thoroughly and put in proper condition.

EAST BRIMFIELD.

Clinton E. Brown of Fiskdale was in the village last week.

Rev. W. White of Sturbridge preached here Sunday.

A number of gypsies pitched their tent for a few days near B. W. Charles' farm.

Five pupils entered the Academy this fall, the largest class for a number of years.

Roscoe W. Nichols, of the class of '12, Brimfield Academy, is working in the auger shop.

Charles Wallis Sr., who has recently purchased a farm in Westford, Ct., moved his family there last week.

William W. Spratt, a student of Worcester Tech, who has been working for his father in the machine shop this summer, split the bone of his right thumb five weeks ago playing ball. He has shown remarkable courage and endurance, as he has not missed one day from his work since he received the painful fracture, and has learned to use his left hand quite as well as his right.

WALES.

Mrs. George Parker of West Warren spent the week-end in town.

Mrs. Isaiah Hiscock is visiting her son, John Andrews, in Stafford, Ct.

Mrs. George H. Lanphear entertained the Baptist Ladies' Aid Society Thursday afternoon.

Mrs. Mary Whitcomb of Springfield has been spending a few days with Mrs. H. A. McFarland.

H. C. Needham has returned to Brooklyn, N. Y., after spending two months at his summer home here.

Mrs. Fred Leland and family have returned to Worcester after spending their vacation with Mrs. Leland's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Pepper.

The schools have opened with Miss Eva Allen of Oakham as teacher in the grammar school and Miss Anna G. Hynes of this town in the primary room. Miss Ethel Chilson of Northampton will have charge of the music and Miss Clara P. Chase of Sturbridge will serve as supervisor of drawing.

WILBRAHAM.

Death of Mrs. Arthur F. Smith.

Mrs. Ida Bolles Smith, 52, died at her home on North Main street Monday morning after a short illness with gastritis. Mrs. Smith was born in Rockville, Ct., September 23, 1860, and was the daughter of Henry T. and Laura E. Bolles. She received her education in the schools of Rockville and moved to Wilbraham with her parents 31 years ago, and had since resided there. She was married to Arthur F. Smith June 23, 1897. Besides her husband, she leaves her father, Henry T. Bolles, and one brother, Clarence P. Bolles of Wilbraham, and one sister, Mrs. Frank A. Warner of Springfield. The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon, Rev. M. S. Howard officiating. Burial was in Woodland Dell cemetery.

Town Needs More Dwellings.

Peculiar Condition Touched on at the Business Club's Meeting.

A matter which has a large bearing on the prosperity of the village of Palmer, at least, was brought up at the monthly meeting of the Palmer Business and Social club Tuesday evening, and that is the scarcity of dwellings which may be had by families desiring to locate here.

In the discussion it was brought out that the Wright Wire company is advertising that it will take leases of houses erected in the vicinity of its plant, in an endeavor to secure enough for the accommodation of men whom it would like to bring here for the operation of an enlarged plant; that the plant will not be enlarged unless the workmen can find homes, which is impossible at present. Information was also offered that families who had intended to come to Palmer to live had been obliged to go elsewhere on account of being unable to find houses, while others who had been obliged to leave their homes had been compelled to leave town or board at hotels. The futility of attempting to induce manufacturing enterprises to locate here under the present conditions was pointed out, and in an effort to remedy to some extent at least the present unfortunate situation the matter was referred to the business committee of the club, which is expected to report later.

Personal Mention.

A. J. Adams of North Adams, formerly of Palmer, visited friends in town Saturday.

Frank S. Hunnewell of Attleboro, formerly superintendent of the Springfield and Eastern street railway, has been spending the week in town.

Opportunity to Register.

The board of registrars of voters will meet in the selectmen's room in the memorial building next Tuesday evening, from 7 to 8.15, for the purpose of adding names to the voting list to be used in the primaries the 24th.

Gov. Foss and council visited the Monson state hospital Wednesday afternoon.

CITIZENS COMPLAIN.

Protest on Electric Light and Street Car Service.

ASK INVESTIGATION OF SITUATIONS.

Two Letters Received by the Selectmen Last Evening. Public Meeting Next Week.

The selectmen at their meeting last evening received two communications concerning local public service corporations. One was a letter complaining of the electric light and power service, and asking an investigation of the conditions with a view to providing, if possible, something in the way of improvement. The other complained of the operation of the electric cars in and through the town, and also asked an investigation with a view to improvement. The writer of this letter offered the board a quantity of information which he had collected on the subject.

The selectmen decided to hold a public meeting some time next week, the time and place to be determined later, these depending on the securing of a place in which to hold it. At this meeting the public will be invited to make any complaints which it may desire to, and the officials of the interested companies will be invited to be present and present their side of the matters.

That there will be a large attendance and a lively session goes without saying. Many complaints are heard of the electric light and power service, especially that part which has to do with the street lights, and the indications are that there will be no lack of opinions at the meeting, and those not of the complimentary kind. Even more numerous are likely to be the complaints regarding the electric car service. It has been unsatisfactory for a long time, and of late has been growing worse, the past week or two reaching the climax of uncertainty. Cars have run on anything but schedule time, with delays on switches which have been particularly exasperating. If only a small fraction of the complaint which is heard publicly is voiced at the meeting, a lively time is promised.

Sporting News.

Baseball.

Game Ends in a Tie.

Bondsville and Indian Orchard played 10 innings Saturday afternoon in Bondsville. The game was called on account of darkness, with four runs to the credit of each team. This was the first in a series of three games between the two teams. Bennett and Pike were the opposing pitchers and as far as the hits were concerned broke even with six off each. Bennett, however, had his strikeout ball working in fine shape and whiffed 17 men, but was handicapped by poor support, seven errors cropping out behind him. The score:

WARE.

Sullivan—Potts.

The marriage of John A. Sullivan of Bondsville and Miss Mary F. Potts of Ware took place in All Saints' church Tuesday morning. The bridesmaid was Miss Nellie Quirk of Ware and the best man was Patrick Moriarty of Bondsville. A wedding breakfast was served and a reception held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jeremiah McCarthy, where the bride had lived. After a trip to New York the couple will live in Holyoke, where the groom is employed at the Hotel Yoerg.

Several new houses are being erected in the wire mill district.

CHAPTER XX.

Three days later, Daylight rode to Berkeley in his red car. It was for the last time, for on the morrow the big machine passed into another's possession. It had been a strenuous three days, for his smash had been the biggest the panic had precipitated in California. The papers had been filled with it, and a great cry of indignation had gone up from the very men who later found that Daylight had fully protected their interests. It was these facts, coming slowly to light, that gave rise to the widely repeated charge that Daylight had gone insane. It was the unanimous conviction among business men that no sane man could possibly behave in such fashion. On the other hand, neither his prolonged steady drinking nor his affair with Dede became public, so the only conclusion attainable was that the wild financier from Alaska had gone lunatic. And Daylight had grinned and confirmed the suspicion by refusing to see the reporter. He halted the automobile before Dede's door, and met her with his same rushing tactics, enclosing her in his arms before a word could be uttered.

"I've done it," he announced. "You've seen the newspapers, of course. I'm plumb cleaned out, and I've just called around to find out what day you feel like starting for Glen Ellen. It'll have to be soon, for it's real expensive living in Oakland these days. My board at the hotel is only paid to the end of the week, and I can't afford to stay on after that. And beginning with tomorrow I've got to use the street cars, and they sure eat up the nickels."

He paused, and waited, and looked at her. Indecision and trouble showed on her face. Then the smile he knew so well began to grow on her lips and in her eyes, until she threw back her head and laughed in the old forthright boyish way.

"When are those men coming to pack for me?" she asked.

And again she laughed and simulated a vain attempt to escape his bear-like arms.

"Dear Elam," she whispered; "dear Elam." And of herself, for the first time, she kissed him.

"Now, I've got an idea," Daylight said. "We're running away from cities, and you have no kith nor kin, so it don't seem exactly right that we should start off by getting married in a city. So here's the idea: I'll run up to the ranch and get things in shape around the house and give the caretaker his walking-papers. You follow me in a couple of days, coming on the morning train. I'll have the preacher fixed and waiting. And here's another idea. You bring your riding togs in a suit case. And as soon as the ceremony's over, you can go to the hotel and change. Then out you come, and you find me waiting with a couple of horses, and we'll ride over the landscape so as you can see the prettiest parts of the ranch the first thing. And she's sure pretty, that ranch. And now that it's settled, I'll be waiting for you at the morning train day after tomorrow."

Dede blushed as she spoke.

"You are such a hurricane."

"Well, ma'am," he drawled, "I sure hate to burn daylight. And you and I have burned a heap of daylight. We've been scandalously extravagant. We might have been married years ago."

Two days later, Daylight stood waiting outside the little Glen Ellen hotel. The ceremony was over, and he had left Dede to go inside and change into her riding-habit while he brought the horses. He held them now, Bob and Mab, and in the shadow of the watering-trough Wolf lay and looked on. Already two days of ardent California sun and touched with new fires the ancient bronze in Daylight's face. But warmer still was the glow that came into his cheeks and burned in his eyes as he saw Dede coming out the door, riding-whip in hand, clad in the familiar corduroy skirt and leggings of the old Piedmont days. There was warmth and glow in her own face as she answered his gaze and glanced on past him to the horses. Then she saw Mab. But her gaze leaped back to the man.

"Oh, Elam!" she breathed.

* * * * * * * * *

Many persons, themselves city-bred, and city reared, have fled to the soil and succeeded in winning great happiness. In such cases they have succeeded only by going through a process of savage disillusionment. But with Dede and Daylight it was different. They had both been born on the soil, and they knew its naked simplicities and rawer ways. They were like two persons, after far wandering, who had merely come home again. There was less of the unexpected in their dealings with nature, while theirs was all the delight of reminiscence. What might appear sordid and squalid to the fastidiously reared, was to them eminently wholesome and natural. The commerce of nature was to them no unknown and untried trade. They made fewer mistakes. They already knew, and it was a joy to remember what they had forgotten.

And another thing they learned was that it was easier for one who has gorged at the flesh-pots to content himself with the meagreness of a crust, than for one who has known only the crust. Not that their life was meagre. It was that they found keener delights and deeper satisfactions in little things. Daylight, who had played the game in its biggest and most fantastic aspects, found that here, on the slopes of Sonoma Mountain, it was still the same old game. Man had still work to perform, forces to combat, obstacles to overcome. When he experimented in a small way at raising a few pigeons for market, he found no less zest in calculating in squabs than formerly when he had calculated in millions. Achievement was no less achievement, while the process of it seemed more rational and received the sanction of his reason.

The domestic cat that had gone wild and that preyed on his pigeons, he found, by the comparative standard, to be of no less paramount menace than a Charles Klinkner in the field of finance, trying to raid him for several millions. The hawks and weasels and 'coons were so many Dowsetts, Lettons, and Guggenhammers that struck at him secretly. The sea of wild vegetation that tossed its surf against the boundaries of all his clearings and that sometimes crept in and flooded in a single week was no mean enemy to contend with and subdue. His fat-soiled vegetable-garden in the nook of hills that failed of its best was a problem of engrossing importance, and when he had solved it by putting in draintile, the joy of the achievement was ever with him. He never worked in it and found the soil unpacked and tractable without experiencing the thrill of accomplishment.

There was the matter of the plumbing. He was enabled to purchase the materials through a lucky sale of a number of his hair bridles. The work he did himself, though more than once he was forced to call in Dede to hold tight with a pipe-wrench. And in the end, when the bath-tub and the stationary tubs were installed and in working order, he could scarcely tear himself away from the contemplation of what his hands had wrought. The first evening, missing him, Dede sought and found him, lamp in hand, staring with silent glee at the tubs. He rubbed his hand over their smooth wooden lips and laughed aloud, and was as shame-faced as any boy when she caught him thus secretly exulting in his own prowess.

It was this adventure in wood-working and plumbing that brought about the building of the little workshop, where he slowly gathered a collection of loved tools. And he, who in the old days, out of his millions, could purchase immediately whatever he might desire, learned the new joy of the possession that follows upon rigid economy and desire long delayed. He waited three months before daring the extravagance of a Yankee screw-driver, and his glee in the marvelous little mechanism was so keen that Dede conceived forthright a great idea. For six months she saved her egg-money, which was hers by right of allotment, and on his birthday presented him with a turning-lathe of wonderful simplicity and multifarious efficiencies. And their mutual delight in the lathe, which was his, was only equalled by their delight in Mab's first foal, which was Dede's special private property.

Daylight had made no assertion of total abstinence, though he had not taken a drink for months after the lay he resolved to let his business go to smash. Soon he proved himself strong enough to dare to take a drink without taking a second. On the other hand, with his coming to live in the country, had passed all desire and need for drink. He felt no yearning for it, and even forgot that it existed. Yet he refused to be afraid of it, and in town, on occasion, when invited by the storekeeper, would reply: "All right, son. If my taking a drink will make you happy, here goes. Whisky for mine."

"Dear Elam," She Whispered, "Dear Elam."

But such a drink begat no desire for a second. It made no impression. He was too profoundly strong to be effected by a thimbleful. As he had prophesied to Dede, Burning Daylight, the city financier, had died a quick death on the ranch, and his younger brother, the Daylight from Alaska, had taken his place. The threatened inundation of fat had subsided, and all his old-time Indian leanness and litheness of muscle had returned. So, likewise, did the old slight hollows in his cheeks come back. For him they indicated the pink of physical condition. He became the acknowledged strong man of Sonoma Valley, the heaviest lifter and hardest winded among a husky race of farmer folk.

At first, when in need of ready cash, he had followed Ferguson's example of working at day's labor; but he was not long in gravitating to a form of work that was more stimulating and more satisfying, and that allowed him even more time for Dede and the ranch and the perpetual riding through the hills. Having been challenged by the blacksmith, in a spirit of banter, to attempt the breaking of a certain incorrigible colt, he succeeded so signally as to earn quite a reputation as a horse-breaker. And soon he was able to earn whatever money he desired at this, to him, agreeable work. His life was eminently wholesome and natural. Early to bed, he slept like an infant and was up with the dawn. Always with something to do, and with a thousand little things that enticed but did not clamor, he was himself never overdone. Nevertheless, there were times when both he and Dede was not above confessing tiredness at bedtime after seventy or eighty miles in the saddle. Sometimes, when he had accumulated a little money, and when the season favored, they would mount their horses, with saddle-bags behind, and ride away over the wall of the valley and down into the other valleys.

One day, stopping to mail a letter at the Glen Ellen postoffice, they were hailed by the blacksmith.

"Say, Daylight," he said, "a young fellow named Slosson sends you his regards. He came through in an auto on the way to Santa Rosa. He wanted to know if you didn't live hereabouts, but the crowd with him was in a hurry. So he sent you his regards and said to tell you he'd taken your advice and was still going on breaking his own record."

Daylight had long since told Dede of the incident.

"Slosson?" he meditated. "Slosson? That must be the hammer-thrower. He put my hand down twice, the young scamp." He turned suddenly to Dede. "Say, it's only twelve miles to Santa Rosa, and the horses are fresh."

"Say," He Called Out, "I'd Like to Tackle You Again."

She divined what was in his mind, of which his twinkling eyes and sheepish, boyish grin gave sufficient advertisement, and she smiled and nodded acquiescense.

"We'll cut across by Bennett Valley," he said. "It's nearer that way."

There was little difficulty, once in Santa Rosa, of finding Slosson. He and his party had registered at the Oberlin Hotel, and Daylight encountered the young hammer-thrower himself in the office.

"Look here, son," Daylight announced, as soon as he had introduced Dede, "I've come to go you another flutter at that hand game. Here's a likely place."

Slosson smiled and accepted. The two men faced each other, the elbows of their right arms on the counter, the hands clasped. Slosson's hand quickly forced backward and down.

"You're the first man that ever succeeded in doing it," he said. "Let's try it again."

"Sure," Daylight answered. "And don't forget, son, that you're the first man that put mine down. That's why I lit out after you today."

Again they clasped hands, and again Slosson's hand went down. He was a broad-shouldered, heavy-muscled young giant, at least half a head taller than Daylight, and he frankly expressed his chagrin and asked for a third trial. This time he steeled himself to the effort, and for a moment the issue was in doubt. With flushed face and set teeth he met the other's strength till his crackling muscles failed him. The air exploded sharply from his tensed lungs, as he relaxed in surrender, and the hand dropped limply down.

"You're too many for me," he confessed. "I only hope you'll keep out of the hammer-throwing game."

Daylight laughed and shook his head.

"We might compromise, and each stay in his own class. You stick to hammer-throwing, and I'll go on turning down hands."

But Slosson refused to accept defeat.

"Say," he called out, as Daylight and Dede, astride their horses, were preparing to depart. "Say—do you mind if I look you up next year? I'd like to tackle you again."

"Sure, son. You're welcome to a flutter any time. Though I give you fair warning that you'll have to go some. You'll have to train up, for I'm plowing and chopping wood and breaking colts these days."

Now and again, on the way home, Dede could hear her big boy-husband chuckling gleefully. As they halted their horses on the top of the divide out of Bennett Valley, in order to watch the sunset, he ranged alongside and slipped his arm around her waist.

"Little woman," he said, "you're sure responsible for it all. And I leave it to you, if all the money in creation is worth as much as one arm like that when it's got a sweet little woman like this to go around."

Daylight's steadfast contention was that his wife should not become cook, waitress, and chambermaid because she did not happen to possess a household of servants. On the other hand, chafing-dish suppers in the big living-room for their camping guests were a common happening, at which times Daylight allotted them their chores and saw that they were performed. For one who stopped only for the night it was different. Likewise it was different with her brother, back from Germany, and again able to sit a horse. On his vacations he became the third in the family, and to him was given the building of the fires, the sweeping, and the washing of the dishes.

BURNING DAYLIGHT.

CHAPTER XXI.

But there came the day, one year, in early April, when Dede sat in an easy chair on the porch, sewing on certain small garments, while Daylight read aloud to her. It was in the afternoon, and a bright sun was shining down on a world of new green. Along the irrigation channels of the vegetable garden streams of water were flowing, and now and again Daylight broke off from his reading to run out and change the flow of water. Also, he was teasingly interested in the certain small garments on which Dede worked, while she was radiantly happy over them, though at times, when his tender fun was too insistent, she was rosily confused or affectionately resentful. It was a few minutes later that Daylight, breaking off from his reading to change the streams of irrigation, found that the water had ceased flowing. He shouldered a pick and shovel, took a hammer and a pipe-wrench from the tool-house, and returned to Dede on the porch.

"I reckon I'll have to go down and dig the pipe out," he told her. "It's that slide that's threatened all winter. I guess she's come down at last."

"Don't you read ahead, now," he warned, as he passed around the house and took the trail that led down the wall of the canyon.

Halfway down the trail, he came upon the slide. It was a small affair, only a few tons of earth and crumbling rock; but, starting from fifty feet above, it had struck the water-pipe with force sufficient to break it at a connection. Before proceeding to work, he glanced up the path of the slide, and he saw what made his eyes startle and cease for the moment from questing farther.

"Hello," he communed aloud, "look who's here."

His glance moved on up the steep broken surface, and across it from side to side. Here and there, in places, small twisted manzanitas were rooted precariously, but in the main, save for weeds and grass, that portion of the canyon was bare. There were signs of a surface that had shifted often as the rain poured a flow of rich eroded soil from above over the lip of the canyon.

"A true fissure vein, or I never saw one," he proclaimed softly.

Dropping the hammer and pipe-wrench, but retaining pick and shovel, he climbed up the slide to where a vague line of out-jutting but mostly soil-covered rock could be seen. It was all but indiscernible, but his practiced eye had sketched the hidden information which it signified. Here and there, along this wall of the vein, he attacked the crumbling rock with the pick and shoveled the encumbering soil away. Several times he examined this rock. So soft was some of it that he could break it in his fingers. Shifting a dozen feet higher up, he again attacked with pick and shovel. And this time, when he rubbed the soil from a chunk of rock and looked, he straightened up suddenly, gasping with delight. And then, like a deer at a drinking pool in fear of its enemies, he flung a quick glance around to see if any eye were gazing upon him. He grinned at his own foolishness and returned to his examination of the chunk. A slant of sunlight fell on it, and it was all aglitter with tiny specks of unmistakable free gold.

"From the grass roots down," he muttered in an awe-stricken voice, as he swung his pick into the yielding surface.

Sometimes he started small slides of earth that covered up his work and compelled him to dig again. Once he was swept fifty feet down the canyon-side; but he floundered and scrambled up again without pausing for breath. He hit upon quartz that was so rotten that it was almost like clay, and here the gold was richer than ever. It was a veritable treasure chamber. For a hundred feet up and down he traced the walls of the vein. He even climbed over the canyon-lip to look along the brow of the hill for signs of the outcrop. But that could wait, and he hurried back to his find.

He toiled on in the same mad haste, until exhaustion and an intolerable ache in his back compelled him to pause. He straightened up with even a richer piece of gold-laden quartz. Stooping, the sweat from his forehead had fallen to the ground. It now ran into his eyes, blinding him. He wiped it from him with the back of his hand and returned to a scrutiny of the gold. It would run thirty thousand to the ton, fifty thousand, anything—he knew that. And as he gazed upon the yellow lure, and panted for air, and wiped the sweat away, his quick vision leaped and set to work. He saw the spur-track that must run up from the valley and across the upland pastures, and he ran the grades and built the bridge that would span the canyon, until it was real before his eyes. Across the canyon was the place for the mill, and there he erected it; and he erected, also, the endless chain of buckets, suspended from a cable and operated by gravity, that would cross the canyon to the quartz-crusher. Likewise, the whole mine grew before him and beneath him—tunnels, shafts, and galleries, and hoisting plants. The blasts of the miners were in his ears, and from across the canyon he could hear the roar of the stamps. The hand that held the lump of quartz was trembling, and there was a tired, nervous palpitation apparently in the pit of his stomach. It came to him abruptly that what he wanted was a drink—whisky, cocktails, anything, a drink. And even then, with this new hot yearning for the alcohol upon him, he heard, faint and far, drifting down the green abyss of the canyon, Dede's voice, crying:—

"Here, chick, chick, chick, chick, chick! Here, chick, chick, chick!"

He was astounded at the lapse of time. She had left her sewing on the porch and was feeding the chickens preparatory to getting supper. The afternoon was gone. He could not conceive that he had been away that long.

Again came the call: "Here, chick, chick, chick, chick, chick! Here, chick, chick, chick!"

It was the way she always called—first five, and then three. He had long since noticed it. And from these thoughts of her arose other thoughts that caused a great fear slowly to grow in his face. For it seemed to him that he had almost lost her. Not once had he thought of her in those frenzied hours, and for that much, at least, had she truly been lost to him. He dropped the piece of quartz, slid down the slide, and started up the trail, running heavily. At the edge of the clearing he eased down and almost crept to a point of vantage whence he could peer out, himself unseen. She was feeding the chickens, tossing to them handfuls of grain and laughing at their antics.

The sight of her seemed to relieve the panic fear into which he had been flung, and he turned and ran back down the trail. Again he climbed the slide, but this time he climbed higher, carrying the pick and shovel with him. And again he toiled frenziedly, but this time with a different purpose. He worked artfully, loosing slide after slide of the red soil and sending it streaming down and covering up all he had uncovered, hiding from the light of day the treasure he had discovered. He even went into the woods and scooped armfuls of last year's fallen leaves, which he scattered over the slide. But this he gave up as a vain task, and he sent more slides of soil down upon the scene of his labor, until no sign remained of the out-jutting walls of the vein. Next he repaired the broken pipe, gathered his tools together, and started up the trail. He walked slowly, feeling a great weariness, as of a man who had passed through a frightful crisis. He put the tools away, took a great drink of the water that again flowed through the pipes, and sat down on the bench by the open kitchen door. Dede was inside, preparing supper, and the sound of her footsteps gave him a vast content.

He breathed the balmy mountain air in great gulps, like a diver fresh-risen from the sea. And, as he drank in the air, he gazed with all his eyes at the clouds and sky and valley, as if he were drinking in that, too, along with the air.

Dede did not know he had come back, and at times he turned his head and stole glances in at her—at her efficient hands, at the bronze of her brown hair that smouldered with fire when she crossed the path of sunshine that streamed through the window, at the promise of her figure that shot through him a pang most strangely sweet and sweetly dear. He heard her approaching the door, and kept his head turned resolutely toward the valley. And next, he thrilled, as he had always thrilled, when he felt the caressing gentleness of her fingers through his hair.

"Here, Chick, Chick, Chick, Chick!"

"I didn't know you were back," she said. "Was it serious?"

"Pretty bad, that slide," he answered, still gazing away and thrilling to her touch. "More serious than I reckoned. But I've got the plan. Do you know what I'm going to do?—I'm going to plant eucalyptus all over it. They'll hold it. I'll plant them thick as grass, so that even a hungry rabbit can't squeeze between them; and when they get their roots agoing, nothing in creation will ever move that dirt again.'

"Why, is it as bad as that?'

He shook his head.

"Nothing exciting. But I'd sure like to see any blamed old slide get the best of me, that's all. I'm going to seal that slide down so that it'll stay there for a million years. And when the last trump sounds, and Sonoma Mountain and all the other mountains pass into nothingness, that old slide will be still a-standing there, held up by the roots."

He passed his arm around her and pulled her down on his knees.

"Say, little woman, you sure miss a lot by living here on the ranch—music, and theaters, and such things. Don't you ever have a hankering to drop it all and go back?"

So great was his anxiety that he dared not look at her, and when she laughed and shook her head he was aware of a great relief. Also, he noted the undiminshed youth that rang through that same old-time boyish laugh of hers.

"Say," he said, with sudden fierceness, "don't you go fooling around that slide until after I get the trees in and rooted. It's mighty dangerous, and I sure can't afford to lose you now."

He drew her lips to his and kissed her hungrily and passionately.

"What a lover!" she said; and pride in him and in her own womanhood was in her voice.

"Look at that, Dede." He removed one encircling arm and swept it in a wide gesture over the valley and the mountains beyond. "The Valley of the Moon—a good name, a good name. Do you know, when I look out over it all, and think of you and of all it means, it kind of makes me ache in the throat, and I have things in my heart I can't find the words to say, and I have a feeling that I can almost understand Browning and those other high-flying poet-fellows. Look at Hood Mountain there, just where the sun's striking. It was down in that crease that we found the spring."

"And that was the night you didn't milk the cows till ten o'clock," she laughed. "And if you keep me here much longer, supper won't be any earlier than it was that night."

Both rose from the bench, and Daylight caught up the milk-pail from the nail by the door. He paused a moment longer to look out over the valley.

"It's sure grand," he said.

"It's sure grand," she echoed, laughing joyously at him and with him and herself and all the world, as she passed in through the door.

And Daylight, like the old man he once had met, himself went down the hill through the fires of sunset with a milkpail on his arm.

THE END.

Horse-Loving Xenophon.

We may breed different types of horses, and we may harness and use them differently; but the points of excellence that combine to form the most perfect horse are no different in one age than another. Xenophon, it is true, attached some importance to points that we care much less about now—as, for instance, a smooth, round back that is 'easy to sit upon,' which was owing to the fact that the Greeks did not use saddles, but only a cloth, fastened to the horse's body by a surcingle; but these are minor matters. He knew the points of a good horse, and he knew horse nature. And he had, too, that delight in horses that is found only in the true horseman, the man who loves as well as knows them. "It is upon horses," says he, "that gods and heroes are painted riding; and men who are able to manage them skillfully are regarded as deserving of admiration. So extremely beautiful and admirable and noble a sight is a horse that bears himself superbly that he fills the gaze of all who see him, both young and old; no one, indeed, leaves him or is tired of contemplating him as long as he continues to display his magnificent attitudes."—From the Atlantic.

Shipbuilding in China.

According to a Shanghai telegram, the Chinese government accepted the bid of the Kiangnan arsenal for the construction of four warships at about 1,500,000 taels. The arsenal, under control of Liang-Kiang, viceroy, engages principally in the manufacture of arms. Although it has equipment for shipbuilding, it has not turned out any warships in the history of its existence for the last twenty-odd years, its experience so far having only consisted in putting together gunboats that were built in foreign countries.

Again, at the Mamel dockyard at Fukien one gunboat was constructed in 1899 and another in the following year, which were completed in 1902. But they were small ships, each having the displacement of 861 tons. The present order consists of two gunboats with the displacement of 1,000 tons each and two smaller river gun boats. Inasmuch as the Mamei dockyard is under the management of French people, this is the first time that China has ever attempted to build her own warships at her own dockyard.

Philosophy of the Unsuccessful.

We are perhaps too prone to get our ideas and standards of worth from the successful, without reflecting that the interpretations of life which patriotic legend, copy-book philosophy and the sayings of the wealthy give us, are pitifully inadequate for those who fall behind in the race. Surely there are enough people to whom the task of making a decent living and maintaining themselves and their families in their social class, or of winning and keeping the respect of their fellows, is a hard and bitter task, to make a philosophy gained through personal disability and failure as just and true a method of appraising the life around us as the cheap optimism of the ordinary professional man. And certainly a kindlier, for it has no shade of contempt or disparagement about it.—Atlantic.

Differing Terms for Coins.

The language of money differs in different parts of the United States. On the Pacific coast the usual term for a quarter dollar is two bits. In the rural communities of New York and New England the people still talk of shillings, referring to the old colonial coin of twelve and a half cents.

Truly Said.

The desire of appearing to be persons of ability often prevents our being so.

The Formal Opening Of Our Enlarged and Remodeled Store

Will Be Held During the Four Days

Commencing Wednesday, Sept. 18

Preparations for the event have been made on a scale never attempted before and which will make this one of the most notable occasions in the commercial history of New England. The whole store will be at its best, filled with the finest and most comprehensive stocks of correct new Fall merchandise it has ever held. The attractions which have been arranged for the four days will be well worth attending and we cordially invite the entire public of Western New England to be present and to inspect both the building and its contents.

Better Things in Sight

Frances hurried to the telephone.

"Hello!" she said, brightly. But in a minute her voice broke. "No, you have the wrong number."

She put her pretty head on the telephone table and began to cry. "Oh, dear, oh dear! It's always the wrong number. No one ever wants me. Oh, dear, I'm so miserable!"

When she had first looked cheerfully at the new white card by the telephone she did not know that the number would be of no consequence to a solitary soul in Chicago. Occasionally George, her young husband, would call her up from his office, but usually all day long Frances stayed in the apartment with a silent telephone. If it did ring it was somebody who had the wrong number.

So Frances cried. She had cried because she was lonesome, for she knew no one in the big city. She cried because she was tired, homesick and miserable and because her sobs were company for her in a sad sort of way, a bit consoling.

The first few weeks she had not cried. "Be busy and you will be happy," she would say. The tiny flat glistened with cleanliness.

After a while this did not satisfy her. She had reduced her housework and marketing to a system and it took very little time to keep the flat in order. George had seen her dresses again and again and good dinners were a matter of course. At first Frances tried extra housework as an antidote for loneliness, but after her violent scrubbing had taken the shine off the kitchen ware, after she had broken some vases by needless dusting and spilled furniture polish on the rug she stopped. Her trousseau was still new and did not require the attention of sewing or shopping. On the few occasions she had left her neighborhood she had become lost. She had always lived in a small town and the noise of the city streets and the crowds in the stores confused her.

All her experiments had failed. So Frances cried. In the midst of her grief the door bell rang.

"A peddler," Frances said, dolefully. She wiped her eyes and opened the door. It was not a peddler, but a sweet young woman. She carried some letters.

"I am Mrs. Allen from across the hall," she said, timidly. "I brought up your mail."

Frances took the letters mechanically. Then she noticed that the powder was suspiciously thick around the eyes and nose of her visitor. Clearly Mrs. Allen had been crying, too. Impulsively Frances put out her hand.

"I wish you would come in," she said.

The two tear-stained young women sat down in the living room. "It was kind of you to bring the letters," Frances began.

"Oh, it's nothing," said Mrs. Allen. A pause. "I couldn't help seeing that one letter was addressed to Mrs. Frances Stevens West. I used to hear my cousin Eula Thomas talk of a Frances Stevens, of Plainfield."

"Oh " cried Frances. "That's I. Is Eula your cousin? She is my best friend."

"I heard so much about you," declared Mrs. Allen, "I didn't know you lived in Chicago."

"I haven't very long," said Frances.

"Neither have I," said Mrs. Allen. "I don't know many people here."

"I don't know any," Frances replied.

"Neither do I," said Mrs. Allen.

"Do you enjoy the city?" Frances asked.

"Well," replied Mrs. Allen, "it has so many advantages. There are so many things to do and see. The theaters and concerts are fine. One does not waste time over social trivialities."

"Yes," said Frances. "And the modern conveniences simplify housekeeping so that there is time for the advantages. I—I like it."

"I don't," declared Mrs. Allen with decision.

"Neither do I," said Frances, with sudden decision.

"You see," said Mrs. Allen, growing confidential, "I came from a small town where I knew everybody. I'm not used to the city and I don't know my way about There is so little to do when my husband is away. Why, sometimes I have asked Central to ring my telephone to know if it's in order."

"That's how it is with me," said Frances. "Don't you want to see my apartment?"

After the tour of inspection, in which Mrs. Allen had been properly enthusiastic, Frances said timidly: "I would be so glad if you would stay to tea."

"I'd love to," she answered, "if you will let me bring over my fresh cake."

The tea party progressed famously. The brides forgot their tears and laid plans for shopping and matinees and promised to introduce their husbands. Mrs. Allen gave Frances the cake that was left and was presented in turn with a panful of new rolls. The two parted affectionately.

"I am so glad you came over," said Frances. "This is the first time I have had company."

"It is the first time I have been to a party," said Mrs. Allen.

"Neither have we," said the brides. And from that time on life in the great city grew pleasant. The loneliness had been dispelled.

PALMER NEWS.

Want Sidewalk Kept Clear.

Complaint of Teams Blocking South Side of Main Street.

The selectmen received, at their meeting last evening, a protest against the blocking of the sidewalk in front of the Palmer Coal and Grain company's block on Main street by teams which back up there to load and unload. The protest was made by men engaged in business on that side of the street, and they cited numerous instances to make good there contention that the practice should be discontinued. The matter was left in the hands of Selectmen Brainerd and McDonald, who are to confer with the company regarding the obstruction.

Years ago, when the business was established by the original owners, there was little or no use of that side of Main street by pedestrians, and no objection to the use of the space now occupied by sidewalk, by teams. Little by little business was added to that side of the street; concrete walks were put in; the Bridge street passageway to the railroad station was constructed; the post office was moved to that side of the street a short distance west of the point under criticism; finally, the street was covered with brick paving, making crossing at any point convenient at all times. In addition to these, recent new places of business have called pedestrians more to that side, and patrons of the post office who live east of Central street prefer the south side of Main street on sunny afternoons. This with the increase in business done by the grain company, has caused numerous complaints of sidewalk blocking of late, though none have been made officially until now. The complainants have records of blockades lasting over a half hour at a time, and also of narrow escapes from persons being pinched where teams were moved out to let them pass and horses have backed suddenly. There is a feeling that the sidewalk, which is for convenience of pedestrians, should not be given up to commercial uses.

Precinct Officers Appointed.

The selectmen appointed the following precinct officers at their meeting last evening: Precinct A—Warden, Edward Brown; deputy warden, D. O'Connor; clerk, C. C. Leonard; deputy clerk, M. E. Monahan; inspectors, F. E. Merrick, J. P. O'Connor, John Manning, C. E. Shumway; deputy inspectors, C. W. Hastings, B. Woodhead, E. J. Duncan, J. S. Knox. Precinct B—Warden, T. J. Sullivan; deputy warden, Frank Longtine; clerk, Stephen Clark; deputy clerk, Frank McIntire; inspectors, James Clark, Patrick Ford; deputy inspectors, James Hutchinson, H. T. Bishop. Precinct C—Warden, C. S. Ruggles; deputy warden, C. P. Haynes; clerk, P. C. Daley; deputy clerk, P. Belanger; inspectors, A. Henrichon, J. J. Manning; deputy inspectors, H. A. Shaw, George Camerlin. Precinct D—Warden, William Morse; deputy warden, Charles Collis; clerk, Andrew Fenton; deputy clerk, Arthur Laccas; inspectors, John Costello, E. C. Hayes; deputy inspectors, M. Moriarty, W. S. Taylor.

Truck Breaks Fire Hydrant.

The big motor truck of the Palmer Trucking Company was backed against a fire hydrant on the old road from Tenneyville to Blanchardville, near the plant of the New England Metal Culvert company Wednesday morning, and proved too great a strain for the hydrant to withstand, so it snapped off. The break was above the valve, so the full force of the main was not let loose, though as it was somewhat damaged there was a miniature flood until the water could be shut off. A force of men from the E. Brown company was put at work at once and had the damage repaired in a few hours.

Wednesday would be counted as an unusually hot day even in the middle of the hot season. The mercury climbed up into the 90's and a generous amount of humidity added to the discomfort. Yesterday was in marked contrast; the morning was decidedly cold, and although the sun came out later in the day the temperature at no time reached a point where one was inclined to seek the shade for comfort.

Caught Peeping in Window.

William Hogan Looking For Place to Sleep — He's Found It.

Several residents of South Main street were annoyed and frightened Sunday evening by the actions of a man who was a stranger. At the home of M. J. Farrelly he was seen peeping in the window as Mr. Farrelly's little girl was getting ready for bed. She screamed and the man disappeared, but later he returned and strolled into the house. An officer was called and he was arrested. In court Monday morning he claimed to be looking for a place to sleep. He was found guilty of vagrancy and a fine of $6 imposed, which he could not pay, so the county is providing him with a sleeping place for a time.

Electric Cars Bump.

Trolly Express and Work Car Collide Wednesday Morning.

A trolley express car from Brimfield to Springfield, and a work car from Palmer to the car barn, collided head on on South Main street near the residence of C. E. Fuller early Wednesday morning. The front of the express car, a new one in service only a few days, was badly damaged, and the work car also suffered somewhat. One man, M. Harrington, an employe at the car barn, was somewhat hurt about the forehead, but not seriously. He was sitting on the floor of the work car in the side door when the crash came. The door, which was one of the sliding kind, slid to shut and the iron fastener caught him before he could escape.

Plans of Men's League.

At a meeting of the executive committee of the Men's League of the Congregational church, the following standing committees were appointed; Committee on speakers, Ernest E. Hobson, Dr. H. C. Cheney and Rev. F. S. Brewer; membership, Alfred Swann, C. W. Bennett, Arthur Roper, George Ezekiel and Rufus Flynt. A committee of three, consisting of Clifton H. Hobson, David L. Bodfish and Rufus Flynt, was appointed a committee of conference with similar bodies of the Baptist and Universalist churches to plan for co-operation in civic and social work. The first meeting of the League will be held Wednesday, October 2, and will be a men's rally and social. A supper will be served, the committee in charge being Theodore Norman and Clifton H. Hobson. It is planned to have a boys' meeting on Wednesday, November 20th. Other features of the League will be announced later.

Form Athletic Association.

An athletic association was formed yesterday by the boys of Palmer high school and the following officers were elected: President, C. W. Lombard; vice president, G. Summers; secretary, P. Ezekiel. L. Bannister and W. McKenzie were elected a committee to draft anew the old constitution. About 20 boys reported for the first practice of the football team yesterday. The ends are McMahon, McKenzie, Lyon, Cameron, Brosnan; the line, Davis, Hamilton, D. Hartnett, F. J. Hartnett, McDonald, Moriarty, Doyle, Albro, Bodfish; backs, Summers, Ezekiel, Bannister, Horgan, R. McDonald, Quirk. A number were out for track work. For the relay team there were Ezekiel, Summers, Bannister, Frappier, French; for middle distance running there were Bannister, Wilder, Bodfish, Johnson, Horgan, J. Hartnett: jumping, Geer, McDonald.

District Nurse Association Meeting.

A meeting of the Palmer Society for District Nursing was held Monday afternoon in the reference room of the public library. The printed report of the society for the past year was at hand, and copies have since been distributed to members of the association. It developed at the meeting that there is some misunderstanding as to the privileges of membership in the society, some supposing that membership entitled them to the services of the nurse free of charge. This is not so, as all who can pay are expected to do so. Miss Gorman, the nurse, has tendered her resignation, to take effect Oct. 1 or soon thereafter as her successor is selected.

Mrs. J. J. Rafter of Newark, N. J., is visiting her sister, Mrs. Lucy Flynt of Central street.

Work on the foundatiun of A. W. Holbrook's new block on Main street was begun yesterday.

The Eastern Hampden district court had no cases to send to the superior court which opened in Springfield Monday.

J. T. Maloney, who has been confined to his home on East Park street for two weeks with stomach trouble, has recovered.

The Palmer Trucking company has added a fine pair of heavy team horses to its equipment, the animals arriving last evening.

Marcella, the 17-years-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Healey, formerly of Palmer, died in Billerica last week. Mr. and Mrs. Healey are well known here, having resided here for some time and Mr. Healey conducted a blacksmith shop on Thorndike street.

The street railway company ran half-hour cars all day yesterday and to-day, and will do so to-morrow, to the Sturbridge fair.

Mrs. R. S. Carsley presided at the organ in the Congregational church Sunday in the absence of the regular organist, Miss LeGro.

Walter Barrus, on a charge of assault committed July 3, had his case continued in the district court Monday morning until to-morrow.

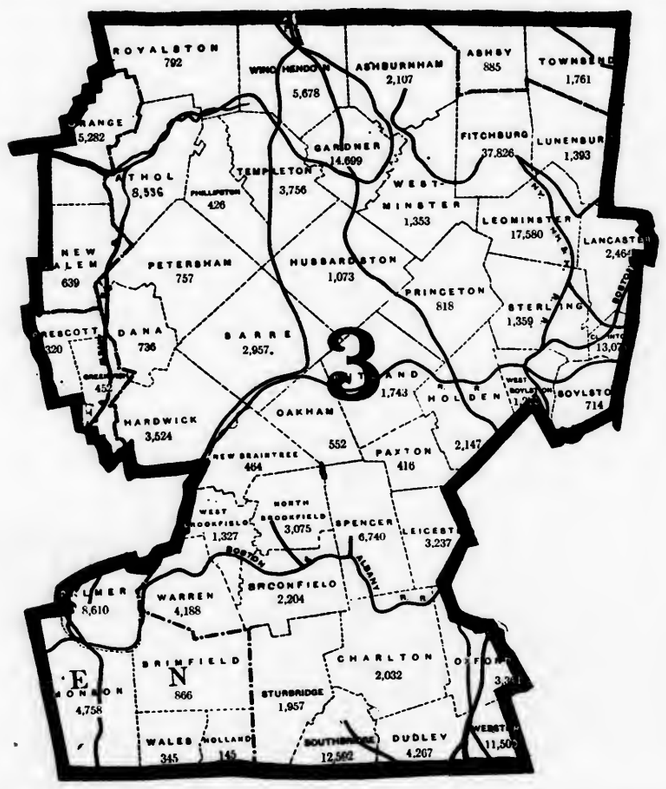
Mrs. H. G. Loomis of Pleasant street and Mrs. H. C. Mansir of Pleasant street are spending a vacation in Burlington and St. Albans, Vt.

Contractor Rochford has been in this village the past week, making repairs to the concrete walks under direction of Highway Surveyor McKelligott.

The prayer meeting at Palmer Center Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock will be held at the home of George Lamb; Rev. F. S. Brewer of Palmer will be the leader.

Arrangements are being made for the annual ball of Court Palmer, Foresters of America, which will be held in the opera house October 25, with music by Flanagan's singing orchestra.

An error was made last week in printing the dates of the open season on partridge. They are from October 12 to November 12, inclusive. The number of birds in the covers is said to be reasonably large.



There was a break in the main of the Palmer Water company at Blanchardville, near the residence of J. M. Allen, yesterday.

The Ivy whist club of Springfield had an outing in Palmer yesterday. Twenty members assembled at the Burns Hotel, where they were served with a special dinner. In the afternoon whist and music were in order until the return to the city on a late afternoon car.

Quaboag council, Royal Arcanum, is planning for a social dance, to be held in Memorial Hall on the evening of October 17. The proceeds will be devoted to the hospital fund of the order. The program will be arranged to suit all tastes, with a generous sprinkling of the old-fashioned dances.

Palmer Grange will hold a regular meeting in Masonic Hall this evening. It was originally planned to hold a "Neighbor's night," but this has been changed to a discussion of the present method of inspecting milk. It is expected that the subject will be discussed by C. H. Filer, William Kerigan and O. M. Walker.

New Third Congressional District.

It may be of interest to the voters in this section to know that, when they go to the polls in the primaries on the evening of the 24th, they will vote in the new Congressional district formed by the Legislature during its last session, in its redistricting of the state. A map of the new district is shown above, with the population of each town. It will be seen that Eastern Hampden is in strange company, being allied to numerous towns in Worcester county formerly in another district. Republicans in this section will no longer have the privilege of supporting Frederick H. Gillett of Springfield, as that city is separated from its former neighbors politically and placed in the second district. The new third district shows a normal Republican plurality of 1470, according to the vote of 1910.

PALMER NEWS.

Branch of New Order to be Formed.

Efforts are being made to form a lodge of the Sons of St. George, an organization in which Englishmen particularly are interested, in Palmer. The order pays a death benefit, also a weekly sick benefit, and has about 4000 membets in Massachusetts. It admits Englishmen to the third generation, and all who are interested in the formation of a lodge in Palmer are asked to meet at the store of Samuel Brooks on Main street next Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock, to make up a charter list.

Funeral of Mrs. Wilbur.

The funeral of Mrs. Emily J. Wilbur, who died last Friday morning, was held Sunday afternoon in St. Paul's church, the pastor, Rev. Otto S. Rape, officiating. Miss Carrie J. Fish sang "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere," and there was a duet by Miss Fish and E. E. Brooks. The bearers were F. N. Carpenter, C. E. Fish, W. L. Shaw and C. H. Keith. The members of the Eastern Star, of which Mrs. Wilbur had been chaplain for a long time, attended in a body. The body was taken Monday to Brockton for burial.

Twenty-fifth Wedding Anniversary.

Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Ramsdell, who live above the hospital on the quarry road to Monson, observed the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marriage Sunday. Saturday was the anniversary of the date, but as their children could not be at home that day they celebrated on Sunday. All of their five children were at home for the day, a bountiful spread was served and twenty-five silver dollars were presented the couple who a quarter of a century ago started life together.

E. L. Thompson, clerk in the store of E. B. Taylor, sprained his ankle in alighting from a delivery wagon Wednesday.

Volcanic Ash for Cement.

For some time a Portland company has been engaged in the exploitation of the use of volcanic ash in connection with Portland cement and it is claimed that this combination is particularly valuable in the construction of works which are submerged in salt water. It is claimed that the cement thus formed possesses greater tensile strength, and is denser than ordinary Portland cement. It is thought that should this industry prosper it might well be extended to the Philippines, where a great deal of volcanic ash is available.

He Is Mr. Alphabet Still.

The petition of a Stamford, Conn., jeweler to have his name changed from Sigismonakronholtz to Kronn was denied by Judge Curtis of the superior court at Bridgeport. The plaintiff said every one called him Kronn and that his own name was too long for a display sign over his store.

From Lucile's Diary

"Oh for a breath of country air!" I sighed one evening during the dreadful hot weather we had a little while ago.

"You love the country, don't you, Lucile?" asked Arthur Knight, who happened to be sitting on our porch.

"Yes, I'm afraid I envy people who have summer homes," I replied.

"That reminds me that Uncle Ben gave me the key to Red Roof before he started to Europe last week. It's a lovely little place.

"Do tell me about Red Roof," I begged. "The name is perfectly fascinating."

"Instead of my describing it, suppose I show it to you," he suggested. "We can make the run out there in three hours in my car. Wouldn't you like to go?"

"Of course I would," I answered.

Inside of ten minutes we had a little outing trip planned and Uncle Bob and Betty had been invited over the telephone.

When Arthur came for me the morning we were to go he looked disturbed. "Lucile," he said, "I'm awfully sorry, but my cook has disappointed us."

"Oh, Betty and I will enjoy cooking, I replied. "You and Uncle Bob can help us and it will be a regular camping frolic."

"What a trump you are!" exclaimed Arthur in a tone that quite repaid me.

It was great fun getting the house opened and straightened things around and when we got a bit settled within doors Arthur said that he and Uncle Bob would mow a path to the water and launch the boat. Betty and I went into the kitchen and began to prepare the noon dinner.

"I'll make stuffed baked potatoes," I said. "They're my specialty. I picked out nice ones and took them down to the river for Uncle Bob to wash, for potatoes are very rough for delicate hands.

"Well, this is a joke," laughed Uncle Bob.

"You know the bargain was for you boys to help," I returned merrily. So in a very few minutes the potatoes were scrubbed clean.

"If there's nothing else for me to do just now," I said to Betty after I had put them into the oven. "I'll see about the bedrooms."

I went upstairs. Going into the room Betty was to have I saw her bathing dress lying in her open suitcase. Suddenly I remembered that I had forgotten to bring my bathing suit. I think Betty ought to have reminded me, of it, but some people never think of any one except themselves. I thought how refreshing a little dip would be before dinner, so I hastily donned Betty's suit.

"That looks good to me," said Uncle Bob when I appeared on the shore. "Let us take a swim, too, Knight."

In a short time we were all three splashing in the water together. We made such a noise that Betty came around to the front porch to see what was going on.

"Come on in, Betty," called Uncle Bob.

She hesitated an instant and then went into the house only to reappear looking vexed.

"I can't find my bathing suit," she said crossly. "Lucile, you have it on!"

Uncle Bob looked at me and then got out of the water and followed Betty into the house.

"I never thought that Betty would want her bathing suit just now," I said to Arthur. "She is usually so generous and sisterly about borrowing back and forth that I didn't think to ask her for the suit."

I sighed and Arthur looked at me sympathetically, but before he could say a word Betty came to the door and called that we should be late to dinner if we didn't hurry. I got dressed in time to help put dinner on the table.

"Oh, never mind assisting me now," said Betty, with an acid little smile. "I'm sure you'll be relieved to know that I have already stuffed the potatoes."

I often wish that Uncle Bob had married a less difficult person than Betty. She made it very unpleasant for me by her grumpiness at dinner, and I think it was extremely selfish of her to insist on going home the very next morning, saying that she was not feeling quite well.

Sometimes I am forced to be a trifle skeptical about Betty's convenient attacks of illness.

Power of Gold.

Those who worship gold in a world so corrupt as this we live in have at least one thing to plead in defense of their idolatry—the power of their idol. It is true that, like other idols, it can neither move, see, hear, feel nor understand; but, unlike other idols, it has often communicated all these powers to those who had them not, and annihilated them in those who had. This idol can boast two peculiarities; it is worshipped in all climates, without a single temple, and by all classes, without a single hypocrite.—Colton.

Her Mind Relieved.

"Charley, dear," said young Mrs. Torkins, "what is a jackpot?"

"Why—er—a jackpot is a general contribution for purposes of charitable donation."

"Oh! Do you know I was afraid it had something to do with the wickedness of politics!"

Changes in Egyptian Life.

Egyptians who have been educated in this country or who have been here on business trips or simply as a part of their education, are working zealously in their native land to have their wives adopt many American ideas and customs. In the last twenty-five years American influence has been felt greatly in Egypt. Many fathers in Egypt are educating their daughters to read and write English, and have encouraged them to play in many games just as English and American girls do. Through that education the social life of Egypt is going through a transition.

Resolutions on the Death of Brother George Allen Rice.

Whereas, by the death of George Allen Rice, which occurred on July 19, 1912, Quaboag Council No. 876, Royal Arcanum, lost a faithful, loyal and devoted member, and one who was ever mindful of the importance of the cause and the opportunity it presented for unselfish service to mankind, and

Whereas, as one of the charter members of Quaboag Council, he was an earnest supporter of the Royal Arcanum in the Town of Palmer, and instrumental in promoting the beneficent work of the Order in our midst, so that kindly aid in time of greatest need might find its way to the grief-stricken homes of our brothers,

Be it resolved therefore that by the death of Brother Rice, Quaboag Council has sustained the loss of one of its truest and most active members, whose place in the ranks will be hard to fill, whose devotion to the cause was enthusiastic and constant and whose activity was inspired and controlled by a desire to inculcate the broad principles of our Fraternity.

Be it further resolved that these resolutions be spread upon the records of the Council, published in the Palmer Journal, and a copy thereof presented to the family of our deceased brother. 24-1

THREE RIVERS.

For Sale—Nearly new furniture at a reduction. Must sell out by September 25th. Rev. Charles C. Gorst, Thorndike.

WATER MAIN CONTRACT AWARDED.

Fire Alarm Signal Installed. New Building For Apparatus.

The contract for laying the water mains and hydrants in the Three Rivers fire district has been awarded to John Bowes & Co. of Cohoes, N. Y. The work was started Tuesday morning and will be pushed until completed. The alarm signal system will have seven boxes and they are to be connected with the system in the Palmer fire district. There will be an alarm whistle in Three Rivers, on the Palmer Mill. All alarms sent in from either district will be sounded in both. The first alarm will be responded to by the company in the district in which the fire is. The second alarm will be answered by both companies. The apparatus is to be kept in a building which is being erected for the purpose near Ruggles Hall. The new district has 1500 feet of hose, with nozzles, connections and appliances of various kinds to use with it. Its water mains are expected to furnish all the water needed without the use of a steamer. An auto truck would be useful, but there is no thought of buying one at present.

THORNDIKE.

TREED BY BIG BULL.

Two Thorndike Men Have Exciting Time With Ugly Bull.

Matthew Casey and Frank Longtine had an unusual and exciting experience with a bull one day this week in a pasture on the "Sikes" farm near the Four Corners, now owned by William Roman. The men were taking a quiet lounge beneath a tree when Longtine saw the animal approaching in a belligerent manner. He called to his companion to run, while he beat it in home-run style for the nearest fence. Casey saw that he would have to decide quickly what to do to save his skin, and seeing a small tree near at hand managed to climb into it, although he is a person of good weight. Fortunately he was able to climb high enough to prevent the bull from reaching him. For some time the animal made a demonstration beneath the tree, running about and bellowing, but finally left. Casey then made rapid tracks for the village. After he had gone Longtine returned and, finding no trace of his friend and supposing he had been hurt, organized a searching party which investigated the pasture and brush near by, but without finding any trace of the missing man, whom they found smilingly awaiting them on their return to the village.

Death of a Former Resident.

The many friends of Ben Murphy, who only this spring left here for a visit to the old country, will be surprised to learn of his death at the latter place in August. The deceased was in ill health when he sailed for Ireland, but it was thought that a change of climate would perhaps help him. The news of his death was received here the past week and was a great shock to his friends. He is survived by a mother, widow, one son, Thomas of Springfield, and three brothers, John, Michael and George. Mr. Murphy resided for years on the Olney farm near Forest Lake, and was widely and favorably known.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Sheehan will leave to-morrow for Panama.

Miss Alice Bengle visited friends in Holyoke this week for a few days.

"On the Bridge at Three Rivers."

I stood on the bridge at Three Rivers.
When the sun was sinking low;
And gazed on the crowds that went thither,
Soon after the whistle blew.

In the faces of some I could see their care,
As bent 'neath the burdens of years:
While others more youthful said life was fair,
And their faces were lightened with cheers.

Onward they marched as in battle array.
To their homes and their loved ones awaiting:
Their work seemed but play at the end of the day.
And their hearts were filled with rejoicing.

But the stream murmured on with its pitiful song.
Soothing hearts o'er its bosom reclining:
From its joys that have gone which it thought to be wrong
And the sorrows that are quickly passing.

How our lives like the river beneath us,
With its winding course to the sea:
Passes on and on with never a hush,
Till it rests in eternity.

By the banks of many an "Afton,"
Buried deeper than words can express,
Is many a treasure forgotten,
For the love that "disturbs not her rest."

With the balms that comes by forgetting,
And the sorrow that time can erase:
Near the stream of our lives that are ebbing,
Marks the scene of its own sacred place.

So we join with the songs of the river,
And onward through life may we go,
With hearts full of praise to the giver,
For these blessings He still doth bestow.

—M. G. Tupper.

Heimann & Lichten Factory Nearing Completion.

The work on the additions to the new Heimann & Lichten hat factory on Cushman street is rapidly progressing. The brick work on the addition to the main building is completed and the work on the new gas house and moulding and whittling department is progressing. The contractors expect to have all the work completed and all the machinery installed so that all the help can be called in by October 15th if necessary.

Condition of Road Criticized.

There is much comment by citizens of the town because of the condition of the macadam road on Main street. In many places the macadam has washed away from the car tracks and should be attended to at once or the damage will continue into the driveway. The road between and on each side of the track, in accordance with the terms of the franchise, should be kept in good condition by the street railway company.

Quaboag Country Club Wins.

The Quaboag Country club badly defeated the Stafford Springs Country club on the links at North Monson Saturday, the score being 17 to 1. Value of Manual Training.

It is nothing but the delicacy of his sense of touch that gives to man his marvelous skill with his fingers, so that he can make all manner of tools and instruments, nothing being too fine for him to handle. This is one argument in favor of manual training, which teaches children how to use their hands and enables them to acquire so much useful knowledge through their fingers.—New York Sun.

Mrs. Smart—Well, I see that Mrs Swift has got a divorce.
Mr Smart—That means another wedding present.

Hard to Corner Sheridan.

Richard Brinsley Sheridan was visiting at a country house, where a venerable spinster bored him with her attentions. She wanted to be his companion on a walk through the park, but he excused himself, saying the weather was too bad. Later she intercepted him as he was about to leave the house alone. "Well," she said, "it has cleared up, I see." "Why, yes," replied Sheridan, "it has cleared up enough for one, but not enough for two."

Ancient Game of Tennis.

Tennis is the game of kings. The oldest of existing ball games—it is mentioned in the Arthurian romances—tennis was originally the pastime of the kings and nobles and it was long before its descendant—lawn tennis—became popular with all classes. The game reached England from France and Italy, and by the time of Henry VII we find a royal tennis court at Windsor. Henry VIII was an expert at the game.

Remembrances of the Pigtail.

Waist long pigtails were the fashionable wear in England about 1740, and before that the bag wig had been adorned with a pigtail looped up in a black silk bag. As late as 1858 an old gentleman was seen in London with his gray hair tied behind in a short cue, and even today one can find a relic of the pigtail, for the three pieces of black velvet on the dress tunics of officers in the Royal Welsh Fusileers are the remains of the ribbon with which the cue was tied.

TO SAVE HIM

The Stout Woman—I'm not going to let my son run the elevator any more.
Custodian of Building—Why not?
The Stout Woman—I heard a man say yesterday that that elevator weighed twenty-five hundred pounds and he's too young a boy to be lifting that all day.

Judge Leaves Faulty Will.

It is strange how many talented judges and lawyers have failed to draw up their own wills correctly. The English Judge Lushington, who died recently, leaving an estate of nearly $100,000, overlooked the important necessity of having his will and a codicil to it properly attested. Perhaps he intended that his professional colleagues should benefit indirectly by the consequent litigation.

Icy.

"Yes," said Miss Backbay, "Emerson appeals to us women of Boston; although he has passed beyond, we always keep him in our hearts, you know." "You don't say?" replied Miss Knox of Chicago. "I wonder how it feels to be kept in cold storage like that?"

HAPPY WOMEN

Plenty of Them in Palmer, and Good Reason for It.

Wouldn't any woman be happy,
After years of backache suffering,
Days of misery, nights of unrest.
The distress of urinary troubles.
When she finds freedom.

Many readers will profit by the following.

Mrs. D. H. Barnes, Main St., Monson, Mass., says: "I gladly verify my former endorsement of Doan's Kidney Pills given in 1906. I had considerable trouble from backache, especially when I went up or down stairs. I was very restless and in the morning felt tired and unrefreshed. Reading about Doan's Kidney Pills I decided to give them a trial and the first few doses convinced me that they were a remedy of merit. The contents of two or three boxes removed the pain and lameness and restored me to good health. This remedy has been used by another member of my family and in that case the results were satisfactory."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

The Antalgica

Or Vegetable Pain Reliever

was introduced to the public in 1848, since which time thousands of bottles have been sold each year to an appreciative public, which is a good evidence of its merits. It is adapted to so many ailments it should be in every household, for it cures all kinds of pains both internal and external. For Bronchial affections it is unrivaled by any article in the market. It is a sure cure for Cholera Morbus and Dysentery, if taken in season, also for Coughs. It is an effective remedy for rheumatic affections, stiff joints, swelled limbs, sprains, cramps, toothache and many other ills to which the flesh is heir. Try it and it will do you good. It is sold at 25c, 50c and $1.00 per bottle by the Bay State Drug Co., Lynde & Gould, The Kinsley Pharmacy and the proprietor.

Thanks to Little Brother

By Mary Gilbert

(Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.)

Dick Ralston was thoroughly out of humor, both with himself and his surroundings. He had expected so much from his vacation this year! How carefully he had planned his outing to be at Spring Lake at the same time as Margaret!

He had pictured the bright hours he would spend with her, steadily gaining her favor, until there dawned that perfect day when he dared ask the important question. Instead of this alluring prospect, he found that insufferable Walter Chase paying Margaret open court.

Dick gritted his teeth at the thought of the times that she had refused his invitations because she had already accepted Walter's. The thought that he himself was to blame for not inviting her sooner never seemed to enter his head.

Tomorrow was his last holiday. Then he must leave Margaret and go back to work. To leave her was bad enough, but to leave her to Walter Chase—the thought was maddening.

"You look as I feel," said a crisp, young voice at his elbow.

Dick turned quickly, a frown on his handsome face. He was in no mood to talk to any one just them, especially to Margaret's young brother.

"What's the matter?" he demanded irritably.

"I've broken my last fishing rod," Maurice answered gloomily, "and an empty pocket won't pay for a new one."

"That's hard luck," Dick admitted, "but not enough to make you look like me. You need only a little money to make you happy."

"And what do you need?" asked Maurice pointedly.

Dick flushed at the blunt question, and the boy smiled at his embarrassment.

"Needn't think I don't know," he said deliberately. "You're afraid that you stand no show with Margaret."

The frank friendliness of the boy's manner quite disarmed resentment.

"Do you know," he continued, confidentially, "I'd bet most anything on you?"

"Needn't Think I Don't Know."

"You really would?" Dick responded quickly. "What makes you feel that way?"

"Well," Maurice answered slowly. "She acts sort o' mad at herself lately. Besides, I heard her tell father once that there was nothing in it at all."

"Nothing in what?"

"Why, in her going with Chase, of course."

"That's the best news I've heard this summer!" Dick exclaimed, grasping the boy's hand warmly. "I only wish you'd told me sooner!"

"Might have if you'd given me a chance!" laughed the lad, withdrawing his fingers from the too friendly pressure.

After a moment's reflection, Maurice began tentatively: "I s'pose you'd like to win out with Margaret pretty well?"

"Well, rather!" Dick exclaimed, his eyes glowing at the thought.

"You've always treated me white," Maurice continued, "and now I'm going to pay up. Besides, it will be great fun to fool Chase. He certainly is the limit."

"What do you propose to do?" asked Dick with dawning interest.

Maurice eyed him sharply.

"Do you promise, word of honor, to do just exactly as I tell you? If you don't I'll get myself into a scrape. Maybe I shall, anyway."

Gazing into the lad's earnest face, Dick promised to follow instructions. He could surely make matters no worse than they were. Perhaps—"

The boy's eager voice interrupted his thoughts. "Tomorrow morning, at six o'clock—mind you, not a bit later, or there'll be other folks there—you be on the lake shore, behind that thicket near the bathhouse. Keep yourself hidden till you hear from me. You'll know what to do then without being told."

"Six o'clock!" echoed Dick. "What's your game?"

"That's my affair—until to-morrow morning. Will you come?"

"I guess so."

"Sure?" The boy's tone was very earnest.

"Sure," the man agreed, wondering what would come of the promise.

"Goodby till then!" exclaimed Maurice, springing to his feet, "but you'll hear from me when the time comes, and don't you forget it!"

"By the way, Dick," responded cordially. "Can you get good fishing tackle at any store here?"

"Sure—if you've got the price."

"If—if you see that matters are coming my way in the morning, just pick out the best fishing outfit you can find and let me foot the bill."

"Gee!" exclaimed Maurice. "Ain't I glad I came! I'll tell the cook to count on fish, beginning tomorrow."

But for his talk with Maurice, Dick thought that he could never have borne the miserable evening that followed. Margaret seemed unconscious of his presence. Chase, looking handsomer and better groomed than ever, exulted in his rival's discomfiture.

Dressing next morning to meet his early appointment, Dick cursed himself for his folly.

"That rascal Maurice is playing some trick on me!" he thought wrathfully. "What would the fellows say if they knew I'd do a fool thing like this just to humor a boy in his whim?"

He dropped his collar button, and that gave him a fresh outlet for his ill humor. Then he laughed at the whole affair and felt more at peace with himself and the world.

As he left the house his watch told him that he would reach the rendezvous almost on the stroke of six. He concealed himself behind the thicket and awaited developments.

Suddenly a boy's cry of terror sounded on the air, followed by a woman's wild shriek. Instinctively Dick sprang to aid them.

Maurice was far out on the lake, apparently seized with cramps. Margaret, wringing her hands helplessly, stood on the shore calling for help.

Off went Dick's coat and shoes. A few vigorous strokes took him to the side of the sinking boy. There was a thrilling scene in the water, then both were safe on shore, with Margaret hovering over her brother.

Maurice's fluttering eyelids opened at last, and he whispered that he'd soon be all right. Reassured as to the boy's condition, Margaret turned her grateful eyes to his rescurer.

"How can I ever thank you?" she exclaimed.

"I don't want your thanks," Dick answered boldly. "I—I want—you!" The rosy flush of dawn seemed reflected in the girl's cheeks as she stood for a moment with downcast eyes.

"This is no sudden desire," Dick continued earnestly. "It has been the greatest thing in my world since the first time I saw you. You remember that glorious evening?"

He was standing close beside her now, his dark eyes seeking hers. As she slowly raised her drooping lashes, Maurice, whom they had both quite forgotten, sprang up with a whoop of delight.

"Congratulations!" he exclaimed. "I'm off for that fishing tackle!"

The color deepened in Margaret's cheeks as she drew from Dick, exclaiming: "Whatever does the boy mean?"

"Never mind him!!" responded Dick, regaining his former position. "Let's talk about something more interesting. Let us talk about—us!"

Modern Method of Business.

His name was Augustus Athrobald Robinson, but in the business house where he had lately secured a position as office boy, everybody called him Jim.

He was very keen on retaining his position, so when a caller came in one day and made a violent complaint about a letter that had not been posted to him Jim listened in terror.

"Where's that boy?" cried his employer in a fury. "Here, you imp, take your coat and hat and get out! I'm ashamed of you! Go to the cashier and get your salary, and don't let me see you here again, you wretched little bungler!"

Jim, terrified and almost crying, left the office and hurried away.

The next morning his employer called at his home and the youth came to the door.

"You young donkey," exclaimed the visitor, "do you suppose I really sacked you yesterday? Of course not! Come on back to the office and every time a caller makes a complaint and I sack you, go around the corner till the customer's gone and then come back."

And that's how Jim started in business, grew up to be the manager of the concern and now has an office boy of his own, whom he sacks regularly with every complaint that is made.—Tit-Bits.

Misjudged.

Fragments of conversation drifted in from the billiard room, where the husband and his friends were enjoying their cigars. "I called," said the husband happily, "and when it came to a showdown as to who was the winner why the other fellow simply didn't have a chance! And so I stretched out my hands and gathered in that which really gave me my start. I think that I did better that night than any man in our crowd has ever done. Ah, what a hand I held! I always recall that night with thrills of pleasure."

The young wife slipped away, her face dyed with a deep pink. "The old dear is telling Mr. Blinker how he cut out Freddy Banker and made me say 'Yes,'" she whispered to herself. "Isn't he just perfect!"—Puck.

FAIR PREPARATIONS.

Prospects Bright For Biggest And Best in Years.

ENTRIES ARE ALREADY COMING IN.

Numerous Fine Attractions Engaged. Midway Will be Attractive As Usual.

Preparations are going actively forward for the Palmer Fair October 4 and 5, and the officers are hoping for good weather. The fair will be along the same general lines as last year, but with every prospect of a larger showing in many of the departments than ever before.

Particularly is this true of the exhibits in the hall, especially in the fruit and vegetable lines; present indications are that there will be a big showing in both of these departments. The special premiums which have been offered in the children's departments—$200—will doubtless stimulate many a youngster to show something of his making or growing, and there will be a large interest in what they have to offer. To accommodate the entries which are practically sure in these classes a large tent has been secured and will be devoted in part to these exhibits. It is also expected that the tent will house other features not usually in evidence.

The showing of sheep the past two years has compelled the society to erect a large number of pens expressly for these animals. Thoroughbred stock is expected in the usual quantities and qualities, and in the poultry department entries have already begun to come in.

The entertainment program is sure to be a good one, for among the attractions already booked are the famous Five Gilmores in an aerial casting act which is one of the finest in this country; in addition, the company does an unusual trapeze act and another thriller: Doblado's performing sheep and goats still provide a lot of amusement for young and old, and Rollins, a juggler, has some feats which are apparently impossible until he proves that they can be done. The three Ernesto sisters do some wonderful feats on tight wires; this performance has been seen by the entertainment committee, and its quality is assured. Whittemore's performing pintos, which were seen last year, will be here again with new tricks; they go from Palmer to a winter's engagement on the Keith circuit. Other features will be in evidence.

Applications for space on the midway have been coming in rapidly of late, and this part of the fair will afford numerous entertainment for all classes. Among other things there will be a big merry-go-round, one of the largest Ferris wheels in the country, and an ocean wave.

Tickets for the free admission of school children below the high school grade on Friday will be distributed as has been customary for some years. A program of free sports for the boys and girls has been arranged for Friday morning, and the usual high school relay race and athletic meet will be held. An invitation has been extended to the ninth grades of the Springfield schools to visit the fair on Friday free of charge.

As usual, all the railroads centering in Palmer will offer reduced fares, and a special train will run from Springfield Saturday afternoon. Saturday evening special trains will run from the fair to Springfield and to East Brookfield.

Farmer Wants Land Damages.

Asks Southern New England Road be Made to Settle.

Jacob Gold of Palmer has filed in the office of the clerk of court in Springfield a petition for assessment of damages for land taken by the Southern New England railroad corporation. Two tracts of land enter into the dispute, the first beginning at the southeasterly corner of the northerly side of the road leading from Palmer to Ware and fronting on the Palmer Center and the Warren roads, and the other situated south of this and bounded by land of the Boston and Albany railroad, the road from Cooley's crossing to Brimfield, and the Quaboag river. The plaintiff alleges that the Southern New England road has seized upon part of this land by right of eminent domain and that the two parties are unable to agree upon the amount of damages. He asks the county commissioners to determine this point.

James Heenehan has returned to his studies at Dartmouth college.

Clark--Dillon Nuptials.

Former Palmer Young Man Takes Bride In North Adams.

A wedding of interest to Palmer people, a large number of whom have known the groom from childhood, was that of Frank L. Dillon, son of Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Dillon of Central street, and Miss Bertha E. Clark, which took place Tuesday evening at the home of the bride in North Adams. The following account of the wedding was sent from North Adams:

One of the most brilliant weddings that has taken place in this city in years was solemnized this evening in the home of H. W. Clark on Church street when Miss Bertha Elizabeth Clark, the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clark, was married to Frank Lawrence Dillon of Newark, N. J. The ceremony was performed at 7.30 in the drawing room by Rev. J. Foster Wilcox, pastor of the First Congregational church.

The house was filled with guests when the wedding party descended the broad winding staircase and the wedding took place beneath a bower of Southern smilax. Ernest E. Hobson of Palmer was best man, and Miss Laura E. Brayton of Hartford, N. Y., a cousin of the bride, was maid of honor. Mrs. Harry Dickerman Hurd of Utica, who was a classmate of the bride at Vassar, was matron of honor, while the bridesmaids were Miss Hazel A. Dillon of Palmer, a sister of the bridegroom, Misses Jane A. Bond and Elsie Miller of this city, and Lois Angell of Hartford, Ct., a classmate of the bride. It was an old rose wedding, the gown of the maid of honor being of old rose messaline draped with chiffon and trimmed with thread lace and shaded roses. She carried a bouquet of cream roses, arranged in a semi-shower. The matron of honor was gowned in old rose messaline draped in chiffon with pearl and crystal trimmings. She carried an arm bouquet of cream roses. The bridesmaids wore crushed rose crepe de chene gowns trimmed with cream princess lace and shaded roses. These gowns were cut with a side train. They carried arm bouquets of cream larkspur. The ushers were H. B. Clark, a brother of the bride, of this city, John E. Gibbons of Newark, N. J., Clifton H. Hobson of Palmer, and Donald McClave of New York city.

As the large chime clock in the hall struck the hour the strains of the wedding march, played by Mrs. John E. Gibbons, sister of the bridegroom, came from the music room. The ushers were first and after them came the bridesmaids, matron of honor, the maid of honor, and the bride on the arm of her father. She wore a gown of white satin with court train. The gown was trimmed with orange blossoms, carrick me-cros lace, and she wore a tulle veil caught with orange blossoms. The only ornament she wore was a pendant of diamonds set in platinum, the gift of the bridegroom. She carried a shower bouquet of bride roses and lilies-of-the-valley. In the drawing room the party was met by the bridegroom and his attendants and the ceremony was performed. After the ceremony there was a reception and the catering was by J. F. Halla of Troy, N. Y.

The decorations of the house were palms, smilax, roses, hydrangeas and ground pine, and during the reception an orchestra played. The dining-room table was trimmed with pink roses, Southern smilax, tulle and a huge basket of roses studded with vari colored lights was suspended from the chandelier. Guests were present from Utica, N. Y., Palmer, Springfield, Winchester, Southbridge, Pittsfield, Lexington and Boston, Hartford, Ct., Newark, N. J., Hoosick Falls, N. Y., Pownal, Vt., Keene, N. H., Hartford, N. Y., and New York city.

There were many pre-nuptial activities, chief among them being a miscellaneous shower to the bride in the home of Miss Jane Arnold Bond on South State street Sept. 12, a picnic and auto ride into the country with picnic supper and shower for the bride the 13th, and last evening an auto ride to the Idlewild in South Williamston, where a dinner was served to the wedding party. Covers were laid for 18 and the table decorations were pink asters and place cards with suitable verses for each. There were three large wedding bells filled with confetti suspended over the table and favors were shower bouquets of lilies of the valley.

Probate Court Business.

At a session of the probate court in Springfield Wednesday, the following local business was among that transacted:

Administrations granted in the estates of—Alice C. Neville, late of Monson, William H. Anderson administrator; Mary Kroolik, late of Palmer, Andy Kroolik administrator; Anna S. Leonard, late of Hampden, Frank J. Leonard administrator.

Accounts allowed in the estates of—Daisy E. Richards, a minor of Palmer; Dean H. Richards, a minor of Palmer; Edith M. Richards, a minor of Palmer; Edna S. Richards, a minor of Palmer; Frederick Richards, a minor of Palmer.

Trustee appointed under the will of—Willard H. Stowe, late of Palmer, George E. Clough trustee.

Sale of real estate granted in the estate of Louise Lanigan, late of Monson.

Selectmen Hold Public Hearing.

Complainants of the Street Railway and Light and Power Service Had Opportunity to State Grievances.

The district court room was filled to its capacity last evening at the hearing given by the selectmen on the complaints of the electric light and power service of the Central Massachusetts Electric company and the trolley service afforded by the Springfield and Eastern Street railway company. That there was much interest was certain. That much which might have truthfully been said was not mentioned is also certain. For some reason or for numerous reasons the average citizen is reluctant to rise in public and make statements adverse to a public service corporation, although he may have facts which cannot be controverted—personal experiences and knowledge which would do much toward throwing light on the situation. This was emphatically true last evening. The net result of the meeting was—nothing; or that will be the out-come unless the selectmen, as suggested, take the matter of electric car service up to the railroad commissioners.

The first speaker was Dr. S. B. Keith, a dentist. He supposed that every person who uses the trolley system will agree that the service is bad. He estimated that 90 per cent of the cars were run off schedule. The service interfered with his business. About 50 per cent of his patients come by trolley, and the uncertainty of the cars make it impossible for him to arrange a schedule of appointments which does not confiict. Superintendent Atkins had told him there was no relief in sight until the road could get more power. The power company had told him there was plenty of power. It was time the matter was sifted and the blame placed. He believed the conditions could be remedied and ought to be.

E. B. Taylor asked if the town had any contract with the power company for street lights and was told that it had not. A contract has been drawn up but not signed because the selectmen are not satisfied the company can live up to it at present; in the meantime the town is paying at the old rate, with a rebate for off nights. The present arrangement is the "Moonlight" schedule, which did not seem to be understood and was explained by General Manager Parsons of the power company. This calls for the burning of the lights only when the moon is not scheduled to shine; when it is supposed to shine but does not there are no lights except by courtesy of the company; this it cannot afford to give to any extent. Dr. G. A. Moore asked if, aside from the moonlight schedule, the lights had been burning fairly regularly, and Mr. Parsons said yes, since the unfortunate breakdown of the engine at the plant a few weeks ago. Dr. Moore asked if at any time Mr. Parsons considered that there had been continuous good service. He replied that it was as good as was possible under the present equipment; the company is doing its best to obviate the difficulty by the installation of new machinery, but this takes time.

Dr. Moore asked if the old plant had not been overloaded, and Mr. Parsons said that it had—greatly so for some years, and his company was working with all possible speed to correct the difficulty. In reply to a question as to the amount of new business his company had taken on, Mr. Parsons replied that the amount of current consumed had increased only a small amount. In reply to questions as to attempts to secure additional power when they were short, Mr. Parsons said he had made inquiries and found it impracticable. The Boston Duck Company, which had been suggested as a possible source of supply, does not generate the same current and a considerable expense would have to be incurred in order to transform it to the Palmer company's standard. To use power from the Ludlow company would mean an expense of $20,000 to $25,000 for a transmission line, which he believed would be better spent in improved equipment in the local plant.

Dr. Moore then told of the trouble he had experienced in trying to get a continuous service from the present company—something he had got from the old. Mr. Parsons had promised him good service, but he had been cut off in the midst of operations and exceedingly inconvenienced. Some of his patients who had come from long distances had been seriously inconvenienced. If it is possible for the company to secure additional power it ought to do so. Some means should be arrived at whereby the company can give good and continuous service. Mr. Parsons replied that the company had spent up to date approximately $100,000 to enable it to give a good service. Some changes in the plant and wires must of neccssity be made on Sunday, and it was unfortunate that Dr. Moore returned to town at the time he did and that his presence was unknown. The line foreman who made the changes had been instructed to notify Dr. Moore when his line was to be cut out, but was unaware that he had returned from his vacation. Dr. Moore asked concerning the immediate outlook as to interruptions and was told that the house lighting system is now in the best of shape, barring possible trouble from lighting. Dr. Keith asked if the street railway had all the power since Sept. 1, and the answer was that it had with slight exceptions, the longest interruption being 20 minutes.

W. W. Converse criticised the darkness on Church street, which he supposed was due to the moonlight schedule of lights.

F. E. Albro of Bondsville asked about a lack of lights in that village, and Mr. Parsons read a schedule showing that they had burned every night from between 6 and 7 to 1 o'clock since Sept. 1. E. B. Taylor approved the change of street lights from arc to Tungsten clusters.

Concerning the street railway service Superintendent Atkins admitted that it had been bad. The machinery at the power plant broke down July 27, and since then the power had not been good. He had visited the plant and found that Mr. Parsons was doing all that anyone could do. His company had bought power from Ludlow for some time and was doing so now. Things are coming along as well as can be expected, he thought. Cars are now running on time.

T. J. Moran believed that the street railway is getting all the power it contracts for. The trouble is not with the power or the local management, but with the owners, the N. Y., N. H. and H. road, who would rather economize on power than carry patrons through on time. The fault with the power company was that it tore an old station to pieces before it had secured power to fill the gap. Mr. Parsons replied that at no time since they took the plant had they had less power than was available before. They had taken the dry months in which to install new water wheels, but still had all the engines in use. The records would show that little or no power was generated from the water wheels a year ago in these months.

Dr. Keith took exceptions to Mr. Atkins' statement that the cars are now on time, and H. A. Northrop gave times and hours when he or his family had waited in vain for transportation on the electrics. One day this week he got into a car in Palmer which he was told would go to Springfield; after waiting a while he was told by another employe that it would not. On asking who knew whether it would or not he was told that no one knew.

Dr. Keith asked if the selectmen had power to take the matter up to the railroad commissioners, and was told that they had.

J. C. Sullivan wanted to go on record as of the opinion that the power company is doing all it possibly can to give a fine service. It is spending quantities of money and buying much new machinery. It takes a long time to get this delivered, but when it is in place we shall have a most satisfactory service. No amount of money or experience can install it any faster than is being done. Dr. Moore replied that all that is wanted is a good service, and that soon—soon. To this Mr. Parsons replied that he could not promise all that he would like to under three months, but thought that after that time there would be no cause for complaint.

After the meeting adjourned the selectmen were asked if they would receive information privately from any who did not care to appear publicly, and replied that they would be glad to do so.

Mr. and Mrs. Cecil I. Whitcomb and daughter spent Saturday and Sunday with relatives in Lowell.

Death of Mrs. E. Brown.

Long-time Resident. Had Reached Advanced Age of 91 Years.

Mrs. Mary S. Brown died at noon Tuesday at her home on North Main street at the advanced age of 91 years. On Monday of last week she sustained a fall in the house and received a shaking up from which she failed to rally. Previous to that time she had been in usual good health and able to walk about the house and out of doors. Mrs. Brown was one of the oldest—if not the oldest—resident of the village in point of years of residence, and was widely known, particularly among the older residents, not only of this village but the entire town.

Mary S. Brown was born in Belchertown May 2, 1821, the youngest of seven children of Chester and Anna Rice Allen. The family was long-lived, all of the children living to be over 80. She was married in Ware, December 16, 1845, to Ebenezer Brown, and went to live in Salem. About a year later they came to Palmer, where

Mr. Brown engaged in business in the grocery line, changing later to hardware. His first place of business was in the old McGilvray block on South Main street, but with the shift of the business center due to the coming of the railroad and the establishment of new enterprises, he moved to the Commercial block on Main street, which he built in conjunction with the late C. D. Holbrook. About 40 years ago they built the residence on North Main street; the house was planned by Mrs. Brown, and she often said she had never desired to make a single change in the plans.

Mr. and Mrs. Brown celebrated their golden wedding in 1895, with a large gathering of friends. Mr. Brown died Feb. 2, 1901, since which time Mrs. Brown's daughter, Mrs. F. D. Barton, has lived with her and cared for her. In recent years Mrs. Brown's birthday was always made a festive occasion, she holding open house on that day and being visited by hosts of neighbors and friends. She took great enjoyment in these events, and it was with much pleasure that she recalled the first years of her life in Palmer, comparing them with the growth and advancement of later times.

In 1873 Mrs. Brown united with the Congregational church, and as long as she was able was an active worker in its activities; she was for many years a member of the choir, and the family was always liberal in contributions to the church suppers, often times making donations when none but the treasurer knew the source. The couple had two children, a son, Clarence A. Brown, who died some years ago, and a daughter, Mrs. F. D. Barton. There are three grandchildren, Prof. Francis D. Barton of Williams College, E. Robert Barton and Miss Mollie Barton, at home.

The funeral was held from the home this afternoon at 2.30; Rev. Fosdick B. Harrison of Southington, Ct., a former pastor of the Palmer Congregational church, officiating, assisted by Rev. F. S. Brewer, the present pastor. There was a large attendance of friends, and a profusion of beautiful flowers. Mrs. Lucy Flynt of Palmer and Mrs. A. D. Noreross of Monson sang. The bearers were Francis D. Barton and E. Robert Barton, Lewis McLaughlin of Stafford Springs, Ct., and F. C. Gamwell of Palmer. Burial was in the Oak Knoll cemetery.

BAD RAILROAD WRECK.

Freight Cars Get Tangled Up at Warren Wednesday.

CONDUCTOR TURNED WRONG SWITCH

He Had Hip Broken and Other Injuries Both B. and A. Tracks Blocked for Several Hours.

A bad freight wreck occurred in Warren on the Boston and Albany railroad about 3 o'clock Wednesday morning, at bridge 88 over the Quaboag river, which is about 400 feet west of the passenger station in that town. Traffic on the railroad was interfered with all day, and it was necessary to make up a special train going east from Warren about 8.30.

Extra freight No. 2608 east bound, in charge of Lester E. Bailey, conductor, with about 50 cars, stopped to back off on to a side track so as to allow express No. 4 to pass. Conductor Bailey made a mistake in the switch and instead of backing his train into the long turnout west of bridge 88, he threw a switch opposite the station, which turned his train into a short siding which would hold only a half-dozen cars and ended just east of the bridge. Conductor Bailey evidently did not detect his error until the caboose struck the bumper and he was caught in the wreckage and narrowly escaped death. Four cars and the caboose were derailed and blocked both tracks before the train could be stopped. The Bar Harbor express, west bound, was flagged just in time to prevent its plunging into the wreckage and its being a few minutes late probably saved its destruction.

The caboose was smashed beyond repair. A Rock Island box car loaded with general freight to be transferred at Worcester was driven against the end of the bridge and smashed to pieces, and a Hocking Valley box car loaded with oil in barrels was thrown on end in the river, but was later removed by the cranes. A box car loaded with corn was badly smashed and most of the corn lost, while the fourth car was loaded with bars of iron and escaped little damaged.

Wrecking crews were called from Worcester, Springfield and Boston, and the west-bound track was cleared at about 9 o'clock and a single track was used from West Warren to West Brimfield until after 12 o'clock.

Conductor Bailey was found in the wreckage of the caboose, and it was found that he had sustained a broken hip and numerous bruises. He was attended by Dr. H. H. Moore and was later taken to his home in Roxbury.

BRIMFIELD.

Sunday services are being held at the Advent chapel. Rev. J. T. Meehan will preach each Sunday at 10.45. The subject for next Sunday will be, "The fidelity of Caleb and its reward."

The body of Mrs. Georgianna Lawrence of Brookfield was brought to Brimfield Sunday afternoon for burial in the Lawrence family lot. Mrs. Lawrence was the widow of Edwin Lawrence, a native of Brimfield. She was born in Boston, where most of her life was spent until her marriage. She leaves a son, Edwin, of Brookfield.

A reunion of the class of '71 of the Academy was held at the home of Mrs. Hollis Church in South Windsor, Ct., last Saturday. Mrs. Church was Miss Mary Webber of Holland. Among those present were Miss Alice M. Bacon of Springfield, Mrs. Eva Ward Parker, Mrs. Julia Blashfield Hicks and Mrs. Lizzie Munroe Tarbell of Brimfield. Letters of regret at being unable to be present were sent by other members of the class. The party were given an automobile ride to Hartford, where places of interest were visited.

WILBRAHAM.

A special town meeting will be held in Wilbraham next week to take action on the question of buying Springfield water.

Mrs. Myron Bruuer and Miss Fanny Merrick have returned to their home after spending the summer at Old Orchard, Me.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence E. Pease celebrated the 25th anniversary of their marriage to-day at their home on North Main street.

EAST BRIMFIELD.

Mrs. C. H. MacAllister, who has been seriously ill with gastric fever, has recovered sufficiently to be out.

The young people will hold their regular Y. P. S. C. E. meeting in the Congregational church next Sunday evening at 6.

Rev. W. A. White, pastor of the Sturbridge Congregational church, will preach in the East Brimfield church next Sunday afternoon at 3.

Miss Cartwright's Constancy

"If Amelia Cartwright would pay a little more attention to the love of the living and less to that of the dead, she might be happier, and save Amos Tillinghast from wearing his heart out.'

Mrs. Lowell stabbed her needle viciously into the sock she was mending and rocked violently.

"Amelia has a constant nature," said Ann Briggs.

"Constancy is all right if there's any reason for it," said Mrs. Lowell, "but everybody knows that Charles Burroughs wasn't true to her before he died. He was engaged to two girls at once."

"But Amelia doesn't know it," said Miss Ann, gently, "and it would hurt her to know."

"Well, wouldn't it be better for her to be hurt a little and get waked up to the fact that it is Amos who has really loved her all these years and who deserves to get her?"

"Well, I don't know," said Miss Ann. "I hate to see Amos hurt and I hate to see Amelia hurt. Love is love, and I guess most of us have to suffer for it."

"There she goes, now," said Mrs. Lowell, glancing out of the window. "I knew she would. Every Saturday she's off to the cemetery with a wreath of pink flowers. Sometimes it's roses and sometimes it's sweet peas and sometimes it's verbenas. But it's always pink."

"Poor thing," said Miss Ann.

"That's what hurts Amos so," said Mrs. Lowell. "He knows Amelia hasn't enough to live on and he has plenty. And I think he knows, too, that she would love him if she would let herself. He said to me not long ago: 'Aunt Carrie, when I talk to her about it, she just cries and says, "Please don't. Poor Charles thought I had it in me to be constant—and I want to be faithful to him—I want to be faithful."'"

"There goes Amos now," said Miss Ann. "Do you know he's got some pink roses in that paper? I believe he's on his way to the cemetery."

"Well, he'll meet Amelia there," said Mrs. Lowell, "and I guess she'll be touched to see that he has remembered Charles."

But Amelia, sitting forlornly at the foot of her lover's grave, was to meet some one else before Amos, for a slender little woman approached and asked, "Is this the grave of Charles Burrough?"

"Yes," said Amelia.

The girl unwound yards of waxed paper from about a magnificent wreath. It was evidently made up by a city florist, of pink hot-house roses, and valley lilies, with maiden-hair fern veiling the whole.

"Oh," gasped Amelia, "how beautiful!"

"He always loved pink," said the girl.

Amelia looked up startled. "You knew that?" she asked.

"Yes," said the girl. "When I wore pink bows on my hair he always admired them. And there was a little pink lawn dress that he made me wear the night he left me."

"He died ten years ago," said Amelia. "It is a long time—did you know him—just before he died?"

The girl nodded. "He lived out west in the same town where I taught. And we were engaged." She did not see Amelia's start of surprise. "He came east—just to see his folks, he said, and then he was to come back—and we were to be—married."

"Then he died," the girlish voice went on, "and all these years I have wanted to come and lay a wreath on his grave. I saved my money so that I might. And—now I am here—and—and I can't bear it."

Looking on the other's grief, Amelia wondered why she was unmoved. She wondered, too, at a certain lightness of heart. She felt free—free to live her own life, to love as she would.

She saw Amos coming up the hill. She bent over the sobbing girl. "He loved you," she said tensely; "you have that to comfort you."

Then she went swiftly down the hill and met Amos. "I don't just know what has happened to me," she said. "Take me away, Amos, take me where nobody can see me cry."

He led her to a place screened by a row of chairs. "What is it, dear heart?" he asked, tenderly.

She told him. "Was he—as fickle as that?" she demanded.

"Everybody knew it," he said, "but you."

"And no one told me. Oh, Amos, I feel so sorry for that girl. Somehow I don't feel sorry for myself. Perhaps I've been just clinging to a dream. But she knew him and lived close to him and, oh, I hope he loved her best. It would be so tragic if—if she is mourning a false lover, Amos."

"And you?" Amos asked.

"I found out after he came east that he wasn't all that I had thought he was—but I thought he loved me—and it seemed so pitiful for him to be up here and alone—with no one to care—and so I tried to be true."

There was a light in Amos' eyes as he bent over her. "And now that he has some one else to love him—can't you pity me—Amelia?"

"I declare," said Mrs. Lowell, a month later. "Amos says Amelia is going to marry him. And when I asked him his favorite color, he laughed and said it was blue."

The Lighthouse Keeper

Every third month a broad-shouldered, squarely-built man promenaded along the quays of the little fishing village on the island of Pelworm. He was dressed in a black Prince Albert coat, white vest and stovepipe hat when he walked along the quays, but when he disappeared he took up his vocation of attending the lighthouse on Bishop's rock.

Why he had entered this branch of the government service I have never been able to find out. Now, at the age of forty-nine, he was filled with a horror of the sea, and the Prince Albert coat, which he wore during his week off, he put on as a protest against his work. Nothing gave him more pleasure than to be taken for a drummer. Ziegler was his name.

"The sea is as smooth as a polished floor," he said to me one day when we were sitting together on the shore looking westward to where the lighthouse was dimly visible against the sky, "but the sea is treacherous.

"Around Bishop's rock there are undertows, currents and eddies which nobody knows. Fortunately I have only one more winter to spend there, though it would be just like my luck if the old tower should blow down this winter in a storm from northwest."

He voiced the general opinion of the islanders. The former lighthouse had been swept away by the waves, and, although the new one had been standing for several years, every one knew that a fog-horn situated sixty feet above the rock had been carried away by the foaming waves during a stormy night.

Ziegler trembled and stood up.

"Thank the Lord, I have only one more winter to spend out there," he said.

"And then?" I queried.

"Then I am to be transferred to the North Foreland lighthouse and will be able to live ashore with my wife and boy. By the way, I wanted to speak to you about Leopold. He will soon finish school, and what are we to do with him then? Come along home with me and have a chat with my wife and the boy."

Frau Ziegler was a red-cheeked, buxom matron, whom no one would suspect of morbid ideas, but she, nevertheless, shared her husband's horror of the sea.

"It seems a miracle that it has not blown down," she said, "for it looks to me like a challenge to God."

Then we talked about the boy and his prospects.

"I hope to meet you next year," I said when I left. "I shall call on you in your new home, Ziegler."

"If the lighthouse does not topple over this winter," he replied.

The lighthouse did not topple over that winter, but Ziegler was not transferred to North Foreland light. Two years passed before I returned. But one day in spring I once more visited the island, and my first walk took me through the little cemetery. A new tablet in the wall caught my eye. I read the inscription. It said that Ziegler had died the year before on Christmas night. Of his death the inscription gave no information.

I walked slowly toward the little fishing village and involuntarily I turned my steps toward the signal house on the cliff. I was so filled with thoughts of Ziegler that I was not at all surprised to find his wife there staring toward the lighthouse as of old.

"I had heard nothing about it," I said as I shook her hand.

Then she told me how her husband disappeared.

On Christmas eve the light was to have been lit at four o'clock, but the minutes passed and at half past the Bishop's rock was still dark. On the island people realized that something had happened and the cutter was made clear.

Of the three men in the lighthouse only two were found. They said that Ziegler had taken the day watch while the other slept. He was to call them a little before four, but when they woke up it was dark and Ziegler was not about.

When they lit the light they saw that he had made an entry in the journal at 3:40 that a schooner was in sight. They looked everywhere, finally descending the spiral stairway. The lower door was open. From this a narrow iron ladder led down to the little landing.

There was only one explanation. Ziegler must have gone out on the iron ladder, then stumbled and fallen into the sea.

This is what Frau Ziegler told me and I wondered why she should want to go on living here.

She shaded her eyes with her hand and stared across the sea.

"There is the cutter from the lighthouse," she said. "Come down to the harbor with me and shake hands with Leopold. He is third man on the Bishop now."

"You are surprised," she went on as she looked at me. "Do you remember that the last entry that Frederich made was about a schooner? That schooner went ashore on the rocks at half past five that Christmas eve. One man lost his life, the rest were saved. That man was drowned because my husband had not lit the light in time and that is why I gave my son instead. If the Bishop's light goes down this coming winter it is only a life for a life."

Playing Chess

"What's in the box?" asked the girl in pink. The young man with the high forehead smiled at her. "I'm going to teach you chess," he announced. "I brought over the men."

"Why, how perfectly lovely!" cried the girl in pink, immediately pulling off the cover. "I know I'll be just crazy about it! Aren't they cunning!"

"I'm glad you're pleased," said the young man in a gratified tone. "I was afraid you wouldn't want to learn or would be bored. Few women care about chess. It's really a great game!"

"The idea of not caring about it!" exclaimed the girl in pink, spreading out the board. "I know it's so different. Why, the other girls will simply die of envy when I tell them I can play chess! It sounds so intellectual!"

"Now, we'll set up the men," announced the young man with the high forehead.

"Oh, they're not all alike, are they?" she continued in surprise. "How funny! I should think that would mix you up dreadfully! Don't you think it would be lots easier to play if they were all alike? I heard of a man who could play six games of chess at once—let's try it!"

The young man coughed. "Well, I have men for only one game," he said. "Maybe it would be better just at first not to try any more!"

"All right," agreed the girl in pink cheerfully. "Only I think it would be loads of fun to have six games at the same time. Then we could walk around among them. I get awfully tired sitting still—do you? I guess it's because I have nerves. My mother's sister—"

"Now I'll move this one," said the young man. Then he explained the moves to her and finally said: "It's your turn."

"I think it is perfectly absurd not to let them all move alike!" she cried. "It just mixes you up! Is that really the way you have to play or are you just trying to fool me?"

"I'm not smart enough to make it up," said the young man. "Men more brilliant than I invented the moves hundreds and hundreds of years ago."

"Well," said the girl in pink indignantly, "if they've been playing it so long I should think they would have straightened it out and simplified it before now. You move 'em all alike when you play checkers and you know what you are doing! If this thing's a queen why isn't there a crown or something on it, and for these horses that turn corners—how perfectly ridiculous!"

"You'll understand it after you have played it a while," said the young man. "I'd move that one to start with if I were you."

"All right," said the girl in pink. "I'd rather shoot this one down the black squares, though. It's so funny to see it go crisscross instead of straight ahead—"

"But you can't," said the young man. "Your bishop can't move because that pawn is in the way!"

"I don't think a little pawn ought to count when it's a bishop that wants to get by," said the girl in pink, argumentatively.

"Now I'll move this," said the young man, firmly. "You see, it threatens your queen."

"I don't see why that is so awful," said the other. "Oh, you say the queen is the most valuable of all because it moves farther and in every direction? Oh, Arthur! I saw Marie downtown today and what do you suppose she told me? You'll be surprised! You'd never guess——"

"You can't move that way," said the young man. "This isn't dominoes or checkers—the idea isn't to take all your opponent's men!"

"Well, what is the idea?" demanded the young woman. "In checkers you try to take 'em and—oh, to checkmate the king, you say? Well, I'd like to know how I can get anywhere near your king when you've got him on the back line with all those other things stacked up in front of him—you ought to move em' out. What's that thing? A castle? How silly! It doesn't look any more like a castle than I do! If it's a castle, why doesn't it look like one?"

"I'm afraid," suggested the young man, "that chess doesn't appeal to you! Perhaps we'd better stop playing!"

"Why, I'm perfectly crazy about it!" insisted the girl in pink. "I think it is terribly interesting and I'm so glad I've learned how! And I don't see anything so awfully hard about it either! But it makes my head ache a little so let's play authors for a change!"

Dolls Always Known.

History fails to tell us the inventor of the doll, which has been such a boon to mankind, not only in quieting the rowdy youngster, but in stimulating a healthy imagination and affection. Five hundred years before Christ little girls had dolls; there is sure evidence of it, and Edward Lovett, an enthusiastic collector, has a doll from those dim ages. It is little more than a battered stick now, but is unmistakably a doll. No one could name a fair value for such a prize which stands out as a proof that the child of today is singularly like her little sister some twenty-five hundred years ago.—Dundee Advertiser.

Flowers to Match

"What color is your gown, Dell?" asked Bob Gaines, eagerly.

Dell considered. "Green," she said, solemnly, and Bob knew that the filmy creation she would wear to the Datters' masked ball would be yellow It was Dell's way nowadays to tease him in this manner. They were both very young, and Bob was very much in love.

"Green," repeated Bob, just as if he believed it. "Then you will want to wear white flowers, eh? What's the matter with lily of the valley?"

Dell shook her sunny head. "They're too much like bridal bouquets," she said, flippantly.

"You don't seem to have much respect for bridal bouquets," he drawled "I thought girls were rather keen about that sort of thing."

"Did you?" asked Dell sweetly "When you are older, by dear Bobby you will have met a number of girls and then you will realize that not all of them are like Pussy Datter."

"What's the matter with Pussy Datter?" demanded Bob.

"I'm sure I don't know! It must be because she has been a bridesmaid so many times that makes her positively silly about weddings."

"I thought all girls were that way," growled Bob.

"Perhaps your acquaintance is limited. There's Pussy, who is fond of weddings, and there's me."

"And you are not?"

"Dear me, no!"

Bob frowned. "If you don't want any bridal flowers to wear with your green perhaps a few yards of smilax might answer," he said, glumly.

Dell laughed gaily. "I'd feel like a chandelier decorated for a wedding," she declared.

"What shall it be?"

"Violets," said Dell.

"Very well. But remember, Dell some day I shall send you lilies of the valley—and you'll be glad to wear them!" declared Mr. Gaines.

"Well!" cried Dell a little breathlessly after he had gone. "What is the boy thinking of?"

Bob stopped at the florists and ordered violets. As he went out of the shop he picked up a small booklet from the counter and idly scanned it as he rode uptown.

It was a book for the sentimentalist In it were set forth the fourteen important wedding anniversaries, from cotton to diamond. Also birth-month flowers and their expression.

Bob Gaines read that lily-of-the-valley meant success in love. "Violets mean courage."

He wondered if Dell know that, too Some girls might, if they were romantic.

"If violets signify courage—she suggested violets, and she must have meant to encourage me," he reasoned

That evening he called her on the telephone.

"What do violets mean?' 'he asked solemnly.

"About two dollars," she said wickedly.

"Oh, pshaw! I mean the sentimental meaning—you know!"

"Oh, I did ask you for violets didn't I?"

"Yes."

"Well, I've changed my mind, Bob Bring me any flowers you care to."

The next morning Bob stopped in the florist's and ordered a bridal bouquet, made up of lilies of the valley to be sent to Miss Dell Moore for the Datters' ball. His card went with it "I shall hold you to your promise,' he scribbled on it.

It was not easy to find Miss Moore at the Datters' ball. There were so many slim young creatures that might be Dell.

Bob Gaines, dressed as a cavalier pursued a green gown through a crowded room and cornered it in an alcove. He recognized the golden glint of hair and the set of the ears behind the large white satin mask.

"Dell," he reproached her, "you are wearing daffodils!"

"Am I?" she asked pertly. "I thought they were orchids, really, I did!"

"They look horrid with that green gown—you look like an egg salad," he pursued cruelly.

"Thanks," she murmured.

"You promised to wear my flowers if they harmonized with your gown."

"I never did!" she denied.

"Dell!"

"But my name isn't Dell!"

"What is it, then?"

"Nell Gaines—yes, your own sister, Bobby! Ah, it was your own fault, sir—you did insist!"

"Awful!" commented Bobby, his head turning here and there in search of Dell Moore.

"But why the bride?" asked Nell coolly.

"What bride " he turned quickly.

Coming slowly toward his corner was a slender young form whose carriage he recognized at once. She was gowned in white satin, and from her head there swayed a thick veil of white tulle and orange blossoms. Her face was entirely hidden behind a mask. In her hand she carried a bridal bouquet of lilies of the valley.

It was his bouquet and they matched her gown!

"Nell!" he said to his sister hurriedly, "won't you beat it? There's a dear! It's Dell, and she's coming to —me!"

Nell squeezed his hand.

An Intermezzo

"How nice of you to come," the daughter of the house whispered to a gentleman in evening dress whose serious face was in strong contrast to most of the other guests at the fashionable ball.

"I only came to stay for a moment," was his curt reply.

"But please sit down," the beautiful girl whispered. "I enticed you here tonight just to have a few words with you, and I know that you will stay if I really want you, won't you, doctor?"

He bowed silently and sat down.

"We have not seen each other for three years, doctor, and I confess that I have looked forward to this meeting with great joy. As soon as I heard that you were once more back in Berlin I told mother it was absolutely necessary for us to give another ball, and the first card I sent out was addressed to you."

A strange expression came into the serious face as he replied:

"This was something that I had hardly dared hope for from you, madame."

"You are still unforgiving. Is it then not possible to correct a past error when one has grown to be three years older since it was committed?"

"There are errors which never can be corrected, mistakes which can never be forgiven because they have destroyed something which cannot be brought back to life."

"Did you then really take it so much to heart that I did not say 'yes' right away?"

"Take it to heart! You killed something in me."

"Which cannot be brought back to life, doctor?"

"No."

His reply was so curt that she looked at him in surprise.

"At that time you looked upon me as one of the men who did not give away their love. You looked at me as a young, poor physician who was hunting for a rich young wife to open the way into society for him. Is that not true?"

She hesitated. Then she said quickly: "I have many faults, doctor, but I may say this about myself, I cannot tell a lie. And therefore I must say to you now that what you just said was true."

"Well—and by distrusting me you killed something in me which can never be brought back to life."

"But when it is like that, doctor, when you feel as you do, why did you accept our invitation?"

"I came to guard you against a calamity."

"How serious that sounds."

"It is serious, Miss Erna. By accident I heard during my first visit to our medical society that a young man was seeking your hand in marriage and that he had every prospect of success. It may have been an accident, or maybe my friend told me on purpose to see what impression this news would make upon me. You know there are friends of that kind. I did not show any emotion, but when I heard the name of your suitor it took my whole effort to remain quiet. I do not want to ask any questions. I cannot spy, but when your invitation came I accepted it as a hint from Providence. Here at this ball I must find out for sure if the rumor was true, and I saw it was as soon as I had entered the ballroom. For the very first gentleman whom I saw you dancing with was he."

"Herr von Wall?"

"Yes, Herr von Wall. You know whom I mean."

"But we are not yet engaged," Erna exclaimed; "that is to say—"

"That is to say, we are going to be engaged," the doctor replied, completing her sentence. "Now I will tell you what seems to me a duty. Herr von Wall was my first patient and I know that he is living a life which is ruining him physically and morally. I have tried everything to make him change his ways. I have told him that he is practically committing suicide, but it was no use. I have found out other things about him which justify me in telling you that Herr von Wall is a scoundrel, and that the young girl who marries him will become as unhappy as a woman can ever be. Now I have done my duty and with your permission I shall leave."

He arose slowly and was about to turn away from her when she took his hand.

"Stay," she whispered. "I thank you for your sacrifice, and it is hardly necessary for me to say that I believe you. But what do you want me to do now?"

"That is for you to decide, Miss Erna. I have done my duty. My reward will be the knowledge of having saved you from a dreadful fate. If I had wanted any other reward I should not have dared to speak."

She threw herself on a couch, burying her face in her hands, and it seemed as if she were crying. When she looked up again he had gone and her mother came rushing into the small boudoir.

"But, child, where have you been? And how is it that you look so? I really believe you have—"

"Yes, mamma, I have—but it's all over—it was only a little intermezzo."

She looked at her dance card.

"I suppose I have to go back to work now."

THE FORMAL OPENING

OF OUR

ENLARGED AND REMODELED

STORE

BEGINNING WEDNESDAY AND CONTINUING THROUGHOUT THE WEEK

WILL BE A NOTABLE EVENT

Preparations have been made on an elaborate scale. The new features of equipment and service which have been installed for the efficient transaction of business, the beautiful new fixtures and furnishings, the splendid stocks of new merchandise which have been gathered here, representing a careful selection of the best creations of the foremost designers and makers in all parts of the world, and the many unusual attractions that have been prepared, combine to make this an occasion of extraordinary interest.

No personal invitations have been issued. This is our cordial invitation to the entire public to visit the store on the opening days, and to inspect both the store and its contents.

Where All Are Not Equal.

Opportunities are equal, but the ability to grasp them, the mentality to appreciate them, the strength to develop them, vary with the individual.—Herbert Kaufman .

Industry Coming Into Its Own.

Guayule was for years overlooked or despised; its rubber content was considered of little or no value, and when at last acknowledged this was said to be inferior to other rubber because it did not come from the tropics. Yet in spite of all guayule has become an important source of rubber supply, millions of dollars have been invested in the industry, factories have been erected close to the guayule fields and towns have grown up for the operatives and field laborers.

First to Utilize Spectacles.

Roger Bacon knew lenses, and that they were useful for near vision in the old. For optical purposes, they appear to have been ground first about 1285 by a certain Salvino degli Armati, said to have died in 1317. A monk of Pisa, Alexander della Spina, who died in 1313, also has been accredited with the invention of spectacles and with the promotion of their use.

English Colliery Superstition.

A curious custom prevails among the Durham (Eng.) colliery women. Whenever they put clean sheets on the bed, they also place three small bits of coal on it. If they omit to do this, they think the husband will meet with an accident before the sheets are changed next time.

NOT SYMPATHETIC.

The Hospital Doctor—What did the farmer say when you fell out of his barn and broke your arm?

Tramp—Didn't say nothin'. He wuz too busy a-laughin'.

Human Nature.

Complaint is the largest tribute heaven receives, and the sincere part of our devotion.—Dean Swift.

New Air Line.

Aeroplane lines will at least be useful for journeys to castles in the air.

Hurt Fishermen's Business.

A strange story comes from Frontignan, Herault, France. Recently 700 gallons of confiscated wine were thrown into a canal there by the customs officers. But the wine had the effect of intoxicating the fish, which swim on the top of the water and can be picked out by hand. The housewives refuse to buy fish when they can get them for themselves, and the fishermen in the district have united to protest against the action of the customs officers.

Pope's Revenue From Eels.

The greatest eel-breeding establishment in the world is that of Comacchio, on the Adriatic, where the industry is carried on with scientific care. This eel nursery consists of a gigantic swamp, measuring 140 miles in circumference, and is of ancient origin, since in the sixteenth century it yielded an annual revenue of $6,000 to the Pope.

Self-Evident.

Barney Sheridan, who has tried to 'come back" in the dancing game and failed, says that when a man passes 28 and a woman 25 they lose their 'pep" in dancing. He says they may still enjoy dancing and will struggle along all evening, but their limbs lack the springiness and elasticity enjoyed by the younger people.—Kansas City Journal.

PALMER NEWS.

Aged Resident Dead.

William D. Mason, Native and Long-time Citizen of Town.

William Dwight Mason died at his late residence on Thorndike street at midnight last night, aged 89.

Mr. Mason gained his education in the public schools of Palmer and the old Belchertown Academy. He became a successful teacher at the age of 17, his first term of teaching being in Ludlow, followed by a term in Wales. In 1842 he had charge of the school at the Old Center in Palmer, where there were 75 pupils in attendance with grades ranging from a class in a, b, c to pupils 22 years of age. He was next engaged to teach the school in Silver Street, Monson, where the boys had been so unruly that they had carried a former teacher out of the school-room on a rail with the gentle reminder not to return, which mandate he heeded. Mr. Mason was engaged with the understanding that he should maintain good order or no pay would be allowed. He had charge of the school for three years and preserved strict discipline and retained the fullest respect of his pupils as well. He later taught in New Jersey; also in Moline, Ill., for two terms.

In the winter of 1852 he took a bridal trip to Chicago, going via Niagara, stopping at the Goose tavern, so-called, because goose was the only article of meat furnished to guests. In those days the only means of travel west for the public was by stage and the bridal couple met with some hard experiences as might be imagined. They finally arrived at Chicago, then a small town, and remained till spring, when they moved on to Moline, Ill., and Mr. Mason made arrangements to engage in the sash and blind business, having Willard Ruggles to teach him the business. They built a large factory in company with a retired Californian. Mr. Mason remained for several years in the business and then went back to Chicago, and had charge of a boarding-house in connection with a New York and Chicago commission business, in which he remained some two years. He then returned to Moline and engaged in the boot and shoe trade. He came back to Belchertown, where his father and mother died in 1874.

Having had all the experience he desired in the west he came back to Palmer about 1880 and built the house on the Thorndike road, where he resided till his death. Mr. Mason dated his conversion under the preaching of William Miller at Three Rivers in 1842. He and his wife joined the Independent Presbyterian church in Palo, Ill., but in belief he was an Adventist. He maintained a consistent religious life through all the vicissitudes through which he was called to pass, and even after his confinement to his chair for more than eight years he cherished a cheerful spirit until broken in mind and physical strength, he gratefully and hopefully entered into rest after a life sojourn of nearly 90 years.

William Dwight Mason was born at the late O'Neil place near Blanchardville July 25, 1823; son of William and Elizabeth E. Whitman Mason. He married first, January 13, 1852, his cousin, Silence Walker, who died in Belchertown in 1879. He married second his cousin, Sarah E. Mason, April 13, 1880, born December 19, 1839, and died in Palmer, November 22, 1889. He married third, June 18, 1890, Mary L. Hannum, born in North Dana, March 16, 1855, who survives him. Mr. Mason was probably the oldest native resident of Palmer at the time of his death. He was the only son in his parent's family and the oldest child. He survived his four sisters, each of whom he followed to the grave years ago.

The funeral will be held to-morrow.

The five-cluster street light at the junction of Main and Central street has been replaced this week with one of three lamps, and a three-cluster light placed on Main street at the junction of Walnut, a single lamp which was there being removed. The new arrangement affords light at a heretofore rather dark spot.

Guests of W. R. C.

L. L. Merrick Corps Entertains Hampden—Hampshire Association.

The Hampden and Hampshire County Association of Woman's Relief Corps was entertained yesterday by L. L. Merrick Corps of Palmer. The meeting was held at 10.30 in Memorial Hall, which was tastefully and uniquely decorated for the occasion with plants and cut flowers; it is said the hall never looked so well. There were present representatives from the Corps in Holyoke, Northampton, Easthampton, Springfield, Amherst, Belchertown, Ware, Warren, Monson, Westfield and Palmer. The meeting was the largest in the history of the association, over 200 being present. The department president was represented by the deputy I. and I. officer, Mrs. Nina Lovejoy, and the Massachusetts department was represented by Mrs. Alice Goddard, Past Department President, and Mrs. Sarah Southwick of the department executive board. The visitors were welcomed by the president of L. L. Merrick Corps, Mrs. Ida M. Bond. After the business meeting a dinner was served in the chapel of St. Paul's church, which was decorated with flags for the visitors. After the dinner there was an entertainment by L. L. Merrick Corps, consisting of readings by Mrs. Ada Murdock Hill of Southbridge and Miss Ruth Buffington of Palmer, soprano solos by Miss Doris Paine and Arthur Myers, piano selections by Miss Gladys Paine, and a clog dance by Master Marshall Randlett. The annual meeting of the association will be held in Northampton in December.

Macadam Roads Bids.

In another column will be found the advertisement calling for bids for the macadam road which the town of Palmer is to construct, between seven and eight miles. The specifications have been drawn by the state highway commission, and the plans are so complete that construction can begin immediately after the contract is awarded. The committee hopes to have the work completed this fall. The contract is a large one, and it is hoped that it may all go to one firm.

The fall issue of the telephone directory has been issued this week.

W. F. Fillmore has been making numerous improvements on the interior of the opera house.

Miss K. I. McMahon announces that after next Wednesday she will have a full line of millinery for fall and winter.

There will be a social dance in Memorial Hall next Tuesday evening under the auspices of the Y. P. C. U. of St. Paul's church.

Alterations are being made in the interior of the Eager block on Main street, recently purchased by C. W. Robinson, to convert it into a store.

Cards announcing the candidacy of various persons for numerous offices to be selected in the primaries next Tuesday evening have been posted about this week.

Harold K. Taylor of Thorndike street will leave next Monday for Washington, D. C., where he will take a course in electrical engineering in the Bliss electrical school.

The Prohibition candidates for president and governor stopped in Palmer Saturday afternoon on their way to Northampton, and addressed a small audience on Main street.

Paul Ezekiel has been elected captain of the football team. The team is doing good work at the practice meetings and expects to be in good shape for the opening game.

The Woman's Relief Corps is to hold a dance in Memorial Hall on the evening of October 1. Good music will be provided, and the program will be a varied one, assuring all a good time.

The junior class of the Palmer high school has elected these officers: President, Clifford Geer; vice president, Paul Ezekiel; secretary, Robert McDonald; treasurer, Leslie Cameron.

The fall meeting of the Eastern Hampden C. E. U. will be held tonight at Three Rivers at 7.30. Miss Marion Clark will give suggestions on committee work and a social time will be enjoyed.

There will be a bridge whist party next Wednesday afternoon at the Quaboag Country Club house. Those in charge will be Mrs. L. E. Chandler, Mrs. A. W. Holbrook, Mrs. L. A. Flynt and Miss Mabel Smith.

A heavy piece of machinery, being moved across the street railway track at the junction on the Monson road, became stalled on the track this forenoon and delayed the Monson cars for a few trips from 11 o'clock on.

The Barre fair will be held on Thursday and Friday of next week. There will be numerous attractions, among them being an address by Woodrow Wilson, Democratic candidate for the presidency, on Thursday; Gov. Foss will be at the fair on Friday.

Miss Lucy Royce of North Main street, a student in the high school, was stricken suddenly with appendicitis Wednesday afternoon. For a time she was seriously ill, but is now recovering, and hopes are entertained that an operation will not be necessary.

The agency of the City Laundry of Springfield, which W. B. Whittemore held for a long time but which he gave up recently, has been placed with J. P. O'Connor, and packages may be left at his barber shop on Main street.

The first announcement of the standing of the contestants in the piano contest at the Lynde drug store, which started last November, is made this week, as follows: Miss Marjorie Stevenson, 3000; Miss Nora Harrington, 2165; Norman Brown, 100; all the above live in Palmer. The contest closes December 1.

Friends of Charles F. Sanderson and Miss Ruth Parkhurst of South Main street were surprised Wednesday evening when they learned that the couple had been man and wife for four and a half months. The marriage took place in Somers, Ct., May 4. Mr. Sanderson has been a boarder in the Parkhurst family for some time.

The Triquetra canoe club was organized in Palmer Wednesday. The officers are: President, E. D. Linnell; commodore, W. J. Mongeau; secretary, R. L. Parkhurst; treasurer, G. A. Collis; chairman, T. J. Sullivan. The club intends giving a series of dances this winter, the first of which will be in Union Hall, Thorndike, next Wednesday evening.

In the district court Wednesday Michael Krafsike of Wilbraham (near the Ludlow bridge) was found guilty of carrying a dangerous weapon and paid a fine of $25. Krafsike attended a dance Monday night, and at its close had an argument with another guest. When an officer arrived he found Krafsike in possession of a wicked pocket billy, and so gathered him in.

"The training of teachers and actual process of demonstration" will be the main features at the Three Rivers Sunday school convention at North Brookfield next Tuesday. Morning session at 10, afternoon at 1.30. "Men's work in the school" will be the subject in the evening, C. B. Potter of the Springfield Knitting Company will be the speaker. George C. Whitney of Worcester and Rev. R. G. Clark of Stafford Springs, Ct., are the principal speakers of the day. A special feature will be department conferences for primary, intermediate and adult work. All who are interested in Sunday school work of any denomination or society are invited to be present.

WARREN.

Turnbull—Williams.

A quiet wedding took place Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Williams on Maple street, when their son, Frank C. Williams, and Miss Catherine Turnbull were united in marriage by Rev. E. A. Thrasher. Only a few relatives were present. The best man was Edward Burgess and the maid of honor was Miss Elizabeth Alexander, both of Worcester. After a short wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Williams will live in Warren at the home of the groom's parents.

Painfully Injured.

Adam Zemaitis, who is employed in the dye-house at Sayles & Jenks mill, had his right foot badly scalded Tuesday afternoon. He was engaged in mixing a pail of hot dyestuff and in some way tipped it on his foot.

King Solomon Royal Arch chapter of Masons received their annual visitation Tuesday evening from District Deputy Grand High Priest Arthur C. Moore and suite of Southbridge. After the exercises, refreshments were served.

Word was received this week of the death at Lexington of Mrs. E. Isabelle Strickland Rice from heart disease. The body was brought to Warren Tuesday for burial. Mrs. Rice lived in Warren for many years before her marriage. She is survived by two sons, Frederick and Frank Rice.

The county commissioners held a hearing at the passenger station of the Boston and Albany division Wednesday upon the petition of the railroad company to make some changes while installing a new bridge in place of No. 83 over Maple street, just west of the station. The railroad proposes to replace the present bridge with a stronger one a very little wider, with cement flooring, so as to prevent the water dripping through on the roadway. The principal matter under discussion was in regard to the underdrainage to care for the surface water and spring water, and in regard to the surfacing of the road.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society was held in the chapel of the Congregational church Wednesday afternoon, and the following officers were elected: President, Mrs. William L. Day; vice president, Mrs. Charles H. DeLand; secretary, Mrs. Mary L. Hastings; treasurer, Mrs. Joseph G. Hastings; executive committee, Mrs. Herbert R. Burroughs, Mrs. Everett Williams, Mrs. O. W. Phelps and Mrs. Frank E. Gleason; directors, Mrs. Ralph B. Patrick, Miss Esther L. Gage, Mrs. William F. Taylor and Mrs. Fred W. Kimball; committee to pack boxes, Mrs. D. G. Hitchcock, Mrs. Mercy D. Bliss and Mrs. S. J. Tucker; table decorator, Mrs. Julia M. Hitchcock; literary committee, Mrs. Edward Fairbanks and Mrs. Daniel G. Hitchcock.

Miss Della Hastings returned to-day to her duties as teacher in the South, after spending the summer at her home on Pleasant street.

Miss Marion Howland of Guadalajara, Mex., a student at Mount Holyoke, was the guest of Miss Elizabeth Bodfish of Central street recently.

The families of F. J. Hamilton and Roy E. Cummings have returned to their homes here after spending the summer in camp at Forest Lake.

Mrs. Ruth Keith of Park street has been spending a part of the week in South Deerfield, where she played the wedding march Wednesday at the marriage of a former normal school classmate, Miss Martha Hildreth.

George Skelly, of the Northern Railroad Co., Costa Rica, C. A., formerly of Palmer, visited friends in town the first of the week on his way to his home in Norwich, Ct., for a several weeks' vacation. He is employed by the same company as George Roche, who recently went to that section of the country.

WARE.

Celebrated 70th Birthday.

Marbel F. Bacon, oldest son of the late Freeman and Mary Hamilton Bacon, celebrated his 70th birthday Sunday afternoon at his home on the Palmer road. He was the recipient of many handsome and useful presents. An enjoyable family gathering was held, about 40 being present, including three brothers and two sisters and their families. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Charles T. Bacon of Amherst, Mr. and Mrs. Nelson F. Bacon, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert W. Bacon and Elizabeth M. Thayer of Ware, Charles S. Short and family of Scituate, Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Gates of Springfield, Mrs. E. A. Carter of Hingham, Miss Bertha L. Mareau of Worcester, Fisk H. Bacon and family of Monson, J. E. Kempton and family of Palmer, Mr. and Mrs. A. Nelson, Thomas Lester and family, Miss Grace Bacon and John J. Bacon and family of Ware and Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Gates of Springfield.

Amelia Martin, the 15-years-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. Martin, died Sunday morning at her home on West Main street after a several weeks' illness with lung trouble. She had attended the public schools until last June. She leaves, besides her parents, two brothers, Leo and Edward. The funeral was held Tuesday morning from Mt. Carmel church, with burial in Mt. Carmel cemetery.

The marriage of Evelyn Laflamme, daughter of Frank Laflamme of Vigeant street, and Oliver Trudeau, son of Mr. and Mrs. Israel Trudeau of Springfield, took place Monday morning at 8 o'clock in Mt. Carmel church, Rev. W. J. Lucey officiating. The attendants were Louise Laflamme and Joseph Trudeau. After the ceremony dinner was served at the home of the bride.

The marriage of Miss Laura Bolduc, daughter of Mrs. Camill Bolduc of Aspen street, and Joseph Lessard, son of Alexis Lessard of Waterbury, Ct., took place Monday morning in Mt. Carmel church, Rev. J. T. Sheehan officiating. The attendants were John Decelles and Alexis Lessard. Following the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride. After a short trip the couple will live in Waterbury, where the groom is a shoe merchant.

BELCHERTOWN.

Peck—Jackson.

The marriage of Miss Mary E. Peck, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James S. Peck, and Harry P. Jackson took place Wednesday afternoon at the home of the bride. Rev. E. P. Kelly performed the ceremony in the presence of a large number of relatives. Harold Peck, brother of the bride, was best man, and Miss Esther Jackson, sister of the groom, was maid of honor. A reception was held after the ceremony, and Mr. and Mrs. Jackson left for a trip of three weeks' duration. Upon their return they will live in Springfield, where the groom is engaged in business.

Fresh Air

Young Catterburt groaned. Then he shuddered as he regarded the frost on the windows. For he was about to plunge out into the biting cold.

It is usually a girl who rouses a young man to deeds heroic or foolish and it was a particularly pretty, fluffy girl named Ethel who was responsible for young Catterburt's risking his peace of mind, to say nothing of his life, out among the pneumonia germs in the freezing air.

If Ethel had been the sort of girl who is content to make magazine cover pictures of herself before a blazing log fire, or if she had loved to preside over steamy chafing dishes young Catterburt would have been extremely happy in her company. But Ethel had a mania for outdoor exercise. Apparently she never remained in the house if she could create an excuse to get out, and young Catterburt, being her constant shadow, had to go along. He didn't dare not to go, for fear some of his rivals would spring in and usurp his place.

This winter Ethel had led him a merry pace. He had not dreamed when he became acquainted with her in the summer than she was going to turn out to be that kind, for she had seemed particularly fragile and clinging. The things she could not invent now to do out of doors could have been recited in half a minute. Sunday afternoons when young Catterburt would drop in for a comfortable call Ethel would greet him with energy "I'm so glad you've come," she would say. 'Isn't it the most perfect day for a walk? I'm simply dy-y-ing to get out. Don't take off your coat, for I'll have my things on in a jiffy!"

Then she would make young Catterburt tramp nine or eleven miles with a thousand stinging needles of cold jabbing into his agonized countenance and his feet growing so numb that he knew he would have to excuse himself the instant he got back to her door and say, "Beg pardon—I'll be back just as soon as I get my toes amputated." She would lead him to the arctic shores of the lake and ask him if it didn't look lovely, while gallons of icy breeze sneaked down his collar.

If he asked her to go to the theater she would beg him to take her skating instead. Skating as an amusement appealed to young Catterburt as a very special kind of progressive insanity.

This particular evening another skating expedition was on the carpet. Young Catterburt's face was so cold when he reached Ethel's that he couldn't talk. He didn't want to talk anyhow, for he was feeling considerably abused and harried by fate. Ethel, so bundled in furs that she looked like an Eskimo, was full of gay chatter. It added to his resentment.

Finally even she bent her head to the bitter night wind and plodded on in silence, which was broken only by the clang of their swinging skates.

Suddenly Ethel halted. She got around back of young Catterburt much as though he were an inanimate windbreak, and made queer little noises. They sounded like frozen sobs.

Whaz zhu matter?" Chatterburt got out. He couldn't force his numb lips open far enough really to talk.

"O-o-oh!" Ethel wept. "It's simply horrid of you! It's all your fault! It's no way to treat a girl! It's brutal—making me go outdoors in w-w-weather like th-th-this!"

"I—make you!" Catterburt stattered aghast. "You were d-d-dying to go!"

"I'll prob-prob'ly die, all right," Ethel told him indignantly, "but it's your fault! You said once you l-l-liked athletic, outdoor girls—and I've been one all winter, and I hate it, and I simply won't any more, and I don't care if I never s-s-see you again! O-o-oh! My eye-lashes are all fr-fr frozen togeth-gether!"

"Ethel," young Catterburt chattered wildly, "I f-f-feel now that I can love you madly. After we get somewhere and drink about two quarts of hot coffee apiece I'm g-g-going to t-t-tell you ab-b-bout it!"—Chicago Daily News.

One on the Tenor.

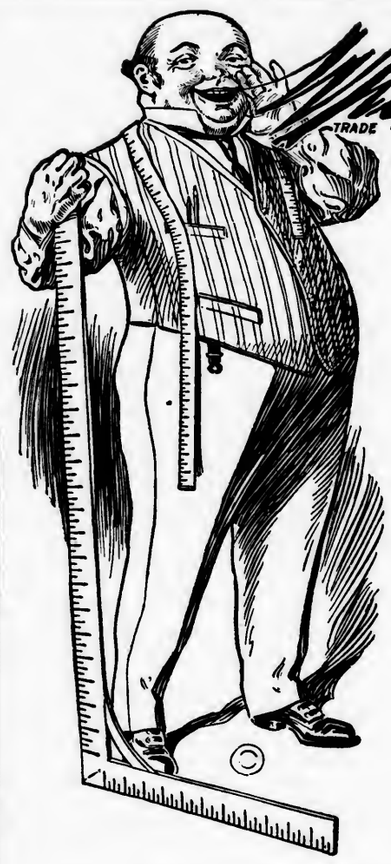
John McCormack, the Irish tenor, told the following story on himself at a dinner of the Irish society in New York recently:

"My wife and I had been entertained at dinner by Archbishop Ireland of St Paul," said Mr. McCormack. "After the dinner my wife and I both sang for the prelate, and when Mrs. McCormack had finished the archbishop turned to me and said: 'You should be very proud of such a talented wife.'

"'Indeed I am,' I replied with enthusiasm.

"'This is the first time he ever made such a confession,' said my wife, looking at the archbishop with a twinkle in her eye.



"'He couldn't make a confession in a better place,' remarked one of the guests, indicating the archbishop.

"'True,' smiled the prelate, 'but I cannot forgive him, because he isn't sorry for it.'"

Moslem Faith Growing.

The proportion of Mohammedans to the aggregate population of India has steadily risen since 1881. It is estimated that the number of Moslems under British authority in the Indian empire is now 68,000,000 as compared with 50,000,000 30 years ago.

MORTGAGEE'S SALE OF REAL ESTATE.

By virtue of a power of sale contained in a certain mortgage deed given by Thomas C. Carroll to Herbert A. Northrop, dated February 11, 1909, and recorded in the Registry of Deeds for the County of Hampden, Book 755, Page 78, for breach of the condition contained in said mortgage and for the purpose of foreclosing the same, will be sold at public auction, on the premises, on Saturday, the twenty-eighth day of September, 1912, at two o'clock in the afternoon, all and singular the premises conveyed by said mortgage deed, namely:—

A certain tract of land with the buildings thereon, situate on the northerly side of the Carpet Mill road leading from Park street to the Carpet Mill in said Palmer and bounded and described as follows:—Commencing at an iron pin in the ground on the northerly line of said road, thence running at right angles with said road about eight (8) rods to an iron pin in the ground, thence westerly about five (5) rods parallel with said road to an iron pin in the ground; thence southerly parallel with first line about eight (8) rods to the road; thence westerly on the line of said road about five (5) rods to first mentioned bound, containing one-fourth of an acre more or less, subject to the rights of the Palmer Water Company. The first mentioned bound is about thirty (30) rods westerly from an angle in the road bounded by a walnut tree. The aforesaid premises are a part of land conveyed by the heirs of Laura A. Parks to A. J. and H. A. Northrop by deed dated August 18th, 1887, and recorded in Hampden County Registry of Deeds, Book 439, Page 206.

This sale will be made subject to all unpaid taxes or other municipal assessments, and $100 will be required to be paid in cash by the purchaser at the time and place of sale, as earnest money. Further terms will be made known at the time and place of sale.

THORNDIKE.

Death of Mrs. Martha J. Moores.

Mrs. Martha J. Mooers, 94, died at her home in Thorndike Sunday evening at 9 o'clock, after a two-weeks' illness.

Martha J. Dennison was the daughter of William G. and Esther Dennison, and was born in Orwell, Pa., August 14, 1818. Her father later bought a farm in Stafford, Ct., where he died about 80 years ago. The family then removed to Three Rivers. Martha Dennison was married October 10, 1839, to George Mooers and removed to Thorndike, where she had since lived. The couple celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary in 1899.

Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Mooers, the younger, Frank G., dying in 1866, and George Dennison Mooers, the elder, is a resident of Thorndike and had cared for his mother since the death of her husband.

Mrs. Mooers was a member of the First Congregational church in Thorndike, and was present at the installation of Rev. Moses K. Cross in 1842, before its removal from the old Center to Thorndike.

The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon from her late home on Commercial street, Rev. C. C. Gorst officiating. Burial was in the family lot at Four Corners cemetery. The bearers were S. E. Thayer, Martin M. Thomas, John O. Hamilton, Malcolm McKenzie.

Death of Mrs. John Crimmins.

Indian Orchard 2—Bondsville 1.

A large crowd witnessed Indian Orchard defeat Bondsville Saturday on the former's grounds, 2 to 1. The game was a pitchers' battle between Bennett and Pike, and if either had been given any kind of support many innings would have been required to give either team the decision. Bennett struck out 12 men and passed one, while Pike fanned nine batters and also issued one pass. Bondsville outhit the home team nearly three to one, but Pike was strong in the pinches and they couldn't make a hit when a hit was needed, seven of their men being left stranded on the paths. ### Wilbraham Academy Opens.

Wilbraham Academy was opened Wednesday on its new basis as a boys' school, after being closed since June, 1911. Twenty-five boys are enrolled, and there are 10 members of the senior class. Nearly all the members are graduates of high schools and are at Wilbraham this year making special preparation for college.

A TRIBUTE TO "SILENT BILL."

That Will be Appreciated in Eastern Hampden County.

Out on the famous old Quaboag
Where sings the sacred owl and frog,
Beneath the mountain pine tree's shade
In Western Brimfield's fairest glade,
Lives "Silent Bill," a sportsman rare
With whom but few e'er could compare.

A Nature lover fond and true,
Who dreads to bid a brook adieu,
Is Bill, who loves a rod and reel,
A line, a hook, and spacious creel.
And when a trout is pulling hard
His eyes stick out about a yard.

But Bill's regard for springtime fish
Is nought compared to his heart's wish
When autumn zephyrs softly blow
The forest leaflets to and fro.
'Tis then the hills he loves to roam.
'Tis then the woodland is his home.

From Berkshire through to Boston town,
Bill is a man of some renown.
By many he's considered quaint,
While others laugh until they faint,
When he relates some things alleged
Without the proof, but strongly pledged.

For he's a man somewhat unique
And quite a hand his mind to speak.
So if you chance to pass his way,
Remember what I'm going to say.
He'll "gab" if you but mention gun.
Until the setting of the sun.

And if you are a devotee,
Or, tell him that you want to be,
Of that grand sport so prized by all
True sportsmen who have heard the "call,"
Then Bill will open wide his door
And say "remain for evermore."

Then Madam Bill of pleasing mien,
As good a cook as e'er was seen,
Will to the larder quickly go
With cheerful eye and heart aglow,
And soon a meal fit for the gods
Will set before your empty pods.

Perhaps a grouse, bagged by her hand
Broiled to a turn, delicious! and,
Perchance the trouting season's on,
Some "beauties" served a la bon-bon:
For when it comes to grouse or trout,
The Madam knows what she's about.

And when the feast is well along,
Bill will begin his siren song.
And every incident of strife
Pertaining to his outdoor life
He will exploit with earnest vim,
So characteristic of him.

Then for an hour he'll dwell upon
The subject of his once famed Don.
His intellect of human kind,
Apparent to all men not blind;
His deep affection, and a nose
That scented birds a mile, I s'pose.
For Don had qualities more rare
Than any known, as Bill will swear.

His picture standing proud and still,
Drawn by the hand of Madam Bill,
Adorns the wall of their domain
Where Don will ne'er be seen again;
For now he sleeps beneath the shade
Of Western Brimfield's fairest glade.

For 20 years has Silent Bill
Made history, a book to fill.
And while you listen to his tale,
No efforts on your part avail;
For Bill believes the maxim old
That what's worth telling should be told.

At 2 o'clock you yawn, and try
To break away and close your eye.
But Bill is always keen; alert,
Your ribs he'll poke, you can't divert
Him, from his sacred solemn theme
By any diplomatic scheme.

And so more talk will follow on,
Vocabulary Marathon,
And you will see, before he's done,
The early rising of the sun,
For Bill knows neither time nor space,
When bird and fish lore fills his face.

But after once he's kept you up
All night, just talking gun and pup,
You won't regret; for Bill's a prince,
And then, besides, those pies of mince,
Pot roasts, onions, grouse and fish,
Creates in part, a sacred wish.

A wish once more to visit Bill,
And get your heart and stomach's fill
Of friendship's joys, of grouse and trout,
And, there to ramble all about
With "Silent Bill" and his good wife
Who understand the joys of life.

John B. Smith.

Got Neatly Over Difficulty.

The mayor of a French town had, in accordance with the regulations, to make out a passport for a rich and highly respectable lady of his acquaintance, who, in spite of a slight disfigurement, was very vain of her personal appearance. His native politeness prompted him to gloss over the defect, and, after a moment's reflection, he wrote among the items of personal description: 'Eyes dark, beautiful, tender, expressive, but one of them missing."

Sun Power Wasted.

Measurements have shown that on a clear, sunny day the sun transmitted to the earth energy which corresponded to about 7,000 horsepower per acre. At present all that is practically wasted, or rather generally in localities where any addition to the temperature could well be dispensed with. Attempts have from time to time been made to utilize this enormous supply of energy, but not with any great measure of success.

Academy Graduates Wed.

Pretty Ceremony at Well Known Couple's Nuptials Saturday.

A very pretty wedding took place at the home of Mrs. Joseph Carpenter of Sunnyset Farm on East Hill last Saturday afternoon, when her daughter, Alice May, and Arthur Vaile, son of H. D. Vaile of Edgewood Farm, were united in marriage. The ceremony was performed by Rev. G. A. Andrews, pastor of the Congregational church. The interior of the home was very prettily decorated with hydrangeas, asters and asparagus under the direction of W. H. Pease. A large number of relatives, friends and invited guests were present. As the bridal party entered the sitting room, in which the ceremony was performed, Miss Emily Carpenter, a cousin of the bride, played the wedding march. The maid of honor was Miss Florence Carpenter of Springfield, and the best man was Walter Carpenter, a brother of the bride. The flower girls were Helen Anderson of Monson and Alice Hitchcock of Providence, R. I. The ushers were Ernest Carpenter of Monson and Stanley Smith of Westfield.

The bride's gown was white voile with shadow lace over white satin, and she carried a bouquet of white asters. The maid of honor wore pink silk and carried a bouquet of violet asters. The bride's gift to the maid of honor was a violet pin, the groom's gift to the best man was a scarf pin, and to the ushers necktie clasps. The flower girls' gifts were beauty pins.

Following the ceremony a reception was held and refreshments were served. Many handsome and valuable presents were received. Guests were present from Palmer, Springfield, Westfield, and Providence, R. I. After a short wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Vaile will make their home at Edgewood Farm. Both the young people are well known in Monson, they are graduates of the Monson public school and of Monson Academy, the bride in the class of 1901 and the bridegroom in the class of 1900.

Improvement of Mail Service.

More changes in the mail service, which will improve the same, have been brought about by changes in the schedule of the Central Vermont and the electric railway. Postmaster Seymour has been in communication with the superintendent of the mail service for several weeks to satisfactorily arrange a schedule, and at present the service is the best that the town ever had. The schedule is as follows: Mail arrivals, 6.10 a. m., from all directions, electric; 7.05 a. m., from the south, registered mail; 7.40 from the north, east and west, registered; 1.40 p. m., all directions; 5 p. m., south registered; 5.45, all directions, registered; the mails will close at 6.35 a. m., for all directions, registered; 9.35 a. m., all directions, the south and west mails, registered, east and north, electric; 11.20, all directions; 1.40 p. m., all directions, electric; 4.30, north, west and east, registered; 6.10, south, west and east, registered; 7.10, all directions.

Frank Holloway of South Monson, who has for several years had charge of the road construction about town under S. M. Stebbins, has accepted a similar position with the state highway commissioners and has charge of a gang of men in Fiskdale.

ABIDING PLACE OF MICROBES

Elliminate the Vacant Seat and the Church Will Bloom Into Splendid Health.

There are microbes that are menacing the church with dire defeats; they're bacilli that produce the plague entitled Vacant Seats. There's an influence arising from these weary, dreary pews, that's as pestilential as the breath of rank, malarial dews. If diagnosis we would make of churches void of heat, we'd find the mercury had dropped down in the vacant seat. The doctors ought to busy get, the church's health to save, because this situation is becoming very grave. Napoleon wished once, 'tis said, to break a conquered bell; his soldiers swung their hammers free, and pounded hard and well; but firm, uninjured, strong, it stood, resisting every stroke, until they hit from the inside, and then, it quickly broke. Thus what the church needs most to fear, is not the outside sin, but spineless, lackadaisical inanity within. And that which blocks and trips the church, and rolls her down the stair, is the nominal adherent who, however, isn't there. If we could but eliminate this stunting empty seat, the church would soar in glorious flight, amazingly complete. There is a remedy that works at any time and place; it's every one, at every time, and always, in his place. If you would give this formula a keen, conclusive search, just try it well, next Sunday, at the Presbyterian church, or any place of worship where you feel you'd like to be, and the medicine and healing you'll find tally to a T.—The Continent.

FORBES & WALLACE OPENING.

Of the New and Remodeled Store.

The opening of the new and remodeled Forbes & Wallace store in Springfield is an event of unusual interest to everyone throughout Western New England. This establishment has reached a development remarkable in a city the size of Springfield. In service, the wide assortments, convenient arrangement and attractive display of stocks it does not suffer in comparison with the great stores in the large cities like New York and Boston.

The building of the new five-story Vernon street addition and the extensive reconstruction and remodeling of the entire store, which has been going on for the last nineteen months, is completed. The work has been in many respects one of the most remarkable undertakings in local building history, on account of the difficulties incident to carrying it on without interruption to business. That it has been done without serious accident speaks highly for the care of the builders and the precautions taken by the firm.

This addition of 100,000 square feet to the area of the store has been made necessary by the rapid increase in the business during the past few years. It marks a notable period of expansion, and to fittingly observe the occasion Forbes & Wallace are holding a formal opening this week, on a scale never before attempted. The elaborate preparations have included many attractions of exceptional interest.

These, together with the fine equipment which has been perfected for the efficient transaction of business, the beautiful new furnishings and the unprecedently large and carefully chosen stocks of new fall merchandise which have been assembled is making this the most important and interesting event ever held in this section of New England. The opening began yesterday, and the celebration will be continued throughout the week.

FAIR EXCHANGE

A New Back for an Old One. How it Can be Done in Palmer.

The back aches at times with a dull, indescribable feeling, making you weary and restless; piercing pains shoot across the region of the kidneys, and again the loins are so lame that to stoop is agony. No use to rub or apply a plaster to the back if the kidneys are weak. You cannot reach the cause. Palmer residents would do well to profit by the following example.

G. H. Morgan, North Wilbraham, Mass., says: "It is now ten years since I used Doan's Kidney Pills, but I have not forgotten the great relief I obtained from this remedy. I had a severe case of kidney trouble of several years' standing and was unable to find anything that would help me. My back ached constantly and I often felt lame all over. The kidney secretions were irregular in passage and attended by a burning sensation when being voided. Upon a friend's advice, I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills and in a short time they cured me. The cure has proven to be a permanent one and consequently I value Doan's Kidney Pills very highly."

Crawford Parlor Stoves

Crawford "Parlor"

"Crawford Parlor." A genuine indirect draft stove with full return flue; the smoke passes down between the firepot and the outside casing of the stove to a flue beneath the ashpan, thence up and out through the back smoke pipe to the chimney, giving more heat and burning less coal. The grate center slides forward for dumping. Large clinker door; wide, deep ashpan; dust damper; nickel rails removable. Four sizes.

"Tropic" Crawford

"Tropic Crawford." With or without down draft back pipe. Draw center grate. Best stove made at the price. Nickel rails removable.

Crawford "Wood Parlor"

Crawford "Wood Parlor." In this new heating stove for wood the front door swings open to give the effect of a fire-place. By moving a slide in this door the fire can be seen without opening the door itself. The slide openings are protected by wire gauze. The main top swings to one side and underneath it is a large plate that lifts to admit large pieces of wood.

This stove is made in both direct and indirect draft styles. It is strongly made and very handsome. Three sizes, to burn 19, 22 or 25 inch lengths.

Her Impulsive Way

"Why, Alice, didn't you go out to lunch today?"

"No, I didn't." The stenographer did not look up from the crocheting, "and what's more, there'll be no rest for me noons, nights, or Sundays, Caroline, until these table mats are done."

"I wasn't aware thta you were in any immediately need of table mats," pursued the bookkeeper. "Isn't this rather sudden?"

"They aren't for me, worse luck. When I need household goods I'll let you know, never fear. These mats are for another and they are long overdue." The stenographer laughed bitterly. "Behold in me a victim of the habit of promising in haste to repent when repentance is entirely useless."

"What?"

"I mean that I'm one of those unfortunate impulsive persons who are always gratuitously and recklessly offering to do things for people. Observe these mats. There was really no reason why I should undertake the manufacture of eighteen doilies, six of each of the three sizes, you know, for a person like Mrs. Corwine, but when she told me that Mr. Corwine had bought her a beautiful mahogany dining table I at once said, without considering the matter at all, automatically, you know that I would make her a set of mats for it. She took me up with a jump and hoped I'd do the pineapple pattern. It's the most difficult stitch I know.

"Now she is probably wondering when I'm ever going to get them done The truth is that I've only just been able to begin them, for I've been spending every spare minute for the last month on the border of French knots that in a moment of abstraction I promised to embroider on Gertrude Lane's white marquisette dress. She bought it ready made and she thought it looked to plain, so, of course, I suggested the French dots and when she said that she didn't know how to make them, I volunteered to do them for her.

"For four long weeks those knots have haunted me. Every evening that I've wished to read or play cards I've been obliged to stick to the dots, and the worst of it is that my offer to do them was made so casually that Gertrude has no realization of what a Herculean task they were. I wouldn't feel so sorry for myself as I do if I thought I were receiving proper credit for my labor.

"It's the same way with these doilies. Mrs. Corwine thinks that because I said in a light and airy way that I'd make them they're a mere amusement or pastime for me. Did you ever know such a goose as I am—to get myself into doing things and to hate myself for it? I'm one of those who jump in where angels fear to tread."

The bookkeeper laughed, and Alice continuing to crochet violently, continued:

"You ought to be thankful you haven't the habit. It gets one into all sorts of entanglements. A few weeks ago I met some suburban friends on the street. They appeared so pleased to see me that before I really thought what I was doing I asked them to come to town some day and have lunch with me, and I promised to let them know very soon just what day to come. That luncheon, for which I can neither afford the time nor the money, and which wasn't in the least called for, has hung on my neck like a millstone. The thought of it has worried and depressed me ever since The event comes tomorrow, and then after these mats are done, I'm through! I shall not mortgage my time, money and industry any more Hear me vow!"

"Yes, I hear it." The other young woman assumed an accusing air. "But what about my essay for the Young Women's league that I wanted you to type for me this week?"

"Oh, your essay—certainly I'll type write that for you, dear. I can do it after hours, just as well as not."

Caroline laughed derisively.

"But that's different," protested Alice guiltily. "Typing for you is quite different from—"

"Yes, of course it's different, kiddo Everything is different but you. You are just the same dear, reckless promiser as ever, despite your hard hearted, strong minded resolutions. But anyway, you can't type my essay for I've already hired it done."

"You mean thing! You know I should have loved to do it for you!"

"Talk about helpless cases," laughed Caroline.—Chicago Daily News.

Carry Your Wagon.

A northern man who had recently taken possession of a southern plantation found that in many ways the people spoke a different language from his own. By mistake a carload of supplies had been left at a railway station seven miles away and he was bothered about getting it to the plantation "Why don't you carry your wagon up and tote the things down?" a sympathizing southerner asked him. The northern man laughed heartily at this expression and repeated it to others Instead of laughing they looked at him, wondering where the joke was, and he realized that to "carry" your wagon and tote things back was the proper idiomatic expression. He even heard young men asking young ladies if they might "carry" them to dances. —New York Herald

Knew What It Was.

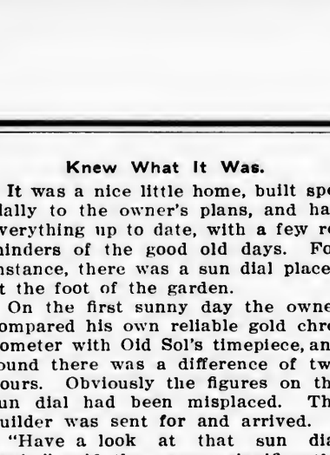
It was a nice little home, built specially to the owner's plans, and had everything up to date, with a few reminders of the good old days. For instance, there was a sun dial placed at the foot of the garden.



On the first sunny day the owner compared his own reliable gold chronometer with Old Sol's timepiece, and found there was a difference of two hours. Obviously the figures on the sun dial had been misplaced. The builder was sent for and arrived.

"Have a look at that sun dial again," said the owner, significantly. 'It makes the time 11:00 a. m., and as a matter of fact the correct time is 1:00 p. m."

The builder looked long and earnestly at his handiwork, and then slapped his leg.

"Ah!" he exclaimed, with a proud ring in his voice. "I see wot it is, sir. There's something wrong with the sun."

SLICK MANAGER

"No; a profitable success. The manager converted us into vegetarians, and we didn't have a single restaurant bill."

From New England Women

Prove that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Does Restore the Health of Ailing Women.

Boston, Mass.—"I was passing through the Change of Life and suffered from hemorrhages (sometimes lasting for weeks), and could get nothing to check them. I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound (tablet form) on Tuesday, and the following Saturday morning the hemorrhages stopped. I have taken them regularly ever since and am steadily gaining.

"I certainly think that every one who is troubled as I was should give your Compound Tablets a faithful trial, and they will find relief."—Mrs. GEORGE JUBY, 802 Fifth Street, South Boston, Mass.

Letter from Mrs. Julia King, Phœnix, R.I.

Phœnix, R.I.—"I worked steady in the mill from the time I was 12 years old until I had been married a year, and I think that caused my bad feelings. I had soreness in my side near my left hip that went around to my back, and sometimes I would have to lie in bed for two or three days. I was not able to do my housework.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped me wonderfully in every way. You may use my letter for the good of others. I am only too glad to do anything within my power to recommend your medicine."—Mrs. JULIA KING, Box 282, Phœnix. R.I.

Letter from Mrs. Etta Donovan, Willimantic, Conn.

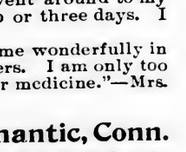
Willimantic, Conn.—"For five years I suffered untold agony from female troubles causing backache, irregularities, dizziness, and nervous prostration. It was impossible for me to walk up stairs without stopping on the way. I was all run down in every way.

"I tried three doctors and each told me something different. I received no benefit from any of them but seemed to suffer more. The last doctor said it was no use for me to take anything as nothing would restore me to health again. So I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to see what it would do, and by taking seven bottles of the Compound and other treatment you advised, I am restored to my natural health."—Mrs. ETTA DONOVAN, 762 Main Street, Willimantic, Conn.

Letter from Mrs. Winfield Dana, Augusta, Me.

Augusta, Me.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has cured the backache, headache, and the bad pain I had in my right side, and I am perfectly well."—Mrs. WINFIELD DANA, R.F.D. No. 2, Augusta, Me.

Letter from Mrs. J. A. Thompson, Newport, Vt.



Newport, Vt.—"I thank you for the great benefit Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done me. I took eight bottles and it did wonders for me, as I was a nervous wreck when I began taking it. I shall always speak a good word for it to my friends."—Mrs. JOHN A. THOMPSON, Box 3, Newport Center, Vermont.

Letter from Miss Grace Dodds, Bethlehem, N.H.

Bethlehem, N.H.—"By working very hard, sweeping carpets, washing, ironing, lifting heavy baskets of clothes, etc., I got all run down. I was sick in bed every month.

"This last Spring my mother got Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for me, and already I feel like another girl. I am regular and do not have the pains that I did, and do not have to go to bed. I will tell all my friends what the Compound is doing for me."—Miss GRACIE B. DODDS, Box 133, Bethlehem, N.H.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No one sick with woman's ailments does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine, made from roots and herbs, it has restored so many suffering women to health.

All these testimonials are guaranteed genuine and truthful. The original of each came to us entirely unsolicited. They are sincere expressions of gratitude for actual benefits received from the medicine.

Most Big Fires Spread Because of Wooden Roofs

The cheapest fire insurance is to roof your buildings with Penco Metal Shingles. They will keep your house safe if there is a fire nearby.

Penco TRADE MARK 1869 METAL SHINGLES

cost no more than good wooden shingles, they last as long, look better and do not "spring aleak" nearly as often. Our clamp joint keeps out all moisture. Nails are not exposed and can't pull out. The warm, red brown of these shingles is the most attractive color for a roof. They afford almost perfect protection from lightning. Because they are light in weight, they put only one-third to one-fourth as much strain on rafters as wood or slate.

Any tinsmith, carpenter or dealer in hardware and building material can supply and lay a Penco roof for you that will give you the best satisfaction. They are just the thing for siding. The larger size Penco Shingles are splendidly adapted to laying over old wooden shingles. Penco Shingles are galvanized or painted.

OFFICERS ARE STONED.

Row at Polish Wedding Dance Tuesday Night.

PRISONER RESCUED AFTER ARREST.

One Officer Hit Three Times. Take Man At Point of Gun. Original Offender Escapes.

Officers Holt and Manning had a lively time while trying to make an arrest at a Polish wedding celebration in Three Rivers Tuesday evening. Incidently enough stones to make a respectable macadam road were hurled at the officers, and Manning was hit three times. The officers finally managed to arrest one man who was seen to throw a stone, but in the melee the man whom they originally had in possession escaped.

The usual dance following a Polish wedding was being held in Ruggles Hall, and late in the evening trouble sprang up in the hall. Just what the row was does not appear, but practically the entire attendance began a hunt for the disturber, which was adjourned to the outside of the building, where a general scrimmage was soon in progress. Officer Holt arrived on the scene and arrested the man who started the muss. Instantly every person in sight set on the officer with intent to rescue the prisoner. Officer Manning arrived about this time and was at once included in the battering which was being handed to Holt. Stones were freely thrown at the officers and Manning was hit three times. Both officers were hurt more or less, but not seriously. Finally they managed to secure John Sinka, who had been seen to throw a stone, and he was removed from the midst of the throng at the point of a revolver and lodged in the lockup. In the meantime the first man arrested by Holt had managed to get away and was not to be found.

Sinka appeared in the district court Wednesday morning charged with assault on an officer. He was found guilty and sentenced to six months in the house of correction. He appealed and furnished bail for future appearance.

WARREN.

Thomas W. Cummings, the five-years-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter W. Cummings of West Warren, is ill with scarlet fever.

Miss Katherine Flower has returned to Philadelphia after spending several weeks with Mr. and Mrs. George R. Coster on Moore avenue.

Winthrop Hosley has gone to Providence, R. I., where he has taken a position as assistant in the Morris Heights private school for boys.

Division 21 of Hibernians has elected George N. King, James McKelligott, George Ranchor and Patrick Naughton as delegates to the county convention at Worcester Sunday.

William Shuttleworth, who is employed in the office of the Steam Pump company, fell down the circular stairway which leads up to the drafting room Wednesday and sustained a bad cut in his chin.

The engagement of Miss Elsie Warner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Cannon of Beverly, to Arthur Wendell Taylor, formerly of Warren, now of Salem, is announced. Mr. Taylor is a member of the faculty of the Salem high school.

Robert Brosseau, who was injured in a railroad accident about two months ago, and who has been in a hospital in Brattleboro since, has been brought to the home of his parents on Washington street. He is suffering from a serious injury to his spine.

An automobile traveling at a good rate of speed picked up a stone Tuesday noon and hurled it through the window of E. C. Bliss's market, breaking a large light of glass. Mr. Bliss succeeded in stopping the auto in Palmer and the owner, T. A. Rivinius of Cambridge, agreed to pay the cost upon presentation of a bill.

Elizabeth Clark Nims, the four-years-old daughter of Superintendent W. E. Nims, died Wednesday evening of acute nephritis. She had been ill for ten days with diphtheria and three days ago nephritis developed. A private funeral service was conducted at the house yesterday afternoon by Rev. John L. Findlay and burial was in Pine Grove cemetery.

At a meeting of the executive committee of the Men's League of the Congregational church Monday the following sub-committees were appointed: On speaker, Rev. John L. Findlay, Wesley E. Nims and William E. Patrick; entertainment, C. D. Perkins, Joseph G. Hastings, Frank W. Bliss, Frank M. Gilbert and Charles H. Klebart; music, Alfred L. Converse, William H. Hitchcock, Harold Davis and George E. Ryeroft. The first meeting of the season will be held October 7th.

25th Wedding Anniversary.

Wilbraham Couple Entertain Friends at Their Home Last Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence E. Pease celebrated the 25th anniversary of their marriage last Friday evening, when they received a large number of their friends. Mrs. Pease was gowned in her wedding dress, which was of brown silk. They were the recipients of a large number of presents, some coming from California and New Hampshire. Among them was a handsome clock from the Maple-street social club and flowers from a study club, of which Mrs. Pease is a member. Friends were present from Indian Orchard and Ludlow, including Mrs. Pease's Sunday school class. Refreshments were served. Mr. and Mrs. Pease were married in Ludlow September 20, 1887, by Rev. Mr. Day, who was pastor at that time. After their wedding trip, spent in the Berkshires, they returned to their present home, where they have since lived. Mr. and Mrs. Pease have two sons, Ray and Walter.

WARE.

William Dillon of West Warren, while driving on South street near the hospital Saturday night, in some way ran into John Gurka, 11 years old, of South street, knocking him down and inflicting minor injuries. The boy was taken to the hospital and attended by Dr. W. W. Miner.

The annual meeting of the Ware hospital and visiting nurse association was held Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock. The following officers were elected: Secretary, Mrs. G. F. A. Spencer; treasurer, Mrs. A. G. Blodgett; directors for three years, Mrs. M. W. Pearson, Mrs. Henry K. Hyde, Mrs. D. M. Ryan, Mrs. G. F. A. Spencer, Mrs. H. E. Slate, Mrs. Andrew Bryson. At the meeting of directors the following were elected: President, Mrs. H. K. Hyde; first vice president, Mrs. H. G. Gilbert; second vice president, Mrs. J. T. Wood; third vice president, Mrs. Andrew Bryson; auditor, O. N. Moore.

The so-called Cheever swamp lying in the rear of the houses along West Main street and St. William's cemetery, is again the subject of considerable comment. It has been claimed for years that its condition created a menace to the health of people living in the neighborhood. Last week Amelia Martin, a 15-years-old girl, died at her home on West Main street, bordering the swamp. In the certificate of death returned to the office of the town clerk the secondary or contributory cause was given as due to "unsanitary drainage." Members of the board of health say they will make an effort to do away with this swamp. They say the matter has been reported to the state board of health and that Dr. J. V. Boyd of Springfield, one of the state inspectors, has looked the place over and reported that conditions should be alleviated at once.

HAMPDEN.

Whitaker-Adolphson.

The marriage of Miss Florence B. Whitaker, daughter of C. N. Whitaker of Hampden, and Charles Adolphson of Springfield took place Tuesday afternoon at 5 o'clock at the home of Mrs. Sophia M. Beebe, grandmother of the bride. Rev. R. W. Bennett performed the ceremony in the presence of immediate relatives. The couple received a fine array of gifts. After a wedding trip, the couple will make their home in Springfield. Mr. Adolphson is a railroad mail clerk.

H. H. Heath of Artesian, S. D., is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Sessions.

The peach orchard of H. H. Thresher was recently damaged by deer. The damage was estimated at $93.

A registration meeting was held last Saturday evening, when seven names were added to the voters' list, the total number now being 158.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

Miss Nellie Fuller has returned from Hopkinton, where she has been the guest of her brother, Raymond Fuller.

Mr. and Mrs. William Joy and daughter Dorothy will return to-morrow from a several weeks' vacation in New York state.

Mrs. Walter Lyman of East Wilbraham has taken a position in the sorting room of the Collins Manufacturing company.

H. Willis Cutler and daughter, Rachel, returned Monday after spending the summer at Woodmont, Ct., and in the White mountains.

HOLLAND.

Mrs. Laura Blodgett and daughter, Miss Delia, have returned from a visit in Union, Ct.

A meeting of the library trustees was held with Arthur G. Childs last week. They planned to open the library from 12 to 1.30 on Sundays.

WALKER AND FOSS WIN.

Result of State Primaries Held Tuesday Night.

TOTAL VOTE LARGER THAN YEAR AGO

Ball Defeats Stebbins in First Hampden Representative District. List Of Delegates Chosen.

The state primaries, which were held Tuesday evening, resulted in the nomination for governor of Joseph Walker by the Republicans and the renomination of Governor Eugene N. Foss by the Democrats. Everett C. Benton, who was Walker's opponent, was beaten by 10,862 votes in a total of 97,465, while Gov. Foss led District Attorney Pelletier by 27,294 in a total of 100,166. The total vote of both parties was 197,662, against 180,587 last year. As showing the small percentage of voters attending the primaries, it is interesting to note that the total vote for governor last year was 440,200.

The only local contest was that for the Republican nomination in the First Hampden representative district, where Freelon Q. Ball and Sherman Stebbins of Monson were both after honor. Mr. Stebbins put much work into the last days of the campaign, but was defeated by exactly 2 to 1, the vote in the district being 178 for Ball to 89 for Stebbins. The Democratic nominee in this district was Richard S. Hughes of Monson, there being no opposition.

In the County offices County Commissioner Charles C. Spellman was renominated by both the Democrats and Republicans, his opponent on the latter ticket being Adrian L. Potter of Springfield, a native of Three Rivers in Palmer. Fred A. Bearse of Springfield was renominated by both parties for county treasurer without opposition.

The figures below will give the vote of the towns near Palmer for governor.

BURNS PROVE FATAL.

Woman Dies From Effects of Oil Explosion.

WAS ENGAGED PREPARING DINNER.

Husband Seriously Burned in Trying to Extinguish Flames on His Wife's Clothing.

Mrs. Wladyslaus Likarozyk of Three Rivers was fatally burned by the explosion of a kerosene oil can while preparing dinner in her home Wednesday noon, dying that night in the Springfield hospital as the result of her injuries.

It is not known just how the occurrence took place, but the woman was about the stove making preparations for the meal, and it is supposed that she used the oil to kindle or stimulate the fire. The first her husband knew was that there was a loud explosion, and rushing to his wife's assistance he found her clothing in flames. He summoned help and the fire was put out, but not before she had been very badly burned.

Dr. C. H. Giroux was summoned and did all possible for the sufferers, giving first aid and then taking them to the hospital in Springneld. The man was also badly burned in assisting his wife, and is still in the hospital, though he is improving and will eventually recover.

WILBRAHAM.

Miss Ruth Mossman has gone to Toronto, Ont., for a week's trip.

Miss Marjorie Watts has returned to her studies at Mt. Holyoke college.

Miss Elizabeth Pease has returned to her school duties in Canton Center, Ct., after spending the week-end at her home on Maple street.

At a special town meeting held in Grange hall Tuesday evening, a report was heard from the committee appointed at the spring town meeting to see about securing a water supply. The town voted that the committee be granted money to employ an engineer to make plans and estimates so that the town can be given an idea of a suitable supply of water at the annual town meeting. Various sources of supply were discussed.

BELCHERTOWN.

A son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry McKillop was painfully injured last week by falling in the barn. His shoulder was dislocated.

Mrs. Alice L. Kendall, who has been spending the summer at her cottage at Cliff Island, Me., has returned to her home on Maple street.

G. H. B. Greene Jr., who has been spending the summer at North Adams, has returned to Boston, where he was recently graduated from the Boston Law school, and will enter a law firm in that city.

Death of J. R. Wellman.

Was 92 Years Old, and Had Lived Most Of His Life in Palmer.

John Randolph Wellman, 92, a former resident of Palmer, died in Springfield Monday. He had made his home with his daughter, Mrs. Maria J. Hamilton, for some time.

Mr. Wellman was born in Hardwick August 13, 1820, son of Presson Mann and Phebe (Burt) Wellman. His father died in Grafton in 1841; his mother, born 1799, died in Palmer September 13, 1884.

Mr. Wellman came to Palmer about 1832, and was employed in the mill at Three Rivers for nearly 13 years. After marriage he became a farmer, and about 1865 he bought the farm of John Ward at the source of Wigwam brook, which in late years formed the water supply of Rufus Flynt's trout preserve. He resided here for many years and led an active and useful life. On his farm and elsewhere in Palmer nearly all of his active life was spent. When the Advent society was organized in Palmer he was identified with it and was a promoter of its interests.

Mr. Wellman married first, September 28, 1843, Mary M. Baldwin, born in Palmer, September 13, 1823; died February 5, 1865. She was the daughter of Moses and Roxania (Frink) Baldwin, and granddaughter of Rev. Moses Baldwin, the venerable Palmer pastor. He married second, March 2, 1868, Nancy F. Fuller, who died June 23, 1905, age 63. Mr. Wellman's children were all born in Palmer, by whom he is survived except as noted:

George Henry, born November 13, 1844; married Mrs. Carrie Johnson; died 1888 in New York city. He had served in the Civil war. John Franklin, born November 28, 1845; married Ada Ward. He died in Palmer February 16, 1876. He also had served in the Civil war. After the war he was appointed watchman at the railroad crossing in Blanchardville. He built the house opposite his father's, where he died very suddenly. Maria J., born March 22, 1849; married first, 1866, George Colgrave; married second, 1880, Edwin Cheeny; married third, 1907, William Hamilton, who resides at the camp ground in Springfield. Ella L., born September 21, 1853; married and resides in Denver, Col. Delia R., born July 8, 1858; died same year. Clara R., born January 24, 1860; died same year. William F., born August 5, 1862; married and resides in Deerfield. Bertha I., born January 10, 1872. Presson M., born March 18, 1875.

The funeral was held at his home in Springfield Wednesday; burial was in the family lot in Oak Knoll cemetery, Palmer.

WALES.

Death of Mrs. Charles H. Copp.

Mrs. Charles H. Copp, who has been in poor health for some time, died at her home last Friday morning. Mrs. Copp's maiden name was Persis Brown. She was the youngest of six children and outlived them all. She was born in 1841 in Union, Ct., and lived there until her marriage to Friend C. Smith of this town. After Mr. Smith's death she married Charles H. Copp, who survives her. Mrs. Copp was a member of the Methodist church and was deeply consecrated to its interests. The funeral was held at her home at 2 o'clock on Sunday afternoon.

Mrs. Walter Stebbins is visiting relatives in Springfield.

Miss Eva Allen spent the week-end at her home in Oakham.

Homer D. Loudon of Norwich, Ct., has been spending a few days in town.

Mrs. F. M. Royce has bought the house belonging to the late Mrs. Julia Parker.

E. D. Needham and Le Roy Needham have returned from their trip to Matunuck, R. I.

Mrs. H. E. Steele has been spending the week with Mr. and Mrs. George E. Steele in Palmer.

Arthur Williams has purchased the stone house on the old Brimfield road from N. F. Bradley.

Mrs. E. D. Shaw of Monson has been spending a few days with Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Hubbard.

Mrs. E. Shaw, Mrs. H. E. Shaw and Miss Winona Shaw have returned to Springfield for the winter.

Walter Baker has moved from the Boynton house to the Drechsler place, which he has recently purchased.

Peter Robichand has moved from the Daniel Shaw place to the Salem Shaw house opposite Thompson's store.

T. J. Hynes and James Hynes, who are now engaged in building a large concrete bridge at Turners Falls, spent Sunday at their home in this town.

Mrs. John Royce, who has resided in town for many years, has gone to Bondsville, where she will make her home with her daughter, Mrs. Mary Odell.

CHIEF SUMMERS HURT.

Pinned In Wreck Under Overturned Automobile.

NO ASSISTANCE FROM PASSING CAR.

Legs Paralyzed, But Make Rapid Recovery. No Serious Hurts. Narrow Escape.

Chief James Summers of the Palmer fire department had an extremely narrow escape from serious injuries Tuesday evening in an automobile accident near Blanchardville. He was pinned under a car which turned turtle, and after being rescued was paralyzed in both legs from the hips down for a time. Fortunately his hurts were not serious and he is now much better, though rather lame.

Mr. Summers had been to the plant of the Massachusetts Electric company to get some patterns for work which he was to do for the company in his blacksmith shop that evening, and was returning in the company's automobile, a Ford runabout, driven by the company's chauffeur, Perley Prance. When nearly up to the J. M. Allen place the right forward tire gave out suddenly, and when the wheel dropped to the ground the axle bent, letting the wheel crumple under the car. This dropped the corner of the car to the ground and it immediately turned turtle. The driver, Prance, was thrown clear, but Mr. Summers was pinned under the car. As it was impossible for one man to lift the auto, Prance started for help. While he was gone an auto with two men in it passed, going west, but made no offer to assist, although it was only about 5.30 and light, and the disabled car lay in the middle of the highway. Help in the shape of three men came soon however, and Mr. Summers was taken out and removed to his home on Converse street. Dr. H. C. Cheney was called and found both legs paralyzed. Treatments were immediately begun and one began to respond about 8 o'clock, and the other a little later, improvement after that being rapid.

Three County Fair.

The Three County Fair will be held at Northampton next Tuesday and Wednesday. A better exhibit than ever is promised with a good showing of horses and cattle, exciting horse racing as well as motor cycle racing. The New York Hippodrome with its varied acts of racing about the track in charriot races and many other forms will appeal to all. The vaudeville circus will prove an interesting one. Buff and Beauty, the $10,000 ponies, trained and handled by Miss Lucia Whittemore, are a treat. The grounds will be lighted by electricity on Wednesday evening, as well as all the buildings, and the public will be admitted at half price. Two bands will furnish music.

Rev. C. Lisle Percy of Charlton, Rev. William Jennings of Brimfield and Rev. William A. White of Sturbridge are holding revival meetings at the Congregational church, with marked success.

The big steam shovel belonging to the Middletown construction company working on the Grand Trunk road, it is expected will be at work in a few days after having been embedded in the mud several days across the river.

PEACOCK FEATHERS

By Clarence O. Robbins

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

"I wouldn't have the critters around," muttered Aunt Agatha as the beautiful peacocks strutted proudly along the terrace.

"Why don't you like them, Aunty?" asked Bess Long as she tossed a biscuit to one of the birds.

Mrs. Long shook her head mournfully. "It means bad luck to have 'em around," she said.

"I don't believe it," declared Bess stoutly. "I think I am lucky to own them. I always admired Hester's peacocks, and when she went to Europe and gave these to me—you know how delighted I am!"

"My Aunt Emeline had a peacock feather fan that I believe caused her death," declared Aunt Agatha dismally.

"But Aunt Emeline was nearly ninety when she died; I thought she died from the effects of a fall."

"She was carrying the fan when she fell. She always carried it, although the whole family warned her against ill-luck. She dropped the fan and stooped to pick it up. She turned dizzy and fell down the front stairs."

"But she might have been picking up her handkerchief in the same manner," protested Bess.

"She was picking up the peacock feather fan," returned Aunt Agatha obstinately, "and so we burned the fan in the kitchen stove."

"It was a pity," murmured Bess, watching the sunlight play on the gorgeous feathers of the outspread tails of her pets.

Aunt Agatha arose and shook out her cashmere skirts. "I must be getting back to the farm," she said primly. "I can't abide the screech of those birds. 'Tain't fine feathers make fine birds, nor never will!"

Bess said nothing, for she was quite accustomed to her aunt's openly expressed dislike for the peafowls, but herself a great lover of beauty in anything, she almost loved the splendid coloring of the feathers of the peacocks that strutted on the terrace.

She watched the old-fashioned figure of her country-bred aunt enter the modern automobile which Uncle Fred insisted was a necessity on the farm, and waved them a gay good-bye before she returned to her slow pacing of the terrace.

Woodmere was a beautiful estate, for Mr. Long was very rich, and this country place was his pride. The peacocks were the finishing touch to the formal garden with its clipped hedges, fancifully trimmed trees and stiff beds of glowing flowers.

"Aunt Agatha has declared against peacocks," she said to her father at dinner that night.

"Agatha nourishes a foolish vein of superstition," observed Mr. Long. "By the way, have you seen our new neighbors?"

"You mean the Allyns?"

"Yes."

"No. Nora said they were occupying the house, but of course we cannot even get a glimpse of it except from the west terrace, and I haven't walked there."

The next afternoon when the sun slanted warmly on the western terrace of the Long house the peacocks took a sudden fancy to sun themselves there.

Bess, drowsing in a hammock in an upper balcony, saw the beautiful creatures leave the terrace and drag their sweeping plumage across the grass to the brick wall that separated the two estates. It had been Mr. Long's great grief that he could not purchase the adjoining property and thus enlarge his own grounds on that side; but the Allyns had had a long lease of the property, and had never occupied it until this season.

From the upper windows of the Long house one could see quite over the high brick wall into the quiet garden of the other house.

"I do hope that the peacocks will not bring bad luck—to—old Mr. Allyn," thought Bess, as she dropped into a light slumber.

The harsh scream of one of the birds brought her to her feet wide awake and trembling.

"How dreadful—it fitted into my dream so vividly. I must go down and bring them back." Bess yawned and shook a dimpled fist at the peacocks now sitting on the brick wall and screeching outrageously.

At that moment she saw a lean hand reach up from the other side of the wall and neatly catch one of the birds by its ugly feet and drag it down out of sight. An instant later the other frightened bird also made its screeching exit only to be promptly muffled in some manner. Then followed intense silence.

Miss Long stared incredulously from the window for several moments and, seeing nothing except the tangle of the old garden beyond the wall, and hearing not a sound of her vanished birds or of their captor, she marched grimly downstairs and, obtaining a big rusty key from the gardener, she made her way through the little pine grove to a small door set in the brick wall

The lock was rusted and the key was unwieldly Bess struggles bravely until the key turned creakingly and she could pull open the closed door

It admitted her to a long, vine-covered arbor where in the green gloom a young man swung in a hammock, reading a magazine and smoking industriously

"Hello!" he exclaimed at the sudden apparition of a white-gowned maiden in his retreat, and then having slipped to his feet he stared blankly at the extremely scornful though charming countenance presented to his.

"Er—is anything the matter?" he stammered.

"Nothing—much!" retorted Bess warmly, "but I would be greatly obliged if you will return the peacocks to my garden."

"Return the what to your garden?" he asked in ludicrous dismay.

"My peacocks."

"But, I haven't seen your birds—I wouldn't steal 'em anyway—I detest the creatures," he returned frankly.

"They are very beautiful," said Bess stiffly. And then in a few words she described the scene she had witnessed while the young man rumpled his hair and looked very much as if he believed she had been dreaming.

All at once his face cleared. "By Jove, I believe it was Yang!" he shouted, and dashed out of sight.

"He is crazy," said Bess darkly. "I never was mixed up in such mysterious happenings in my life. I wonder if it can be the ill-luck that follows peacock feathers?"

She lingered uneasily near the door of the garden wall. In the distance she heard shrill protesting shrieks, and the thunder of a deep masculine voice lifted in stern reproof. Then there followed a scuffling sound on the graveled path, and presently her new acquaintance appeared, dragging the reluctant form of a Chinese cook.

In the Chinaman's grasp were the limp and lifeless forms of her precious peacocks.

"Oh!" cried Bess sharply, and bit her lip to keep back the tears.

"I can't tell you how sorry I am," said young Mr. Allyn humbly. "Yang swears by all his gods that he believed the birds were common barnyard fowls, and he was about to prepare them for my dinner. As a matter of fact I think he had a covetous eye upon the plumage. What can I do to rectify this matter?"

"It is too late now," murmured Bess. "They ought not to have been trespassing, of course. It was horrid of your man to kill them—they are so beautiful and looked so splendid trailing back and forth on the terrace."

"If you would permit me to replace them—" he was beginning, but Bess shook her head decidedly.

"I would rather not, please. Aunt Agatha said they would bring bad luck, and I believe there is something in it after all. You see they've lost their own lives to begin with."

"And Yang has lost his job," said Allyn darkly.

"Ai Yi!" wailed Yang mournfully.

A little smile dimpled the corner of the girl's mouth. "Let's change things about," she said suddenly. "If peacocks have always carried ill-luck, we will have things different. To begin with, Yang shall keep his job, and that means good luck to him, see?"

"Now that's real sporting of you, Miss Long," said Allyn heartily, and when Bess blushed beautifully he added: "I wonder what luck they will have for me—I was going to sail for Europe Wednesday, but I've changed my mind. I'm going to stay right here."

"That sounds like bad luck," remarked Bess.

"It seems like mighty good luck to me," declared Allyn.

Bess pretended not to understand, but her heart beat faster as he held open the door in the wall and she passed through to the other side.

That was only the beginning, and when October came with her golden measure of days Bess Long became the bride of Jack Allyn. His gift to her was a splendidly jeweled fan of peacock feathers at sight of which Aunt Agatha threw up mittened hands in horror.

"But peacock feathers bring such bad luck," she groaned.

"Not for us," explained Jack, meeting his bride's trusting eyes. "We have changed all that. Peacock feathers means nothing but happiness and good fortune for us."

NOTHING GAINED BY WORRY

Oppose Depressing Thoughts With Good Nature and Hustle, and Note the Results.

Sickness may come; death may be at the door; but the man who does not give up cuts down the doctor bills and cheats the undertaker altogether

Business deals may go wrong and financial disaster may threaten, but the man who takes stock in himself and remains on the job seldom enters the bankruptcy court.

Poverty may be at the door, and hard luck may bring adversity, but the man who takes his fortune with a smile will be at the dock when his ship comes in.

So, why worry?

Worry saps vitality, brings gray hairs, produces wrinkles, and it can turn a sunshiny day into a dreary one.

Without a cloud in the sky, worry can make one believe there will be a downpour any minute.

Worry discounts bills receivable, adds interest to those which are to be paid, and disturbs the scheme of things generally.

It never won a battle. It never cleared a situation. It never solved a problem.

Its antithesis, good nature, and its lifelong enemy, optimism, have many victories to their credit. Its antidote, hustle is responsible for many good things which man has enjoyed.

So again why worry?

DRAWS LINE AT INKY STAMPS

Uncle Sam Ready to Redeem Them, But They Can Not Be Used to Carry a Letter.

"How dirty can a postage stamp become and still retain its usefulness in the eyes of the government?" was a question propounded to muddle the already overworked brain of a busy man. Happening to meet a postman who was collecting mail, the man handed him a stamped letter.

"That won't go," said the postman. "Stamp's dirty."

As was his wont on special occasions, he busy man resorted to sarcasm.

"Since when," he demanded, "did the United States government become so immaculate that it requires none but unsullied stamps stuck on its letters?"

"Well, they've always been pretty particular," returned the unperturbed postman, "but there are some kinds of dirt that count for more than others. That stamp's got ink on it. Inky stamps won't go, because an ink spot could be used to disguise a canceled stamp."

"Then I suppose every stamp I happen to drop a speck of ink on is wasted?"

"Oh, no. Turn it in to the office where you bought it, and after a certain period you will get your money back.'

"How long will that take?" the man asked.

"About three months."

"I'm afraid I can't wait," said the man, and over the discredited stamp he stuck a spotless one.

Tact.

Mrs. Smith and her little daughter Margaret, aged two, were spending the summer at the lake. The mother often spoke of the excellent quality of the milk she fed the child. While out walking with little Margaret one day, Mrs. Smith happened to meet the wife of the farmer who supplied the superior milk.

"What do you say, Margaret, to the lady for bringing you such nice milk?" prompted Mrs. Smith.

"How's the cow?" asked Margaret politely.—Women's Home Companion.

Tea in Suite A

By Bruce MacDonough

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

"Evelyn, you dear thing!" Amy kissed her friend rapturously as they met in front of the tall studio building.

Miss Beers laughed as she returned the greeting with equal warmth. "What are you doing here, country mouse?" she asked.

"Visiting Genevieve Blake; she's my cousin, you know. They have just moved into the building behind you—it's the quaintest place; full of artists and writers and the most charming studios—I helped them move in yesterday, and I've only lost my way twice in the great barn of a building. Come in now and have a cup of tea."

"Some other day, Amy. You must be topsy-turvey up there now."

"No, indeed—the suite is furnished completely. All we had to do was to settle the little things around. Genevieve and Ned have gone down to see their publishers and we can have a cosy time together. I told Mary to leave some tea things—it's her afternoon out."

As she spoke, Amy led the way toward the elevators. "It's on the seventh floor," she remarked as they shot upward. "Genevieve wouldn't have any other—she's very superstitious, you know, and seven is her lucky number."

Amy continued to chatter as they left the elevator and walked down the long corridor. Her cheeks were unnaturally pink and her gray eyes wore rather a strained look — so thought Evelyn Beers, who looked in vain for some trace of the old happy, light-hearted girl Amy Gay had been before she and her husband of a few months had gone separate ways.

"Here it is—suite A—and, I declare, if that careless Mary hasn't left the door open."

Amy pushed the door wide and ushered her friend into a small inner hall. From there it was a step into a tiny reception room furnished in tan and dull blue, with a wicker tea table standing invitingly ready near an open window.

"How charming!" exclaimed Evelyn as she laid her parasol aside and drew off her gloves. Amy busied herself with the teakettle, lighting the lamp underneath with quick, nervous gestures so contrary to her usually tranquil manner that Evelyn was moved to venture upon the forbidden topic.

"I met Allen the other day," she said casually.

"Yes?" asked Allen's wife.

"He looked very down——" began Evelyn, and then stopped short at the look in Amy's face. "I beg your pardon, dear," she ended quietly, "you said you didn't care."

"I don't," declared Amy in a crisp tone.

"Let us talk of other things."

Evelyn proceeded to do so, relating at considerable length the pleasures she had enjoyed at a recent house party in the country.

"Is that where you met Allen?" demanded Amy.

"Yes."

"I thought so—he always goes down to the Delmans'." She stirred her tea thoughtfully and, without lifting the lids that drooped over her eyes, she asked in a low, embarrassed tone: "Did he ask about me?"

"Not a word. I saw very little of him, anyway; he spent most of his time on the bay with Dick Delman."

"Was Kitty Taintor there?" asked Amy.

"Yes."

"I suppose Allen liked that—he used to think a lot of Kitty before he fell in love with me."

"I tell you he didn't have much to do with any one save Dick."

"Of course, you wouldn't tell me, anyway," nodded Amy. "I remember Ben Herring once said that it wasn't human nature to resist Kitty Taintor's charms."

"Nonsense! Do give me another cup of tea, Amy, and tell me what your future plans are."

"I haven't made any," hesitated Mrs. Gay, as she peered into the teacup.

Evelyn was silent. Amy Gay had been rather a spoiled daughter and it was inevitable even to the most generous friends of the young couple that sooner later Amy's imperious temper must clash with the strong will of her husband. Allen Gay would be tender with his wife, but if he was right in his contention his will would not bend.

"Where is Allen stopping?" inquired Evelyn, after a while.

"Ned told Genevieve and she told me that Allen had removed all his things from the house and had furnished a studio in the city here. I haven't been down to Hillcrest to see if it is so—I might meet him and that would be embarrassing for us both. Some day Genevieve will go down and investigate."

"And if it is true that he has left the house for you to occupy shall you go back there?"

"No!" cried Amy sharply. "You don't know what you ask, Evelyn. Why, all the happiness of my life is bounded by the walls of Hillcrest—we planned the house together."

Evelyn looked bewildered. "But my dear, if you feel that way—why, love cannot have died and perhaps—perhaps there is a chance if you two should meet again."

But Amy's protesting hand silenced her.

"No," she said tragically, "it is all over. I told Allen I never wanted to see him again—and he as much as told me the same thing."

"And you don't want the opportunity?"

Tears rushed to Amy's eyes. "It is too late, Evelyn. He would never forgive me—but—but I shall never be happy again—without him."

"Amy Gay!" Evelyn dropped upon the floor beside her friend.

"Well?" asked Amy.

"If Allen met you half way—would you be reconciled?"

Amy shook her head dolefully. "He never will stir one step to meet me—it must be all or nothing with him. His mother told me that the Gays were always that way."

"And you cannot see your way clear to make the first advances?"

"No—no—I could not bear the thought that he might turn away from me. Let us talk about something else, Evelyn—I want to forget him—I will forget him!"

She rattled the teacups and made a fuss over pouring another cup of tea for her guest. Evelyn Beers arose and straightened her hat before a Venetian mirror. A vista of the adjoining room was reflected in the mirror and what she saw there held Evelyn petrified with wonder.

It was a long room furnished as a studio, and standing before an easel with palette and brushes in his idle fingers was Amy's husband. He wore a paint-stained blouse and as his patient brown eyes met the astonished ones of Evelyn Beers in the mirror, he calmly wiped his brushes and came forward.

Evelyn turned swiftly to Amy.

"I thought you said you didn't know where Allen was," she said accusingly.

"I don't know."

"If you will come here—and look into the next room——"

Amy was beside her in an instant. "Oh!" she cried sharply. "What does it mean?"

She looked from the familiar surroundings of the tea table to the studio furnished with her husband's treasures, saw him standing there, eager-eyed and with hands outstretched. "I must have come into the wrong apartment—It is so like Genevieve's—this little room is exactly like it in every detail—but the studio."

"This is suite A, on the sixth floor," explained Allen Gay, gravely.

"Oh, what a dreadful mistake!" cried Amy with burning cheeks, for the situation had its ludicrous side. "We have eaten your cakes and tea and——"

"I prepared them for you, Amy," he said softly, and as he came forward Evelyn Beers slipped quietly from the room. "I have always thought that some day you might come back—come home to me, and so I've always had this table ready for you—it made it seem as though you might drop in any moment." He laughed awkwardly, but a pulse throbbed in his throat just above his stiff collar.

Amy's fair face was hidden in her hands. "Oh, Allen," she sobbed, "I was too obstinate to meet you half way, and you have come all the way to meet me! Fate must have sent me here, because I would not come myself!"

As his arms closed around her once more she whispered tearfully: "I wish there was some penance I could perform to atone for my wickedness."

"We have both done penance, sweetheart," he said gravely.

Relief From Influenza.

Influenza, as is believed by the majority of medical men at present, is caused by a microbe which is present in the atmosphere, when the epidemic is raging. The surest safeguard against a disease arising from a microbe is to use antiseptics; of these carbolic acid and eucalyptus oil have been found of most use for the prevention and cure of influenza. The best way of using these is in the form of a smelling-bottle containing, in addition to carbolic and eucalyptus, camphor, charcoal and ammonia.

The Limit.

"Well, I see that that jackass Elderberry has gone and put his head in the noose again," said Hawkins.

"Worse than that," said Banta. "He's got it in the noose again."

EVOLUTION OF THE FARMER

Long Time Before Reason Taught Man to Turn From Hunting to Agriculture.

The first planter, the savage, without helpers, without tools, looking chiefly to safety from his enemy—man or beast—takes poor land. The better lands are loaded with timber, which he cannot clear; they need drainage, which he cannot attempt. He cannot plow, or fell trees, or drain the rich swamp. He is a poor creature; he scratches with a sharp stick, lives in a cave or a hutch, has no road but the trail of the moose or bear; he lives on their flesh when he can kill one, on roots and fruits when he cannot.

He falls, and is lame, he coughs, he has a stitch in his side, he has a fever and chills; when he is hungry, he cannot always kill and eat a bear—chances of war—sometimes the bear eats him. 'Tis long before he digs or plants at all, and then only a patch.

Later he learns that his planting is better than hunting; that the earth works faster for him than he can work for himself—works for him when he sleeps, when it rains, when heat overcomes him. The sunstroke, which knocks him down brings his corn up. As his family thrives, and other planters come up around him, he begins to fell trees and clear good land; and when, by and by, there is more skill, and tools and roads, the new generations are strong enough to open the lowlands, where the wash of the mountains has accumulated the best soil, which yield a hundred fold the former crops. The last lands are the best lands. It needs science and great numbers to cultivate the best lands, and in the best manner. Thus, political economy is not mean, but liberal, and on the pattern of the sun and sky. Population increases in the ratio of mortality; credit exists in the ratio of mortality.—From Emerson's "Society and Solitude."

METHODS OF INDUCING SLEEP

Relaxation of the Mind and Muscles Is the Principal Thing to Keep in Mind.

How to get to sleep, when every device fails and one feels desperate, is a matter worth solving, especially if there be simple methods that can be tried.

A well-known lecturer on hygiene, whom a very sleepless woman consulted on the subject of bad nights, gave her valuable advice, the efficacy of which she has proved.

"Stretch out your limbs to the full length, with the arms rather close to the sides of the body, and straight down," said he, "or if that is not comfortable, in any downward fashion."

"Sometimes you may find it for the moment restful to clasp the arms above the head, but on no account give way to the habit of doing so, for this position drives away the blood from the heart and sends it to the head, causing uneasy dreams, and therefore restlessness, and may even prevent sleep altogether.

"Gently close your mouth and breathe through your nose. This is highly important. Then let all the muscles of the face and neck be relaxed, and all muscles of the body, too."

Women of mature age should be as careful as girls to see that they sleep with the mouth shut, for this habit combats a tendency, growing with the years, to drop or protrude the jaw as the face is settling to sleep. A closed mouth and relaxed muscles help to keep you young looking.

Above all, sleep on your right side.

Wonderful for inducing sleep is a cup of hot milk sipped slowly in bed the very last thing.

Be a Booster.

Be a booster, not a knocker. You know, without telling, which of these two your highness, Yourself, prefers to have.

Land Sale Next Thursday.

Tract Near Shearer's Corner Divided Into Building Lots.

A land sale which should mean a generous increase in the number of residences in the wire mill district in the near future will be held next Thursday afternoon on the premises. The New England Land and Realty Company of Springfield, of which H. F. Williamson is the manager, has bought of H. D. Converse 24 acres of land lying between the road to Three Rivers and the road leading to the Thorndike road—adjacent to the Wire Mill schoolhouse—and has had it surveyed and divided into building lots. The lots are mostly 50 by 100 feet, and in desirable locations. The company does not propose to hold an auction, but will hold a presentation sale next Thursday, and at 2.30 in the afternoon promise a present to every adult present on the grounds. The company's terms are reasonable—$10 down and $2 a week until the lot is paid for. The company also agrees to give a non-forfeiture agreement, which prevents forfeiture of the lots in case of failure to make payment because of sickness or any other reasonable cause. There is also a provision for the delivery of a deed to the heirs of any person who may die before payments on the lot purchased are completed.

Trouble at Power Station.

There was another accident at the power plant of the Central Massachusetts Electric company early last Saturday morning, when a crack was discovered in the steam chest of the big engine which furnishes power for the street railway. The power was immediately shifted to another engine, and a limited amount of power was furnished during the forenoon and a part of the afternoon. Temporary repairs were begun at once, and by the aid of clamps the engine was put into commission later in the day. An attempt was made later in the week to weld the break by electricity, but the metal of the casting was too poor and started to give out in other places. The experiment was suspended and additional heavy clamps installed, and the machine is now doing service as usual.

Driver Asleep—Car Bumps Wagon.

A sleepy driver, a wandering pair of horses and an electric car formed the component parts of an accident near the Moran bridge on the Wilbraham road Sunday evening about 10.20. The team was on the trolley track going west with the driver asleep in the bottom of the wagon. The electric car was eastbound, but the motorman saw the obstruction in time to slow down before collision so that only the pole of the wagon was broken; the horses were not harmed. The outfit belonged to D. E. Marcy of Palmer.

First Meeting of Men's League.

The first meeting of the season of the Men's League will be held next Wednesday evening in the Congregational church. A supper will be served at 7 o'clock, to be followed by an entertainment and social, during which plans for the coming year will be discussed. All men are cordially invited to attend whether members or not.

The foundations for A. W. Holbrook's new block on Main street were completed early in the week, and the frame is being put up.

Several Palmer people attended the annual convention of the Three Rivers District Sunday School convention in North Brookfield yesterday.

The body of Mrs. Adeline Goff of Middleboro, a former resident, was brought to Palmer this week for burial in the Four Corners cemetery.

The Woman's Relief Corps will hold one of its enjoyable dances in Memorial Hall on Tuesday evening of next week. There will be good music, and a varied dance order.

The last opportunity to pay taxes and save interest will be next Tuesday, when Tax Collector Hawkes will be at the selectmen's room in Palmer from 2 to 5 in the afternoon.

Sidewalk Blockade Ordered Stopped.

The sub-committee of the board of selectmen—Messrs. Brainerd and McDonald—which was appointed to investigate the complaint against the Palmer Coal and Grain company for blocking the sidewalk in front of their place of business on Main street, held a conference with the company's representative this morning. The matter was full gone into on both sides. The selectmen cited the complaint and suggested different methods of obviating the trouble; the company's representative had various arguments in favor of continuing as in the past, and could not be led to see the inconvenience to the public. The selectmen finally dismissed the matter by informing the company's representative that the board would expect the nuisance abated and the blocking of the walk stopped; a reasonable time would be given the company, however, in which to work out some way of loading teams other than backing them across the sidewalk and allowing them to stand there.

Fred Reimers has opened a lunch cart on Bridge street, near the railroad bridge.

Rev. Otto S. Raspe of the Universalist church will preach in the Silver Street chapel Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

The Home Missionary society of the Congregational church met Wednesday afternoon and discussed "Non-Christian faiths in America."

There will be a dance in the opera house next Friday evening. Music will be furnished by Collins' singing orchestra of Marlboro.

Another advance has been made in the price of coal, as will be found by reference to the advertisement of the dealers in another column.

The Young Bachelors' club will hold a dance in Union hall in Thorndike next Wednesday evening. Music by Dyer's orchestra of Worcester.

A pound party will be held this evening at the Baptist parsonage on Thorndike street, this being the last of the week-day events connected with Harvest Week at this church.

Another meeting of those interested in the formation of a branch of the Order of the Sons of St. George are invited to meet at the store of Sam'l Brooks on Main street next Tuesday evening.

H. M. Parsons, manager of the Central Massachusetts Electric company, has bought a building lot on the corner of North Main and Holbrook streets, and begun the erection of a dwelling there.

The selectmen have sent out notices of a public hearing in their rooms next Thursday evening at 8 o'clock on the petition of the Warren Mills and Power company for permission to erect poles and maintain wires on the Warren road.

The Central Vermont railroad will give reduced round-trip rates to the cattle show and fair at Belchertown October 9. The rate from Palmer is 50 cents; tickets will be good going October 8 and 9, and good returning on the 10th.

The high school athletic association has elected the following officers: President, C. W. Lombard, ; vice president, George Summers; secretary, Paul Ezekiel; advisory committee, C. W. Lombard, C. H. Hobson, Raymond Wilder, William Collins, Merrick Hellyar.

The hydrant at the corner of Main and Walnut streets developed a leak recently, and the brick paving was dug up this week in order to get at the trouble. The leak was found to be at the bottom of the apparatus and irremediable, so a new one was installed.

Dr. S. B. Keith, James Summers, and Dr. A. F. Warren of Chicopee Falls will leave Sunday for a two-weeks' fishing trip in Canada. Dr. Keith's dental office will be closed the first week of his absence, but will be open the second week for appointments only.

A Pole from Wilbraham was arraigned in the district court Monday morning—it was the 23d, an unlucky date—on charges of having stolen $6.50 from one man and $5 from another. He was found guilty and paid a fine of $25, rather a large interest on his original "loan."

W. B. Whittemore, who has for a long time been the agent of the City Laundry of Springfield, has given up his agency to C. F. Orcutt of Monson. He will make calls Monday, Thursday and Saturday, or bundles may be left at Royce's restaurant on Main street.

The ladies of Palmer are invited to attend a series of six free cooking lectures in the opera house next Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, from 2.30 to 4 in the afternoon. Attendants should carry pencil, paper, fork and spoon. All are invited to attend the Monday lecture, and see what the work is and get a cook book, samples and recipes.

Not So Much to Blame.

Teacher—Why, Willie, these problems are all wrong. What is the trouble? Willie—I don'no. I worked awful hard before I could even get 'em wrong.—Judge.

Among the Churches.

"The Great Reality—study in soul consciousness," is the subject of the sermon in St. Paul's church Sunday. Y. P. C. U. meeting at 7, and the pastor will speak. No teachers' meeting Friday.

Rev. Silas P. Cook of Pittsfield, field secretary of the American Home Missionary society, will lead the Palmer Center prayer service Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock at the home of Mrs. H. W. Stimson.

Services will be held as usual at St. Mary's Mission in Masonic Hall next Sunday at 3.15 p. m. Sunday is the Festival of St. Michael and All Angels, and the music and address will be appropriate to the day. The public is cordially welcome.

At the Advent chapel Sunday there will be Sunday school at 2 p. m., preaching at 3 by the pastor, subject, "Thorough-going Christianity." Prayer meeting Wednesday evening at 7.30, subject, "The meaning of discipleship." All having no church home are invited. The pastor, Rev. J. T. Meehan, will preach in the Brimfield Advent chapel at 10.45 Sunday morning, subject, "Danger signals."

"The ultimate victory of the church" will be the subject of the morning sermon at the Congregational church Sunday morning. The Sunday school will observe "Rally Day" at 12 with a roll call and three addresses by members of the school, it being the intent to make the service inspirational and a rally for the coming year; the Christian Endeavor service at 6 will be a missionary meeting in charge of Miss Ruth Buffington; evening service at 7, when the pastor will speak on "A son of ascents."

AVOID THE MAN THAT SNEERS

Whole Existence Spoiled for Unfortunate Wife Tied to Such an Individual.

How would you like to be tied for life to a snake whose fangs slowly poisoned your blood, though it is not avowedly dangerous?

Silly question, say you?

Cleopatra with her asp—which they say is only a myth these days—is no surer of extinction than is the wholesome woman who marries a man who sneers.

So often this sneer is hidden under polished exterior. The girl does not at first realize the sting. She calls her lover critical or particular, or perhaps thinks his cynicism a sign of breeding or great intellectuality.

She begins by heeding that sneer, first in trifles such as behavior or dress; later it gets in its deadly poison on ideals and principles.

It takes a brave woman and an exceptionally strong-minded one to stand out against the cynicism of the man she loves. Unconsciously she is influenced. Before she realizes the deadly influence her whole view of life is changed. A girl of sweet nature but not too much brilliancy, married to a sneerer, becomes nothing more than a faint record of his warped vision. She may start out trusting, unsuspicious, loving, but life with the sneerer leads her to wonder if there is such a thing as honor and truth and goodness in this bad world.—Exchange.

The Oceanic Multitude.

Every multitude is in its nature like the ocean, which, though in itself incapable of motion, is excited by storms and winds. So, also, in yourselves there is calm and there are storms; but the cause and origin of your fury are entirely attributable to those who led you on; you have caught your madness by contagion.—Scipio Fricanus Major.

Tried a Writer's Courage.

All the work that Thomas Carlyle did in years was destroyed in a moment by a servant girl, who burned the manuscript of his "History of the French Revolution." When Carlyle heard of the mistake of the girl he sat down and read Marryat's novels for a week. Then he began again and rewrote the history.

Resolutions of Palmer Grange, No. 241, on Death of Horace W. Stimson.

Whereas Palmer Grange, No. 241, has been called to mourn the death of our brother, Horace W. Stimson.

Be it resolved, that we, his fellow-members, desire to put on record our appreciation of his life and service among us.

We hold grateful remembrance of Brother Stimson as a charter-member and the first Master of our Grange. He was one of our most enthusiastic and faithful workers, always attending the meetings when health permitted and giving time and service unstintedly for the good of the order and the benefit of his fellowmen.

We mourn the departure of a brother beloved, a most kind and obliging neighbor, a Christian patriot, who served in the army of his country in the time of her greatest need, and who always manifested the keenest interest in the welfare of his town and nation.

BRIMFIELD.

ANNTUAL MEETING.

Brimfield Improvement Society Makes Plans For Coming Year.

The annual meeting of the Brimfield Improvement Society was held Monday evening. These officers were elected: President, Edward B. Brown; vice president, Rev. William Jennings; secretary, M. Anna Tarbell; treasurer, William Bissell; auditor, Charles S. Tarbell; additional members of the executive committee, Lydia B. Hitchcock, John H. Noyes. The following committees were appointed: Literary committee, Mrs. Martha Streeter, Edward B. Brown, Rebecca Lincoln, George F. Kenney, Mrs. John Noyes, M. Anna Tarbell, Lydia B. Hitchcock, Margaret Dunsmore; social committee, John H. Noyes, Margaret Dunsmore, Jennie M. Sumner, Mrs. Albert Brown, Mrs. Dwight Barnes, Rev. William Jennings, Fred Bissell, Fannie E. Warren; park committee, Edward B. Brown, Charles Tarbell, Mrs. Albert Brown, M. Anna Tarbell, Fred Bissell, John Noyes, Rev. William Jennings; shade trees committee, George M. Hitchcock, Robert V. Sawin, John H. Noyes, Rev. William Jennings, Edward B. Brown, Margaret Dunsmore, Mrs. Martha Streeter; sidewalks committee, John H. Noyes, Edward Brown, Charles Tarbell, R. V. Sawin, M. Anna Tarbell, Margaret Dunsmore.

The treasurer's report showed a balance on hand of between $8 and $9. The president reported that in accordance with the vote of the last annual meeting, he had requested the insertion in the warrant for the annual town meeting of an article to see if the town would buy a snow-plow. He reported that the town voted to buy two snow-plows, for which $150 was appropriated. The executive committee in accordance with the instruction of the last meeting had taken up the matter of street lighting, and 20 new lamps have been installed by individuals, the town having taken over the care of them; the committee have also caused the lamps to be repaired at the expense of the society.

The matter of enlisting the young people of the town in village improvement was considered and a committee was chosen for promoting such a movement. This committee was requested to devise plans for raising funds for this movement and the general purposes of the society. It was also requested to consider the provision of receptacles for waste material.

Death of Former Resident.

The body of Mrs. Emily Allen Woods of Worcester, formerly of Brimfield, was brought to Brimfield for burial Tuesday. There was a brief burial service, Rev. Frances S. Child officiating. There were in attendance old friends and neighbors in Brimfield and relatives and friends from out of town Among these, besides her daughter, Mrs. Ella Woods Foskett of Worcester, were Mrs. Henry Allen of Worcester, Mrs. Levi B. Chase of Sturbridge, Mrs. Schuyler Clark of Huntington, Mrs. Balcom of Chester, Mr. and Mrs. Newell Shepard and Charles Keyes of Warren and Augustus Alexander. Mrs. Woods was a native of Brimfield and her life was spent in that town until about 30 years ago, when, after the death of her husband, she went to Worcester to make her home with her daughter, Mrs. Foskett, a principal in the public schools of Worcester. Mrs. Woods came of a well-known Brimfield family, and was the daughter of Sanders Allen, who was in the war of 1812 and was the only surviving veteran of that war at the Brimfield celebration of the country s centennial in 1876. Emily Allen was married to Joseph L. Woods, June 27, 1843, and her married life was mostly spent in the section of Brimfield known as little Rest.

Mrs. Brackett of Boston is visiting her father, Amasa Stewart.

Miss Ida Gangloff and Miss S. B. Brown of Meriden, Ct., have been spending some time at the hotel.

Michael Shanley, who has been studying at Cornell for the past two years, entered Boston University law school this week.

Rev. J. T. Meehan will preach in the Advent chapel at Brimfield Sunday morning at 10.45. The subject will be "Danger signals."

Miss Grace Stoughton of New York, who is spending a month at the home of her aunt, Mrs. Samuel Brown, in Brimfield, visited her cousins, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Stoughton in Gill last week.

Announcement has been received in town of the marriage of Miss Emma Stone, formerly of Brimfield, to J. G. Golden of North Littleton, N. H., where the newly married couple are residing.

ONCE THE HOME OF AUDUBON

Beautiful Mansion Where Great Naturalist Died Is Now a New York Tenement.

In a dismal hollow, at the foot of One Hundred and Fifty-eighth street, New York, overlooking the Hudson, is a great square house that looks as if it ought to be haunted—and perhaps it is. It was once magnificent. Its lawns were perfect and its fountains played in the sunlight. On every side of it were other handsome homes, and all the owners were friends of long standing. Now the granite wall of Riverside drive almost cuts into the roof of this fine old mansion. Italian laborers live in it and unkempt babies sprawl upon its porches. A giant apartment house towers over it and only the rays of the western sun ever reach its windows.

It is the old home of John James Audubon, the American naturalist, which he purchased in 1842 and lived in for some years with his sons Victor and John and their families. He died there in 1851 and was buried in Trinity cemetery, near the woods that formed part of his estate and which were later called Audubon park. For five or six years Aubudon park has been but a memory, only a few dilapidated homes remaining in a hollow hemmed in by modern "bureaus where people live in the drawers."

GIVE REALITY TO THE CHILD

Writers of the Nineteenth Century Responsible for Valuable Addition to Literature.

Children were only found yesterday. Before the nineteenth century the child mind and the child heart were not supposed to have enough in them to interest the majestic adult. It is true that you find a delightful baby in Homer; that in Vergil there is the prettiest glimpse of a little girl, and up and down in the classics you may meet half a dozen other pleasant shadows of children. But they are only shadows, only at the most charming pictures. They give you as much as if they were painting or sculpture—for in children's bodies art has always had interest enough—only what a child looks like, the pretty weakness, the instinct for play, the native gesture and movement. Not till the "return to nature," not till the spirit of romance moved on the waters at the end of the eighteenth century, do you find poets beginning to tell of the thought and faith in a child's mind, the mysteries of the child's heart, the fancies that are dreams and the fancies that are visions. You may think that they have gone too far, that they read into childhood the laborious philosophizing and sometimes the labored sentimentality of the adult. But no one who loves children will deny that the best of the children in nineteenth century books have a far richer reality, a far fuller life than any that were born in earlier words. And some of the best are in Dickens.

United Through Literature.

More than one literary man owes a happy marriage to his books. Long before she first met her future husband had Elizabeth Barrett felt herself drawn toward the author of "Bells and Pomegranates," of which she makes the hero of "Lady Geraldine's Courtship" say: "Some Pomegranate of Browning's, which, if cut deep down the middle, shows the heart within blood-tinctured of a veined humanity." Nor was Browning insensible to the charm of the lady's work, so that the inevitable, thugh delayed, meeting, resulted in a love which, overcoming all obstacles, resulted in the happiest of unions.

History as She's Told.

When Jean Leon Gerome's painting of the dead Caesar was on exhibition in the Corcoran gallery a Chicago visitor heard this conversation between a woman and her ten-year-old son, who were looking at the stricken Caesar lying at the foot of Pompey's statue while the conspirators were disappearing in the distance.

"Mamma," said the boy, "what is the matter with the man?"

"When you get older," answered the mother, "you will read all about it in history. The man is Julius Caesar. He has just been shot by Mark Anthony."

THREE RIVERS.

GEER—JENKS.

Pretty Wedding at Home of Bride's Parents Wednesday.

A pretty home wedding took place Wednesday afternoon at 3 o'clock at Woodland cottage, on the Belchertown road, when Mabel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Tyler Geer, was united in marriage to Albert Roscoe Jenks. Rev. Charles B. McDuffee performed the ceremony in the presence of about 75 friends and relatives.

The house was prettily decorated for the occasion; a different color scheme carried out in each room. The room in which the ceremony was performed was decorated in gold and white, and the bridal couple stood in front of a screen of hemlock on which a monogram of their initials, G. J., was outlined in golden-rod. Miss Lucy Geer, a cousin of the bride, presided at the piano and played the prelude from "Lohengrin." The wedding march by Mendelssohn was played as the bridal party entered and "O Promise Me" during the ceremony. The bride entered on the arm of her father. She was attended by her sister, Alice. Gaston E. Labouteley of Lynn acted as best man, and the ushers were Everett A. Geer of Three Rivers, a cousin of the bride, and Emery S. Wilbur of Ipswich.

The bride was attired in a gown of white Persian lawn, and she carried a bouquet of bride roses and maiden-hair ferns. The bridesmaid wore a dress of pale blue habutai silk and carried a bouquet of Enchantress carnations.

A reception was held after the ceremony and refreshments were served. The couple left in an automobile in the early evening and will make their home in Ipswich.

The groom's gift to the best man was a set of gold cuff links, and to the ushers gold stick-pins. The bride's gift to the maid of honor was a gold bracelet and to the pianist a gold belt set with sapphires and pearls. The bridal gifts were numerous and useful, consisting of cut glass, linen and silver. Several gold pieces were also received. The bride is a native of Belchertown and received her education at the Palmer high school and Northfield seminary. The groom is a graduate of Massachusetts agricultural college at Amherst and was connected with the extension work last year, and is now manager of the fruit department of the Turner Hill farm on the estate of C. G. Rice of Ipswich.

The Gates of Palmer Are Now Open

For a number of years Palmer has been shut off to the world of prosperity for the simple reason that the heavy gate opening to this great Railroad Center has been closed, and within a short time ago there was no help from this town to push this gate open. But thanks to the progressiveness of a few of Palmer's enterprising citizens, and with a little more co-operation they have put their shoulders to the gate and pushed it open. So that now our little city has taken on the boom that should have showed itself years ago.

GREAT RAILROAD CENTER

When you stop to think that Palmer is the greatest railroad centre in the whole state of Massachusetts, that it offers the best railroad facilities and for factory sites with railroad frontage it is unsurpassed.

All it lacks now, and in fact the only thing that held the town back was the problem to house families here and it seems to be about the same to-day.

It is true that a number of new houses under way of construction will help some, but they are not sufficient, for we can use 50 new houses right here to-day. Therefore, I make this appeal to Builders and Investors to come here to Palmer and look it over, talk with anyone you meet and ask them what the chances are for investment here.

WEST PALMER PARK

I have cut up 24 acres of land into building lots, most of them which are 50x100 feet, and I expect that on this particular tract of land that we will have at least 50 new homes within one year and a half.

The lots will be sold entirely at private sale, as we do not believe in auction methods, and will be sold on very easy terms.

OUR PRESENTATION DAY

On Thursday, October 3, 1912, weather permitting, we will have what we term our Presentation Sale.

I have got a number hundred dollars' worth of useful merchandise that I will give away on that day. Every adult who visits the property is sure to get a present. No presents to children.

WE WANT TO GET ACQUAINTED

We do this simply to acquaint you with the property, we want you to come and see it and we want to pay you for doing it, whether you have bought a lot or not or whether you intend to buy a lot, makes no difference to us, you will get your present just the same.

FREE PROTECTION IN CASE OF DEATH

It is simple justice that every man should give his family some protection in case of death. To this end we agree with every person who purchases a lot from us and makes a first payment of not less than ten per cent of the purchase price, and who is in good health at the time of the purchase, if death should occur at any time after second payment has been made, so long as payments are made regularly when due, we will deed the lot to his or her heirs or personal representative, without further payment, just as though we had received payment in full; or said legal heirs or personal representative shall be refunded the amount paid with interest at the rate of six per cent per annum.

NON-FORFEITURE AGREEMENT

We give a contract agreeing not to forfeit lot because of lapsed payments, if the inability to pay is due to loss of employment, caused by illness, or any other reasonable cause, but to carry the amount in good standing as long as this contract exists, providing simple interest is paid on accounts in arrears. We do not desire to profit from forfeiture, but on the other hand will exercise the utmost leniency with our customers.

IMPROVEMENTS

A large sum will be expended in beautifying and improving this property, thereby making it one of the most desirable residential places in this vicinity. It will be attractive and thoroughly high-class in every respect.

These Improvements Are Made Entirely Without Cost to the Purchaser.

Sir Walter's Good Fortune.

Sir Walter Raleigh had called to take a cup of tea with Queen Elizabeth.

"It was very good of you, Sir Walter," said her majesty, smiling sweetly upon the gallant knight, "to ruin your cloak the other day so that my feet should not be wet by that horrid puddle. May I not instruct my lord high treasurer to reimburse you for it?"

"Don't mention it, your majesty," replied Raleigh. "It only cost two and six and I have already sold it to an American collector for £8,000."—Lippincott's.

Handy Book Marker.

Nothing hurts a book more, especially a new book, than laying it down open to keep the place. Instead of doing that, if you are liable to interruption in your reading get a stout rubber band and cover it with ribbon, gathered full enough to permit the band's stretching. Then when you need to lay it down it takes hardly a second to stretch the band and slip beneath it the pages read. Upon taking it up again you find your place automatically, moreover, the book mark cannot get lost. Take care to have the band strong enough to hold and big enough not to mar the end of the cover.

Correct Answer.

Don't take our word for it.

Don't depend on a stranger's statement.

Read Palmer endorsement.

Read the statements of Palmer citizens.

And decide for yourself.

Here is one case of it:

Mrs. Joseph Fisher, 298 S. Main St., Palmer, Mass., says: "I was subject to dizzy and nervous spells and often my back and head ached intensely, showing that my kidneys were disordered. I also had difficulty with the kidney secretions. Doan's Kidney Pills, which I obtained at Lynde & Gould's Drug Store (now J. P. Lynde's Drug Store), soon restored me to good health, and at that time I publicly endorsed them. I take pleasure at the present time in confirming my former statement."

Satan's Pupil.

The wildcat of the north woods, red lynx, bay lynx, bobcat, or however we may elect to call him, has been described as a bundle of live wires actuated by the spirit of Satan Running up to over 40 pounds in weight, he is as big as his finer-furred consin, the tufted-eared Canada lynx, far handsomer and much more savage. I have seen them fight dogs desperately, and a full-grown wildcat will play havoc with a flock of sheep. But no cat has ever been known to attack man except in the effort to get away when cornered. Some time ago I found a man in Maine willing to swear before a notary that a bobcat had attacked him without provocation, but I concluded to abide by the advice of Manly Hardy, gone from us now, who wrote me that a man who would swear to anything of the kind was a born liar anyhow.—Edward Breck, in Outing.

About the Camel.

In a school in the South of Ireland a schoolboy of tender years is said to have produced the following essay on the camel:

"The cannimal is a sheep of the desert. It is called a backteria because it has a hump on its back. The cannimal is very patient, and will lie down and die without a groan, but when it is angry it gets its back up, which is called taking the hump. The shepherds of cannimals is called Arabs. When they live in towns they are called street Arabs. When the cannimal goes on a journey it drinks as much as it can to last for many days. Such animals are called accquiducks. Those that cannot carry enough are called inebriates."

Successful Man's Policy.

I have tried to make all my acts and commercial moves the result of definite consideration and sound judgment. There were never any great ventures or risks. I practiced honest, slow-growing business methods, and tried to back them with energy and good system.—Marshall Field.

Box Social This Evening.

A box social will be held to-night in the vestry of the M. E. church. The young ladies will each prepare a lunch basket, which will be sold to a young man. Ice cream will be for sale. There will also be an entertainment, consisting of a piano duet by Miss Myrtle McVickar and Mrs. George Sutherland, piano solos by Miss Gladys Morse and Miss Myrtle McVickar, violin solos by Herbert Canterbury, and readings by Miss Marion Albro. The following tableaux will be given: "The nurse," Miss Annie Hayes; "The bride," Miss Myrtle McVickar; "The colonial girl," Miss Gladys Morse; "The beach girl," Miss Marion Albro; "The golf girl," Miss Pearl Lamb; "The summer girl," Miss Violet Canterbury; "The Indian girls," Vertine Marsan and Gladys Morse; "The yachting girl," Miss Irene Marsan; "America," Mrs. G. H. Sutherland. The social is being given under the auspices of the Epworth League, and it is hoped that a good number will be present.

Speed the Parting Guests.

A farewell party was given Friday evening to the Epworth League by Miss Myrtle McVickar at her home in honor of three members, Misses Mary E., Anna and Dora Heys, who leave with their mother soon for Accrington, England, where they will make their home for the present. They have made their home here for several years with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Heys. Mr. Heys will not accompany them, but will retain his position in Chicopee for the present. The evening was pleasantly spent in singing and in playing games. Ice cream and cookies were served by Miss McVickar. Those present were Rev. and Mrs. G. H. Sutherland, William McVickar, Misses Vertene, Irene and Yolande Marsan, Marion Albro, Gladys Morse, Mary, Annie and Dora Heys, Bernice Faunce, Pearl Lamb, Myrtle McVickar, and Dorothea McVickar.

Death of Thomas Ferriter.

The funeral of Thomas Ferriter was held in St. Bartholomew's church Thursday morning, Rev. Thomas Kennedy officiating. Mr. Ferriter, for many years a resident of South Belchertown, died at his home in that part of the village early Tuesday evening as a result of old age. Mr. Ferriter leaves two daughters, Misses Margaret and Bridget in Springfield, and a third daughter, who is married, lives in Westfield.

Miss Mary Heys is spending the week with friends in Lowell.

REMEMBER THE LOVED ONES

Pathetic Religious Ceremony That Is Observed by People of the Isle of Ushant.

In the Island of Ushant—the "Isle of Fear"—there exists a custom probably unknown in any other part of Christendom. When a native dies abroad or is lost at sea, his relatives have a small wax cross made, some seven inches long. This is solemnly taken to the church and presented to the priest, who deposits it in a box, shaped like a cinerary urn, that hangs on the south side of the altar of St. Joseph. This is called the "Pro Ella" cross, and is supposed to stand for the spirit of the dead. These memorial symbols are allowed to accumulate in the box till the next church mission comes round. As these revival services are held only once in every four or five years, the number of crosses may be very considerable. A day is then set apart for their solemn interment. It is the great day, the climax of the mission. The church is draped in black and crowded with a mourning congregation, many of whom break out into loud wailing. The crosses are brought from their urn in solemn procession, a requiem mass is said over them, and then they are carried to the churchyard, the iron door of the tomb is unlocked, and they are interred with full honors. Throughout the year hardly a day passes but some pious soul comes to sprinkle the tomb with holy water and say a prayer before it for the dead.—Wide World Magazine.

Mourn for the Bride.

In Japan, land of flowers, they hold funeral services at the home of the bride's parents the night she is married. This is to show that the young lady is dead to her father and mother.

Compels Honesty of Chauffeurs.

A device by which a passenger, from any point within an automobile, can regulate its speed, without the knowledge of the chauffeur, has been invented in Germany.

YOUNG WIFE SAVED FROM HOSPITAL

Tells How Sick She Was And What Saved Her From An Operation.

Upper Sandusky, Ohio.—"Three years ago I was married and went to housekeeping. I was not feeling well and could hardly drag myself along. I had such tired feelings, my back ached, my sides ached, I had bladder trouble awfully bad, and I could not eat or sleep. I had headaches, too, and became almost a nervous wreck. My doctor told me to go to a hospital. I did not like that idea very well, so, when I saw your advertisement in a paper, I wrote to you for advice, and have done as you told me. I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills, and now I have my health.

"If sick and ailing women would only know enough to take your medicine, they would get relief."—Mrs. BENJ. H. STANSBERY, Route 6, Box 18, Upper Sandusky, Ohio.
